Now, I desire to call the attention of the honorable Senator to this question in another aspect. I maintain that all sanitary regulations touching the health of the people of this country within the jurisdictional limits of the several States are matters of police regulation, using that term in its strict and legal sense. Anything of that kind is a police regulation; it has to do simply with the health of the people, and it belongs to the States exclusively; and there is not a single instance in the history of this country where the Government of the United States has attempted to trench upon it; but in numerous instances the courts have settled that the police regulations of the States are independent of the General Government and exclusively within the power of the States, and that under the power to regulate commerce the Government of the United States has no authority whatever to interfere with them. Now, what is quarantine?

Mr. CONNESS. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. MORRILL. Certainly.

Mr. CONNESS. I do not propose speaking on this subject, but I desire to ask the Senator from Maine, if he denies all power on the part of the Government of the United States over this subject, how he reconciles the statute of 1799, which has been quoted by the Senator from Massachusetts, which gave a joint power. I should like to hear the Senator upon the exercise of that joint power.

Mr. MORRILL. The answer to that suggestion is that the statute does not propose to give a joint power. If the Senator will look at that statute he will find that the power of the United States is subordinated to the power of the States. It simply authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to do an act in cooperation with the States, and that implies no joint power, but it implies a subordinated power.

Mr. SUMNER. It is a concurrent power.

Mr. MORRILL. No, not a concurrent power. It is in aid of the States. Anybody can aid. That is not an assumption of power.

Mr. SUMNER. That is a concurrence.

Mr. MORRILL. It is simply in aid of the States.

Mr. CONNESS. Now, how may a party having no right to exercise a power aid in that power, or perform a part of it rightfully, when it has not the right or the power to perform the whole of it? I should like to hear the Senator on that point.

Mr. MORRILL. I think the answer to that is quite obvious, that the Government of the United States did not claim the right to exercise the power concurrently. It might offer to do an act which might prove to be acceptable to the State. That would not be offensive, and that was precisely the character of the act of 1799, as I understand it.

Now, what I am undertaking to demonstrate is that the quarantine power which the States exercise is a police power, belongs exclusively to the States, has been so regarded from the earliest period. What is a quarantine? What is the right of quarantine or the power of quarantine? It is simply to say that a vessel on its way to a particular port, destined to a particular port, must not land, must tarry at a given point for a certain period of time, until an opportunity has been given to the local authorities to inspect the condition of the vessel, to see whether it is dangerous to the public health for it to land. That is the power. That power is internal; that power is police; that power is entirely independent of the commercial power and has so been settled in repeated instances. In the license cases that question was elaborated at very great length and it was settled distinctly that the police power existed independent of the power to regulate commerce, and was exclusively in the States.

Now let me call the attention of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts as to the condition of affairs in his own harbor. Quarantine regulations exist in the harbor of Boston by the power of the city. Did anybody ever question it? The Supreme Court of the United States have said they properly exist and that they are exclusively within the power of the State government, and the General Government, under its power of commercial regulation, has no right to interfere with them. Here is a circular in which the surgeon general of that State says:

"By the general statutes of this Commonwealth.

quarantine regulations and other matters relating to the public health are solely under the direction and control of the various municipalities of the State."

That is true of Boston, and true of every other city in the country where these regulations have been made. Now, here is a more elaborate statement of the same principle in the regulations of the Board of Health of the city of New York, where they say:

"It shall be the duty of the said board to give all information that may be reasonably requested respecting any threatened danger to the public health to the health officer of the port of New York and to the commissioners of quarantine of said port, who shall give like information," &c.

Showing that under the regulation of the States the very powers which are claimed to be exercised by this measure and to be conferred upon the Secretaries of War, Navy, and the Treasury, are exercised and have been exercised from the earliest period by the authorities of the States, and are said to have been properly exercised by the decisions to which I have referred.

If anything could make this more plain, and show, I will not say the absurdity, but the questionable propriety of this power, it is the second clause of the first section:

2. That he shall also enforce the establishment of sanitary cordons.

I ask my honorable friend from Massachusetts if he will undertake to say that the establishment of sanitary cordons is the exercise of a commercial power.

Mr. SUMNER. Under the circumstances, clearly yes.

Mr. MORRILL. Well, what is a sanitary cordon? What is the literal definition of it? Has it anything on earth to do with commerce? What is the establishment of a sanitary cordon? The literal meaning of it is a military post. That is the definition. It is a post established by the military power of the Government for sanitary purposes.

Mr. SUMNER. "Sanitary cordon" is a sanitary line.

Mr. MORRILL. Drawn by whom?

Mr. SUMNER. Drawn by the Government.

Mr. MORRILL. Drawn by the military authority of the Government and maintained by the military power of the Government.

Mr. SUMNER. A sanitary cordon under this joint resolution would be a line drawn according to the requirements of this resolution. It would not be under the military power of the Government, but under the commercial power attaching to passengers.

Mr. MORRILL. A military cordon is established on the frontier by the military power of the Government to prevent the intercommunication of the people one way and the other for fear of contagion. That is the definition of it; that is the interpretation, and that is the history of it. Now, is there commerce in that? Does that invoke the commercial power? It is simply police; it is an establishment on the frontier of a State for the protection of the public health. That is what it is; nothing more nor less. It comes within the police power, and that police power is exclusively in the States.

Mr. HOWE. Will my friend allow me to ask him whether such a regulation, such a line as that in the interior of a State, would not be just as much a sanitary cordon as one drawn on the frontier?

Mr. MORRILL. To prevent intercommunication between subordinate communities?

Mr. HOWE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRILL. I should say it would.

Mr. HOWE. I understood you to speak of the frontier.

Mr. MORRILL. I did not mean frontiers of independent nations, but between any distinctive communities. But would the Senator from Wisconsin, or the Senator from Massachusetts say that the General Government had a right to establish sanitary cordons throughout the States, between the several counties, towns, and cities? That is the principle of this bill. That is so purely local and so purely within the police regulations of the States that I hardly think the argument would be attempted to be pushed so far. I do not wish to say any more about it.

Mr. HOWE. I am not going to argue this question at any length. I care but very little whether this bill pass or not. I do not think it a very important matter whether the United States assume the exercise of the power which is asserted in this bill or not at the present juncture. I think it of immense importance that the United States should not admit that they have not the power which is asserted here. The newspapers say this morning that two vessels in the harbor of New York are lying at anchor under the quarantine regulations of that city with cholera on board. Those two vessels are not said to be American vessels, but I assume that they are stamped with the national authority, sailing the seas by the national permission, bearing the national flag. They have been brought to anchor, not in the port to which they were destined and where they wish to unload, but short of that; and the question which I wish should not be lost sight of is, where resides the authority to bring those two national ships to anchor, to stop them on their route short of their point of destination?

My friend from Maine says it is in the city of New York if they are bound to New York, or it is in the State of New York if they are bound to a harbor in New York. This bill asserts, I think in terms, that it is in the nation, that by no authority short of that can they rightfully be stopped. That we have conceded the exercise of this power for sanitary purposes to the different municipalities or the different States, from the foundation of the Government, I suspect is true. I do not know that there has been any departure from it. The nation has not seen fit to assume the responsibility of taking this sanitary interest under its care, has permitted the exercise of this power to the several States and municipalities; but that the Constitution leaves it to them, I do not believe, Mr. President, at all. That the Constitution does not give it to us, to the national authority, I never can be made to concede. It is the exercise of a very high prerogative, striking at the very freedom of all our commerce, for the power which can stop one of your vessels on her route a hundred feet from the dock to which she is destined and where she wants to unload—wherever you find the power that can do that, you find the power that can arrest every one of the ships belonging to your commerce. If you say that it is in the several States, your power to regulate commerce, for which as much as for anything you formed this Government, is the merest bagatelle in the world; it is worth nothing.

As I said before, I do not care whether we assume the responsibility now at this juncture or not. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. COWAN] told us the other day, as if with authority, that it is entirely useless, that this disease, cholera, is not contagious, is not infectious, cannot be fenced up, and it is useless to attempt it. I do not know how that is. I am not a medical man. I do not know but that medical authorities are disagreed upon it; I believe they are. This proposition says nothing more than that the several officers named shall be a board of commissioners to take the control of this matter. If they are instructed or shall become satisfied that this disease is not contagious, is not infectious, is not portable, that there is no danger to be apprehended from it growing out of our commercial relations with other countries, then I think we ought in the interests of our commerce to say to the municipal authorities of New York and of every other city, "You must not stop the national ships on the highways, let them come to their regular docks, and let them be discharged in the due course of their business." We ought to relieve them from that embarrassment. We ought to make up our minds to one of two things, either that this is a national enemy, to be guarded against, to be shut out, or that it is not a national enemy, and therefore relieve our commerce from all disabilities and all burdens by reason of it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hold in my hand a very able document prepared by distinguished physicians and surgeons who have had great experience in regard to the cholera, from which I shall merely read an extract or two, as I do not wish to occupy the time of the Senate, my desire being to get a vote. In this paper they give a number of instances showing the character of the disease. Let me read from it:

"The ship Swanton, from Havre, arrived at New Orleans on the 11th of December, 1848, nine days after the New York arrived at Staten Island, with two hundred and eighty emigrants on board. Thirteen passengers had died with cholera on the passage. No quarantine was instituted, and the ship came to the wharf. The day after the arrival of the passengers in the city the cholera broke out and became epidemic.

"The Atlanta, from Havre, arrived at New York on the 22d of November last, with a large number of German emigrants; many had died of cholera on the passage. The disease was confined exclusively to the steerage passengers. A strict quarantine prevented the introduction of the disease into the city.

"It will be recollected that the steamship England put into Halifax on the 9th of last month with some twelve hundred passengers and a crew of one hundred men, with a large number of German passengers who had come from places infected with cholera; one hundred and sixty cases of the disease occurred on board, and fifty deaths during the passage. Owing to strict quarantine at Quebec, the disease was checked there, and the ship is now at quarantine in New York, the passengers having been landed after undergoing the usual quarantine."

The cholera has been in New York harbor since the 2d day of last November, six months and a half, all the time, and it has never yet landed. There was one case of what was called sporadic cholera, produced by circumstances connected with that particular case, but not a single case of Asiatic cholera has landed. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] brought a very important fact to the knowledge of the Senate the other day in his remarks, and that was that by a strict quarantine in the Italian ports the cholera passed by the whole of Italy, and was finally introduced into Italy across the Alps from France, where the quarantine was not so strict.

It is an old saying that those who know nothing fear nothing. I happen to know just enough of cholera to desire to keep it down in New York bay if we can. I do not know that quarantine regulations will keep it there, but having kept it there for six months and fourteen days I hope they may keep it there for six months and fourteen days longer.

The object of this measure is to establish a uniform system of quarantine. The cholera has been held in New York harbor by the New York quarantine laws. There are no quarantine laws in New Jersey, and it could be landed to-morrow morning, and spread through New Jersey, and brought into New York through Jersey City but for the care and vigilance of the New York quarantine officers. In Boston there are no quarantine laws, and the Bostonians have sent a circular asking shippers to bring their ships to Boston because there are no quarantine laws there, and no trammels upon commerce. It is well known to all that it is utterly useless to enforce a strict quarantine in New York and leave all the adjacent ports open. If the cholera were to land in Boston it could be transported to New York in eight hours. If it were to land in Jersey City it could be transported there in thirty minutes.

The object of this measure, as I have said, is to establish a uniform system of quarantine, and I simply ask for a vote upon it. I believe that if the disease has been kept in New York harbor for six months and fourteen days without landing, it may, under a rigid system of quarantine, be kept there longer and perhaps forever. But, sir, suppose through our non-action, or through our injudicious action, the cholera should land and a hundred thousand lives be lost, I certainly should feel that there was a weight of responsibility and of guilt resting upon me if I did not press this measure for favorable action by the Senate. I now simply ask that a vote may be taken and the proposition adopted.

As to the question of the constitutional right and power of this Government in the premises, while I do not question the sincerity of my friend from Maine and others who see a constitutional obstacle to passing a railroad or a quarantine bill, I have no such difficulties and apprehensions as they seem to entertain. I do not think we shall injure the Constitution if we keep out the cholera, and I hope the Senate will pass the resolution in the form proposed by the Committee on Commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has received a communication from a very eminent gentleman of the medical faculty on this subject, which, if there be no objection, the Chair will have read.

The Secretary read it as follows:

NEW YORK, May 11, 1866.

DEAR SIR: In the reported proceedings of the Senate I have noticed the recent introduction of a joint resolution authorizing the establishment by the Secretaries of War, the Navy and the Treasury, of a uniform system of quarantine to avoid the introduction of Asiatic cholera through our ports of entry. I respectfully ask permission to suggest a modification of, or an addition to, the proposed measure, in order to reach the root of the evil, and prevent the occurrence of the disease in question on board passenger ships, whereby not only the necessity of subjecting them to quarantine may be greatly diminished, but likewise the lives of the passengers saved.

It is believed to be the unanimous opinion of those members of the medical profession on both sides of the Atlantic who have studied the habitudes of this disease that the circumstances which favor its development are peculiar and well understood, and that to a great degree they are identical with those provocative of typhus fever, (known as ship fever when occurring at sea,) and that both these diseases are as clearly preventable under the rigid enforcement of the laws of hygiene as is small-pox by vaccination.

Numerous instances might be cited to prove that this result is attainable, but I will here refer to but one fact to show how completely dependent is the sanitary condition of emigrant passengers upon the supervision and conduct of the ship's officers. By a report on quarantine made to the British Parliament by Lords Carlisle and Ashby, and two of England's most eminent sanitarians, Edwin Chadwick and Dr. Southwood Smith, we learn that under the system of convict transportation to New South Wales, which prevailed prior to 1801, the contractors were paid for each passenger embarked on board their ships. It being thus their interest to receive the largest possible number, the passengers were admitted without reference to their comfort or health, and the neglect of their sanitary necessities produced a mortality of from thirty-three to fifty per cent. Yet we are told there was no omission palpable to common observation, or that could be distinctly proved as matter of crimination to which responsibility might be attached. The attention of the authorities being at length aroused to the subject, an alteration was made in the terms of the contract, by which payment was to be made only for those landed alive, instead of for all those embarked.

The effect of this change was the immediate employment of competent men and the thorough application of suitable hygienic measures, whereby the mortality was reduced to one and a half per cent.

The two emigrant vessels recently arrived at this port, namely, the Virginia and England, presented equally striking illustrations of the evil effects of the neglect of sanitary measures. With their great overcrowding and disregard of ventilation, disinfection, and cleanliness, ship fever or cholera was the inevitable consequence, which no sensible person can doubt might have been wholly avoided by the exercise of proper precautions, to the saving of hundreds of lives, as well as obviating the necessity of quarantine.

To prevent, therefore, the introduction of cholera by vessels, the vessels themselves and all their contents need but to be kept under the constant supervision and control of sanitary law.

Further information on this grave topic with regard to the necessities of the case and the means of relief may be had by consulting the report of the select committee of the Senate on "the sickness and mortality on board emigrant ships," Thirty-Third Congress, first session, No. 386, August 2, 1854.

It is greatly to be regretted that in the discussions relating to and the enactment of laws for the suppression of epidemics by quarantine, &c., too little attention is given to that most valuable feature of sanitary science and practice, the prevention of disease. I would therefore respectfully suggest that in the resolution referred to, power should be given to enforce such regulations on all passenger vessels as may be deemed essential to this important end.

Very respectfully,

JOHN H. GRISCOM, M. D.

Hon. LA FAYETTE S. FOSTER,
President of the United States Senate.

P. S. I observe by this morning's paper the probability of the failure of the joint resolution. In that event it is earnestly to be hoped that some measure may be adopted by Government, independently of quarantine, for the enforcement of sanitary regulations on shipboard, it being demanded by science, by humanity, and by the best interests of the country. Recent improvements in all matters pertaining thereto will greatly facilitate their application.

JOHN H. GRISCOM.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SUMNER] to the amendment reported by the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. GRIMES. What is the amendment to the amendment? I should like to hear it read.

The Secretary read the amendment to the amendment, which was in line three of the amendment of the committee, to strike out the word "War" and insert "the Treasury;" in line four, to strike out the words "the Navy" and insert "War;" and in line five to strike out the words "Treasury, whose concurrent action shall be directed by the Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy," and insert "Navy, under the direction of the President of the United States;" so that the amendment will read:

That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, with the cooperation of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, under the direction of the President of the United States, to adopt an efficient and uniform system of quarantine against the introduction into this country of the Asiatic cholera through its ports of entry whenever the same may be threatened by the prevalence of said disease in countries having direct commercial intercourse with the United States.

2. That he shall also enforce the establishment of sanitary cordons to prevent the spread of said disease from infected districts adjacent to or within the limits of the United States.

3. That said Secretaries are hereby authorized to use the means at their command to carry out the foregoing provisions.

4. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of State to open a correspondence with the foreign Powers whose proximity to the United States will endanger the introduction of Asiatic cholera into this country through their ports and territory, soliciting their cooperation with this Government in such efforts to prevent the introduction and spread of said disease: Provided, That this resolution shall continue in force from its passage until the second Monday in December, A. D. 1866, and no longer.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A verbal amendment was proposed by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] striking out the word "he" in the twelfth line and inserting "they," to make the language correct, so that it will read, "that they shall also enforce the establishment of sanitary cordons," &c. That correction will be made if there be no objection. The question now is on the amendment as amended.

Mr. MORRILL. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HARRIS. I move further to amend the amendment by striking out in line three the words "it shall be the duty of" and inserting after the word "Treasury" in the same line the words "shall be authorized in aid of the State or municipal authorities;" so that it will read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury shall be authorized, in aid of the State or municipal authorities, with the cooperation of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, under the direction of the President of the United States, to adopt an efficient and uniform system of quarantine, &c.

It will be perceived that the object of my amendment is, instead of authorizing directly these Federal authorities to take this whole matter into their hands to the exclusion of the State authorities, to provide that they shall act in aid of them and in cooperation with them. It is, in effect, authorizing the General Government, as it was in the resolution that came from the House of Representatives, to aid the State and municipal authorities in enforcing their quarantine.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will ask the Senator if he understands his amendment to authorize them to act where the State or municipal authorities do not act. The object of the committee's amendment is to enable them to act where no action is taken by the State or municipal authorities. Unless the Senator's amendment gives that power, it does not effect the object contemplated in this measure. I hope the amendment will not be adopted unless it does give that power. The expectation is that they will act in aid of the municipal authorities, but we wish to give them the power to act where the municipal authorities fail to act.

Mr. HARRIS. I prefer the original resolution as it came from the House of Representatives, and the amendment that I have offered substantially accomplishes the same thing. If Senators have a preference for the proposition reported by the Committee on Commerce, I desire to insert this feature of the original resolution in the committee's amendment. My preference would be to vote down their amendment and adopt the resolution as it came from the House.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope that will not be done.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Commerce, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. HENDERSON. Before the vote is taken I wish to say that in voting against this amendment of the committee I do not desire to negative the power of Congress on this subject. I have heard no complaint against State laws on the subject of quarantine in this discussion, and I think it altogether likely that the quarantine regulations now established by the different States and the different cities are much better than would be established in the course of any short time under this act of Congress. The difficulty will be that, needing the quarantine immediately, in overthrowing those very excellent quarantine regulations at New York and other points, we may, in the conflict of jurisdiction, fail to get any good quarantine regulations at all. I have heard no complaint against those regulations. Gentlemen have urged none that amount to anything. If I understand it properly, the regulations of New York are perhaps superior to any regulations ever established in this country. They are the most perfect that can now be established; and inasmuch as we need the benefit and advantage of an establishment of this character at present, and will need it for the next few months, I think it better not to interfere with it. In case of the passage of the amendment I am very well assured that we shall have a conflict in jurisdiction. It is not necessary to bring about that conflict if the States are doing their duty; and it is reasonable to suppose that they will not do their duty? In the protection of their own citizens against the ravages of this disease they will necessarily have to protect the interior of the country.

Within the last few minutes I have referred to the legislation of Congress on this subject. In 1796 Congress passed the following act:

"That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to direct the revenue officers and the officers commanding forts and revenue-cutters to aid in the execution of quarantine, and also in the execution of the health laws of the States, respectively, in such manner as may to him appear necessary."

Afterward, in 1799, a similar act was passed. The officers of the United States were directed simply to aid the officers of the States and to carry out the quarantine regulations adopted by them. In 1832, when we were threatened with the cholera, Congress passed another act, not assuming any jurisdiction over the subject at all, but carrying out the views entertained in 1796 and also in 1799. That act, passed on the 13th of July, 1832, is in the following words:

"That if in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury the revenue-cutters, revenue-boats, or revenue officers, employed or authorized to be employed for the purposes of the revenue, should be sufficient to aid in the execution of the quarantine and health laws of any State or the regulations made pursuant thereto, the said Secretary may cause to be employed such additional revenue-boats and revenue officers as he may deem necessary for that purpose, the said revenue-boats to be of such size and description as he may see proper. This act to continue in force until the 4th of March, 1833."

That was in 1832, when surely we were threatened much more imminently with the ravages of this disease than we now are.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri if the quarantine regulations of 1832 proved perfectly satisfactory to him and efficacious in preventing the landing and spread of the cholera.

Mr. HENDERSON. That was rather before my day. I do not like to confess that I know much about the quarantine regulations of that time. But, sir, I have failed to find any legislation of Congress on this subject except in aid of the State laws in 1832 and 1833. All the legislation of Congress from the origin of the Government down to the present time, so far as I have been able to find, has been simply in aid of State laws, and even when we were threatened with the worst forms of disease, cholera, yellow fever, and other diseases, Congress has never undertaken to interfere with the State regulations. The Senator will find no legislation assuming jurisdiction over this subject. I do not pretend to say that Congress has not the power. In fact, like the Senator from Wisconsin, I say what I am now saying before I vote on this subject because I shall vote against the amendment, and I desire to say this much in order to declare that I believe Congress has the power. I believe they have full and entire power. The Senator from Michigan is correct on that subject.

But if we, on account of the fact that we are now threatened with the appearance of this disease among us, when the States, for the protection of their own citizens, have adopted the most perfect system, as I understand, of quarantine, undertake to assume jurisdiction over it on the recommendation of a few physicians who perhaps—I do not pretend to say that such is the fact—may be interested in putting themselves prominently forward as the champions of some new system of quarantine, may it not produce danger and difficulty, and, in fact, aid in the dissemination of the disease instead of preventing it? Under the circumstances I think it is better to vote down the amendment and to adopt the joint resolution as it came from the House. If we do anything on this subject, let us assist the States. If any reasonable complaint exists against the quarantine regulations of the different States, if it be probable or possible that they have neglected to protect their own citizens, and in consequence of this neglect the disease may spread into the interior of the country, then, perhaps, it may be necessary for us to adopt some regulation to protect citizens in the interior, when those upon the sea-board will not protect themselves; but I can scarcely think it possible. We have now State governments in all the States. They have one in Louisiana; they have one in South Carolina; they have one in each of the different States; and will they not go to work to protect themselves? I think, under the circumstances, we had better let the State regulations stand; and if we do anything whatever, our officers whom we appoint here can make such suggestions to the State Legislatures, perhaps, as may induce a better system of legislation than they have. I think it, therefore, much better to take the original resolution that came from the House and not to assume at present a jurisdiction which I admit we possess, but which will bring about a conflict and perhaps destroy any good and perfect system of quarantine.

Mr. CHANDLER. I admit that the quarantine at New York has been efficacious, and there is no intention or expectation that the Government will interfere where the quarantine is efficacious. The object of this measure is to make it uniform; that where the States or municipalities have failed to do their duty, the General Government shall have the power to step in and compel its being done. It is absolute.

I shall vote against the House resolution as it came to this body, because it is totally inefficient. It is utterly useless to have even a very efficient system of quarantine in New York harbor if there is no quarantine at all in New Jersey. It is absolutely useless to have an efficient quarantine in New York and fail to have it in Norfolk, because it is well known the moment the cholera lands it spreads. It may come into New York the back way, as it came into Italy across the Alps. No one who has ever been in Italian cities will say they are not more liable to the ravages of cholera than the cities in France. Take Naples, that actually breeds the material that furnishes victims for the cholera; and yet the cholera passed by Naples and landed at Marseilles; it passed Genoa and Rome and all the Italian cities, and was finally brought from Marseilles across the Alps into northern Italy. If we keep the cholera out of New York and let it land in Philadelphia, or if we keep it out of New York and let it land in Boston, there is no use of keeping it out of New York. The object of the proposition reported by the committee is—and I shall vote against any measure that does not give that power—to make the quarantine uniform throughout the United States, or place it in the power of the Secretaries to make it so. I hope the amendment of the committee will be adopted as it stands. If it should be defeated, I shall vote against the House resolution, because I do not deem it of any sort of consequence whatever.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire to ask the Senator if he thinks the system of quarantine ought to be uniform throughout the United States. What is a perfect system of quarantine in one State may not be so perfect in another. This very uniformity of which he speaks would be a great objection to any system of quarantine.

Mr. CHANDLER. The language here is, that they shall adopt a "uniform and efficient system of quarantine."

Mr. HENDERSON. Then the inhabitants of the district are the best judges in regard to that. What may be a very perfect system at New York will not be so at New Orleans, and what may be perfect at New Orleans will not be so at New York, because these ports are differently situated.

Mr. CHANDLER. Are you not willing to trust this board with that power?

Mr. HENDERSON. I think we can trust the States a great deal better.

Mr. GRIMES. I have got a little light from what the Senator from Michigan has now said, in addition to what he has bestowed on the Senate on former occasions on this subject, and I should like to have a little more. I understand him to say it would be useless to establish quarantine at New York and not to establish it at Norfolk or Boston.

Mr. CHANDLER. If they have no quarantine there.

Mr. GRIMES. I want to know of the Senator if it is proposed or contemplated by the Committee on Commerce, who reported this amendment, or by himself as its chairman, that this quarantine shall be established simultaneously at New York, New Orleans, Boston, and all along the coast.

Mr. CHANDLER. Does the Senator desire an answer now?

Mr. GRIMES. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHANDLER. We do not expect that there will be any interference. We believe that these three gentlemen are men of common sense, and where they find an efficient system they will not interfere with it. Where there is no quarantine, and a ship comes in infected with the cholera, and we have a national ship or a revenue-cutter there, we expect this board will, at the very earliest moment, take measures to quarantine that ship, whether it be at Norfolk, New Orleans, or anywhere else.

Mr. GRIMES. I understand, then, that the Senator from Michigan does not contemplate, although this proposition would authorize them to do so, that this board will interfere with the quarantine regulations now established at the harbor of New York.

Mr. CHANDLER. Not at all.

Mr. GRIMES. But that inasmuch as he tells us there is no quarantine established at Boston, this board will at once close up the harbor of Boston, appoint its various officers, pay them such salaries as are probably paid to quarantine officers now at New York, although there may be no cholera there or any anticipation of the cholera coming. I merely wish to learn from the Senator from Michigan whether I apprehend him correctly.

Mr. CHANDLER. Do you wish an answer now?

Mr. GRIMES. Any time that will suit the convenience of the Senator.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to give all the light I can to the Senator from Iowa. In case a ship should come into Boston with the cholera on board, and one of his fleet or one of mine should happen to be there, I suppose either the Secretary of the Treasury or the Secretary of the Navy would order that ship to hold the vessel at quarantine instead of permitting her to land at the dock. As for dismissing any officers or appointing a board of health with salaries, and all that sort of thing, I do not expect them to do it; but I expect that they will enforce a quarantine, even should the citizens of Boston fail to enforce one.

Mr. GRIMES. I understand from what the Senator now says that so far as the city of Boston is concerned, taking that as an illustration, it is merely accidental whether anything will be done there or not. If a vessel having the cholera on board comes in there, and there happens to be a revenue-cutter or a ship-of-war there, she will take charge of it; but suppose there should not happen to be a naval vessel or a revenue-cutter there; then what?

Mr. CHANDLER. I have not gone through all the details of what might occur. I suppose I could imagine eight or ten thousand cases that might occur, but which may never arise, that I am not prepared now, at a moment's notice, to decide; but I infer that the three gentlemen named, or even the Senator from Iowa and myself and some other gentleman, were we put in charge of this matter, would adopt what seemed to be the best and most efficient system that we could, under the circumstances of the case that might arise.

Mr. GRIMES. I think enough has been said to satisfy the Senate that this measure proceeds upon this idea, and this idea alone, that the commission to be created by this resolution shall immediately proceed to organize, in anticipation of the advent of the cholera; that there shall be quarantine officers established at Boston, at Philadelphia, at Baltimore, and at Norfolk, whether there is any cholera there or not; and it must be so if you are going to have a uniform system; and I understand that that is the spirit of the resolution. The Senate can see what a vast machine this is going to be, if we are to establish a uniform system for every harbor on the coast of the Atlantic, every harbor on the Gulf of Mexico, and every harbor on the coast of the Pacific, all to be controlled by a central power here at Washington that cannot by any possibility be correctly informed as to the particular local circumstances attending each of those points where the quarantine is to be established.

Again, the Senator says that they do not intend to interfere with any quarantine already established.

Mr. CHANDLER. Which is efficient.

Mr. GRIMES. Which is efficient. Suppose this board should decide that the quarantine established at New York is not efficient; then, I suppose, they are to overturn it. Is not that the idea of the Senator?

Mr. CHANDLER. They have the power under this proposition.

Mr. GRIMES. And it is the intention that it shall be overturned, I take it.

Mr. CHANDLER. No, sir.

Mr. GRIMES. Not if it is not efficient?

Mr. CHANDLER. But it is efficient.

Mr. GRIMES. But suppose the Secretaries of War, of the Treasury, and of the Navy, here at Washington, influenced by such influences as may be brought to bear from New York upon them, are satisfied that it is not quite as efficient as they think it ought to be, as another set of doctors not in command there think it ought to be; then it is the duty of these departmental officers to overturn that system, as I understand it. I understand the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. Howe,] who advocates this measure, to assent to that proposition. Now, it will at once be observed that if they do not overturn it you are not going to carry out the provisions of the law which requires it to be uniform, unless they adopt the New York system. Thus you make the system that has been established at New York the system that shall be established at San Francisco and New Orleans, in a different sort of climate and under different circumstances, and that carry on a different sort of commerce with altogether different ports in the world. Under the provisions of the amendment reported by the Committee on Commerce, you have either got to overturn the system they have in New York, or else you have got to establish the New York system as a sort of Procrustean bed upon which all the other establishments in the United States, on both sides of the continent, shall be built up; for the law expressly requires that the whole system shall be uniform throughout the United States, on your northern coast in Minnesota, and on your southern coast in Texas.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Treasury has agents in every exposed port to-day; the Navy has a great many agents; the Secretary of War a great many agents. The Senator, of course, can imagine anything. There are great powers contained in this measure, I admit, but it is not anticipated that those powers will be abused. I do not anticipate it, and I do not think the Senator from Iowa does. It is true under the powers contained in this proposition abuses might grow up. It is a temporary measure, which is to terminate on the second Monday in December next. It is expected that the present existing agencies of the several Departments will be instructed to adopt certain measures, and if it be necessary to appoint other agencies they will be appointed. However, I do not deem it necessary to answer the Senator from Iowa. I simply ask for a vote on this proposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will put the question the moment the debate is terminated. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Commerce as a substitute for the original resolution.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 17, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chandler, Conness, Cragin, Edmunds, Howard, Howe, Morgan, Nesmith, Nye, Poland, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Stewart, Sumner, Wade, Wilson, and Yates—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Clark, Davis, Dixon, Fessenden, Foster, Grimes, Guthrie, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Kirkwood, McDougall, Morrill, Norton, Riddle, Sprague, Van Winkle, and Wiley—19.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Cowan, Creswell, Doolittle, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Saulsbury, Sherman, Trumbull, Williams, and Wright—13.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now move to lay the joint resolution upon the table, and ask for the yeas and nays upon that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 15, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chandler, Conness, Edmunds, Howard, Howe, McDougall, Nesmith, Nye, Poland, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sumner, Wade, Williams, and Yates—15.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Clark, Cowan, Davis, Dixon, Fessenden, Foster, Grimes, Guthrie, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Kirkwood, Morgan, Morrill, Norton, Riddle, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Van Winkle, Wiley, and Wilson—23.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Cragin, Creswell, Doolittle, Johnson, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, Saulsbury, Trumbull, and Wright—11.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that the joint resolution as it came from the House, be now reported to the Senate.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be, and he hereby is, authorized to make and carry into effect such orders and regulations of quarantine as in his opinion may be deemed necessary and proper, in aid of State or municipal authorities, to guard against the introduction of the cholera into the ports of the United States; and the President is further authorized to empower the military and naval commanders in ports and places in the States that have been or are in insurrection to enforce such quarantine regulations as may be deemed necessary for the purpose of guarding against the introduction of cholera or yellow fever, and to provide for the proper care and treatment of patients. And such an amount of money as may be necessary to carry into effect this joint resolution is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. CHANDLER. It will be noticed that this joint resolution places extraordinary power, not in the hands of a board, but of one individual. It will be seen by the first line of it that the President is "authorized to make and carry into effect such orders and regulations of quarantine as in his opinion may be deemed necessary and proper, in aid of State or municipal authorities," and the last clause of it provides:

And such an amount of money as may be necessary to carry into effect this joint resolution is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

By this resolution you authorize Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, to appoint ten thousand agents to go anywhere and do anything that he may say is in aid of State sanitary regulations. I will not discuss so monstrous a proposition. I will not vote for it. It is an improper resolution. I was willing to intrust great powers in the hands of three men, in some of whom certainly I have great confidence, but I am not willing to intrust all powers in the hands of one man in whom I have no confidence without limitation as to the number of men who may be employed, or the amount of money that may be appropriated.

Mr. SUMNER. It is a monstrous proposition.

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes, sir, it is a monstrous proposition.

Mr. McDUGALL. Mr. President, in the person of whom the Senator from Michigan speaks I have great confidence, but notwithstanding that, in my judgment, this resolution is an unwise resolution. It is giving a power into the hands of the Federal Executive which, used with great wisdom, might be used well; but a power with which he need not be intrusted, and his being intrusted therewith will be, in my judgment, of no value for our safety against the contagions that some people think threaten us. I am of the opinion that cholera is the child of fear, and not the offspring of contagion. I am of the opinion that all this business can be best conducted in the localities where it is best understood. Suppose a contagious disease should come across the Pacific and approach our western shores, what would the President of the United States or his council know of it? Nothing. If it should come in many sections of the southern coast, what would they know of it? I say again, nothing.

The philosophy of this disease is not yet altogether understood among the most wise, the savans of the world. Men have their own speculations upon it. I have mine. I mingled with it in its first advent into the United States. I saw it face to face, and I saw it without fear, and therefore I did not get it. This thing of legislating against pestilences is more child's play, shooting child's arrows at the moon. In localities it is well that they, taking care of their particular localities, guard themselves; but for the Federal Government to undertake such administration is a piece of absolute folly. People seem to forget, and Senators seem to forget, that we are a nation embracing a vast continent; that in the details of physical economy the man who lives in Boston knows nothing of the condition of the men who live at St. Louis and New Orleans, and much less of those who live at San Francisco. To undertake to establish rules and regulations here, to be administered at the center of this Federal Government, with regard to physical economy, is absolute folly. Science has not grown so large as to be able to instruct men how to teach these things at such distances. It is my opinion that the States themselves who have the charge of their own domestic police (for this is but a police regulation, and the police government belongs to the States and not to the Federal Government) will be best able to ascertain what the immediate necessity demands and act upon it with prudence and not with this extended power.

If it be proposed by Senators to consolidate the Government and place it in the hands of one man, then I remember it has been said that one man, a wise man, governing a nation is better than a nation governed by a multitude; but that is not our system of government, and it is not the way we were established formerly. This resolution, as it stands, places a vast power that may be handled simultaneously by the executive officers without limit, without restraint, and for what purpose God Almighty will know when the thing has been done. It is wrong in principle, and against the whole policy of our Government. The whole proposition is radically wrong.

I only advance these observations because it is well for us once in a while to recur to the principles upon which our Government is based.

Mr. HENDERSON. I move to amend the resolution by striking out all after the word "to" in the eighth line down to and including the word "patients" in the fourteenth line, and to insert the following:

Direct the revenue officers and the officers commanding forts and revenue-cutters to aid in the execution of such quarantine, and also in the execution of the health laws of the States respectively in such manner as may to him seem necessary.

Mr. CLARK. Why not insert "Secretary of the Treasury" instead of "President?"

Mr. HENDERSON. I have no objection. I will move also to strike out the word "President" in the third line and insert "Secretary of the Treasury."

Mr. CLARK. He has charge of the revenue-cutters.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not see why we need put the military and the Navy in operation about this thing. There is no necessity for it.

Mr. CLARK. The Secretary of the Treasury is the proper officer to enforce this resolution.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have adopted the language of the act of 1796 in drawing this amendment. I will modify it by striking out the words "forts and" before the words "revenue-cutters." There is no necessity of requiring commanders of forts to assist in this matter. The revenue-cutters will be sufficient.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment as modified will be read at the desk.

The Secretary read the amendment, which was in line three to strike out the word "President" and insert "Secretary of the Treasury," and in line eight after the word "to" to strike out the following words:

Empower the military and naval commanders in ports and places in the States that have been or are in insurrection to enforce such quarantine regulations as may be deemed necessary for the purpose of guarding against the introduction of cholera or yellow fever, and to provide for the proper care and treatment of patients.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

Direct the revenue officers and the officers commanding revenue-cutters to aid in the execution of such quarantine, and also in the execution of the health laws of the States respectively in such manner as may to him seem necessary.

So that the resolution will read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized to make and carry into effect such orders and regulations of quarantine as, in his opinion, may be deemed necessary and proper, in the aid of State or municipal authorities, to guard against the introduction of the cholera into the ports of the United States; and the Secretary of the Treasury is further authorized to direct the revenue officers and the officers commanding revenue-cutters to aid in the execution of such quarantine, and also in the execution of the health laws of the States respectively in such manner as may to him seem necessary. And such an amount of money as may be necessary to carry into effect this joint resolution is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I offer the following amendment, to be inserted at the end of the resolution:

Provided, That the authority hereby granted shall expire on the second Monday in December, A. D. 1866.

Mr. CLARK. I suggest to the Senator to say the first Monday in January, 1867, so that it shall not expire until a month after Congress comes together again; and then, if it be necessary, we can renew it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will so modify the amendment.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. HOWE. I shall occupy the attention of the Senate but a moment. I simply wish to call their attention to what they are probably going to agree to. They are going to put substantially the same power in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury, and incur precisely the same obligations, as were proposed in the amendment that was reported by the committee. There is this difference: the plan, the system, the style of quarantine is to be agreed upon by the States or the municipalities, and the Government of the United States is simply to be commanded by these local authorities and foot the bills. I thought if we had to pay for the fiddling we ought to have the right to name the tune and call the figures, [laughter,] and so I voted for the amendment reported by the committee. I do not care to see the United States dancing to the tune of all these municipalities; and therefore I shall not vote for the resolution as it stands. If the Senate does, no doubt it will be all right.

Mr. CLARK. I think there is a great deal of difference between the resolution as it now stands before the Senate and the amendment as reported by the committee—a very great difference as to the power. The resolution, as it now stands, authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury, if in his judgment anything of that kind is required, to make such orders and regulations as he shall deem to be necessary for the purpose of aiding the quarantine in various places where it is not efficient; but the proposition reported from the committee required the Secretaries named to adopt an efficient and uniform system of quarantine from one end of the country to the other. There is a very great difference, in my judgment, between quarantining every port in the United States in a uniform way, and aiding the authorities in the different localities to do what is absolutely necessary. Suppose a ship should come into the port of New Orleans. Under the committee's proposition you would have to send to the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of the Navy to establish a quarantine there. As the resolution stands at present, the inhabitants of the port establish their quarantine, and if it is not found to be efficient, or there is any regulation necessary, the Secretary of the Treasury makes his regulation, and asks the revenue officers and the revenue-cutters to enforce that quarantine. That is a very different matter from what was proposed in the committee's proposition.

Nor do I understand that by this resolution the General Government is dancing an attendance upon the State governments. I have no partiality or preference as to which shall go in the van. I understand the object to be to prevent the cholera from coming into the United States; and if, in any port, the State governments are not efficient, I have no objection to the national Government coming in to aid it to be done.

Mr. CHANDLER. It cannot be done under this resolution.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator from Michigan says it cannot be done under this resolution. I ask him why.

Mr. HOWE. I will answer the Senator, if he will permit me.

Mr. CLARK. I shall be glad to have the Senator answer.

Mr. HOWE. It is simply because if the city of New York adopt some quarantine regulations there, the General Government has the right, under your resolution as it now stands, if you pass it, to come in with her Treasury and pay the expenses of carrying out those regulations; and under those regulations a ship may be prevented, if she has cholera on board, from coming to the dock and spreading it; but if the city of Brooklyn sees fit not to adopt any such regulations the vessel can go over there and the United States cannot help herself.

Mr. CLARK. Allow me to suggest to the Senator from Wisconsin that that does not answer my question. He does not answer the statement that I made.

Mr. HOWE. Then I did not understand the question.

Mr. CLARK. Then you should not have attempted to answer it.

Mr. HOWE. I thought I did understand it.

Mr. CLARK. I suggested that I had no objection to the General Government aiding the States, and the Senator from Michigan said that that could not be done, and I asked him why.

Mr. HOWE. I did not understand the question.

Mr. CLARK. I thought you did not.

Mr. HOWE. I plead guilty. I do not know that I was to blame for it altogether.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understood the Senator to say that where the States had no system, he did not object to the national Government enforcing a system.

Mr. HOWE. That is precisely the way I understood him.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is what I understood and what my colleague says he did say; and that is what I answered.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator will bear in mind and remember exactly what I was saying and the line of remark I was making, that I had no objection—the Senator from Wisconsin will remember it, because it was an allusion to a remark that he had made about the national Government dancing attendance on the State governments—that I had no objection to the national Government aiding the State governments. The Senator from Michigan says it cannot be done.

Mr. CHANDLER. I said it could not be done where no system was adopted by the local authorities.

Mr. CLARK. Let us see, Mr. President, whether it cannot be done. These gentlemen contend that the national Government have plenary power. That is the basis on which their proposition goes. Now, take it for granted that there is no quarantine in the State of New Jersey, and the Government have plenary power to establish it, why cannot the Secretary of the Treasury do it under this resolution by his revenue-cutters and revenue agents?

Mr. CHANDLER. Because the resolution does not give him the authority to do so.

Mr. HOWARD. They are to be used in aid of the State quarantine.

Mr. CLARK. To be used in aid of the States, not of a particular State. Where the States have failed to do it, then the General Government may do it.

Mr. HOWARD. Take a case where there is an utter absence of all such regulations on the part of the State, where the State has employed no force and no agency whatever in the shape of quarantine regulations; what power does this resolution give to the United States authorities to interfere in that particular State in any way on the subject of quarantine?

Mr. CLARK. If the Senator from Michigan is disposed to construe the language so technically, it is the easiest thing in the world to amend the resolution in that particular, and say, where the State fails to do it then the General Government may do it.

Mr. CHANDLER. That was the committee's proposition.

Mr. CLARK. I am entirely willing that the resolution should be amended in that particular, if Senators desire it, if that is the carping objection they make to it.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is the only difference between the two resolutions.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator from Michigan says that that is the only difference between the two resolutions!

Mr. CHANDLER. The chief difference.

Mr. CLARK. Pray, where did the Senator learn the English language or its force? The bill as reported from the Committee on Commerce overruled State legislation entirely, if the Secretaries chose to do so, to make the system efficient and uniform everywhere. It seems to me that the measure as it now stands, with the amendment, if Senators desire the amendment to be added, would accomplish a great deal; it is a very different thing from what was reported from the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MORRILL. I want to call the attention of my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. HOWE] to a single remark that he let fall. That Senator is always critical; he means to be just, I have no doubt, but when he says that this resolution provides for the payment of all the expenses incurred by the States in their systems of quarantine, touching this subject-matter, he is very wide of the mark, I beg to say. The Government by this measure does not propose to pay the expenses of the States for anything they may do for the protection of the public health in the States. The Secretary of the Treasury would not be authorized to pay the first shilling of the expenses of the local authorities. He is simply authorized to aid the States, and as much money as is necessary to pay for what the Government does is to be appropriated for that purpose for the aid it renders, not what the States do. We pay for the aid which we authorize the General Government to give; we do not authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the expenses of the sanitary and health regulations of the States by any means. I suggest, therefore, to my honorable friend that his criticism, while it is a little harsh, is a little unjust.

Mr. HOWE. If I have done injustice to this resolution, I feel condemned. The man that would deliberately do injustice to such a resolution as this, I think would be unjust to cholera itself, for I do not know of anything more obnoxious in itself than the resolution except cholera, the naked and pure article.

Mr. President, I do not know but that I ought to accept without qualification the criticism of my friend from Maine. He says that the resolution does not intend that the Government shall pay for anything that the States do, but only for what the Government does in aid of the States. I guess it is a pretty correct statement; but how far it circumscribes my idea of the extent of the expenditure is a question to be considered. Grant that the national Treasury will only pay for what the nation does, how will the work be divided? The city of New York and the city of Boston and each of the other cities threatened with the introduction of cholera, will say "We want quarantine regulations; we want an officer here that shall command a ship coming from an infected port, into quarantine; that is what we want." That the State will do, and there will be no payment for saying that; but the Secretary of the Treasury will say to the collector or the deputy collector, or some health officer that he designates for that duty, "Take your stand there at the gateways of that port, and order all these vessels into quarantine as they approach;" and for that the national Treasury pays; for this service—

Mr. GRIMES. The detention of the vessel?

Mr. HOWE. For keeping the officer there, and whatever is necessary to put her into quarantine and detain her there. That is all the expense there is under any system, and that the national Treasury pays for; but for the mere head-work, for the mere application, for the simple decision of the port or city authorities adjacent to the port where they want these regulations established, there is no payment to be made and no expense incurred.

Gentlemen have inveighed a great deal against the danger growing out of the use of this word "uniform." What is the danger? What does it mean? It means nothing in the world more than that no matter to what port a vessel is destined, if she has cholera on board, she may be ordered into quarantine, or for the purpose of examination she may be stopped and searched. This is just as necessary in one port as another; and doctors say, and I believe, that it is of no sort of use in any port unless it be observed in all ports. It does not follow that there is to be a multitude of new officers employed under this bill, or under the amendment reported by the committee which you have rejected. Very likely the collector or deputy collector can exercise the power, and there is one everywhere where a vessel is authorized to unload; and very likely this officer himself is equal to the emergency. I do not know what regulations this board of commissioners would adopt; I do not know what regulations the Secretary of the Treasury would adopt. I only say that I was not very much in favor of the Government's taking this work upon its hands at all; and therefore I was not very much in favor of the adoption of the amendment reported by the committee. I voted for it mainly because I found so many here denying that the Government had any authority in the matter. I voted rather to assert the authority than because I wanted to have it exercised; but I am utterly opposed to our intervening at all under the direction of the several municipalities.

Mr. HENDERSON. If the Senator from Wisconsin will turn to the law that was adopted in 1799, and which has been referred to, I think he will see that at least Congress at that time supposed that it was altogether proper to pass a law similar to the one we now have under consideration, not for the purpose of making it the duty of the officers of the United States to carry out State laws and to bring about an expense upon the Treasury by so doing, but for the purpose of making it obligatory upon the Federal officers in the discharge of duties under the United States to obey those State laws. If I understand this resolution, it means nothing more and nothing less than that.

The Senator assumes that in all probability at New York they may have quarantine regulations, but that at the city of Brooklyn they may have none. That is presuming that the people of New York are willing that the cholera may enter into the State through Brooklyn, but not through the city of New York. Is such a presumption at all reasonable? We must rely something upon the people of the respective States.

The Senator complains that we leave it to the different cities to adopt any sort of quarantine regulations they choose, and we in this resolution make it the duty of the Federal officers to carry it out, and thereby entail an expense upon the Government. Let me ask if it is possible that any expense can come to the Government under this resolution. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to employ the revenue officers in the execution of such orders as he may make upon the subject. I did not move to strike out that clause which appropriates whatever sum may be necessary, though I can see no use in it; but I submit to the Senator from Wisconsin whether it is possible that one dollar of expense can be entailed in the execution of this resolution. I cannot conceive that a dollar of expense can come upon the United States in consequence of it.

Mr. HOWE. Then strike out that clause, and close the Treasury.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have no objection; I did not put it there. In the amendment which I offered I made it obligatory upon the Secretary of the Treasury, in carrying out these regulations, to employ officers already upon duty, and who are receiving their salaries. Is it possible that it will be necessary to pay them additional salaries? I think not. The Senator is altogether mistaken when he supposes that under this joint resolution any additional expenditure can be made. I cannot conceive of anything of the sort.

The Senator asks, why, then, is it necessary to make it obligatory upon these officers to observe the quarantine laws of the States? I agree with him as to the supremacy of the laws of Congress, so that if under an act of Congress a ship is authorized when it comes to the port of New York to discharge its freight immediately it can do it independent of the quarantine laws of the State. What is the meaning of this resolution? It is to make the officers of the Federal Government obey the State quarantine laws—to put it in the power of the Secretary of the Treasury to make it obligatory upon them to obey those laws and not to disregard them. The Senator from Wisconsin will recollect that there are laws, the revenue laws, which permit vessels, when they arrive at a port of the United States, within a certain time to land and discharge that freight in warehouses of the United States. Suppose that the law of the State of New York prohibits a vessel from landing there on account of the fear of contagious diseases; there is a conflict of jurisdiction at once; there is a conflict between the Federal law and the State law. Now, suppose that the collector of customs at New York city, obeying the Federal law, should order a vessel up into the port of New York, and order it to discharge its freight and passengers there against the quarantine laws of the State of New York, or of the city of New York, passed under State authority, the Senator will see at once that a conflict of jurisdiction would arise. The law of 1799 provides for a case of that sort. The idea there was to give the power to the Secretary of the Treasury to make the revenue collectors and all the officers in the discharge of Federal duties in the respective ports obey the quarantine laws of the States, and that is the only meaning of this resolution now. If gentlemen insist that there are some cities in the United States that have adopted no quarantine regulations, and that it is necessary that they should be adopted, an amendment may be added, but I do not think it is necessary. The people of Brooklyn, if cholera is to visit the United States, will guard and protect themselves against its introduction there just as efficiently as the people of New York. So will the people of New Orleans, the people of Richmond, the people of Portland, the people of New London, and the people of every other city. The first section of the act of 1799 is in these words:

"That the quarantines and other restraints, which shall be required and established by the health laws of any State, or pursuant thereto, respecting any vessels arriving in, or bound to, any port or district thereof, whether from a foreign port or place, or from another district of the United States, shall be duly observed by the collectors and all other officers of the revenue of the United States, appointed and employed for the several collection districts of such State respectively, and by the masters and crews of the several revenue-cutters, and by the military officers who shall command in any fort or station upon the sea-coast."

Suppose a military officer commanding there now should absolutely refuse to regard the quarantine laws of the respective States, ought there not to be some power vested in some officer of the Government to restrain and control those men and make them obey those quarantine regulations?

"And all such officers of the United States shall be, and they hereby are, authorized and required faithfully to aid in the execution of such quarantine and health laws, according to their respective powers and precincts, and as they shall be directed, from time to time, by the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States."

So the Senator will see that this resolution now is in perfect accordance with the law of 1799. The second section of that act provides:

"That when by the health laws of any State, or by the regulations which shall be made pursuant thereto, any vessel arriving within a collection district of such State, shall be prohibited from coming to the port of entry or delivery by law established for such district, and it shall be required or permitted by such health laws, that the cargo of such vessel shall or may be unladen at some other place within or near to such district, the collector authorized therein, after due report to him of the whole of such cargo, may grant his especial warrant or permit for the unloading and discharge thereof under the care of the surveyor, or of one or more inspectors, at some other place where such health laws will permit."

So the law now, instead of inflicting any expense upon the Government, only gives power to the Secretary of the Treasury to order the officers of the United States to conform to and assist in carrying out the laws that may be adopted in the respective States.

Mr. HOWE. The Senator either misapprehends the state of the resolution, or else I misapprehend the force of it. This power to direct the revenue officers is an additional power, a power in addition to the power given by the first clause; there the Secretary of the Treasury is clothed with the authority to make orders and regulations.

Mr. HENDERSON. Let me ask the Senator if it is at all likely the Secretary of the Treasury will employ other officers than the officers of the Treasury already in the different ports of the United States in the execution of these quarantine laws? If so I am willing to limit his power; but I cannot imagine that the Secretary of the Treasury, already having command of the revenue officers in the different ports, will put the United States to any additional expense, but that he will employ the officers of the revenue-cutters in that way.

Mr. HOWE. My friend from Missouri and myself can end this controversy very suddenly, I think. Just make the resolution that it only authorizes him to employ the revenue officers in the execution of the local quarantine regulations, and shut up the Treasury, and I do not care how it is.

Mr. HENDERSON. Strike out the latter part of the resolution; that shuts up the Treasury.

Mr. HOWE. That shuts up the Treasury, but it does not cut out the first part.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on ordering the amendments to be engrossed, and the joint resolution to be read the third time.

Mr. JOHNSON called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 27, nays 12; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Clark, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Edmunds, Fessenden, Foster, Grimes, Guthrie, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Johnson, Kirkwood, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Morrill, Norton, Poland, Pomeroy, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Van Winkle, Wiley, and Wilson—27.

NAYS—Messrs. Chandler, Conness, Howard, Howe, McDougall, Nye, Ramsey, Biddle, Trumbull, Wade, Williams, and Yates—12.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Cowan, Cragin, Creswell, Lane of Indiana, Nesmith, Saulsbury, Sherman, and Wright—10.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire to amend the title of this joint resolution, so as to read, "A resolution respecting quarantine and health laws." I think that would be a better title, and I move that amendment.

The title was so amended.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. LLOYD, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 280) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department during the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1867, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed without amendment the joint resolution (S. R. No. 88) authorizing the Secretary of War to grant the use of certain lumber for the fair for the Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphan Home.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 134) relative to appointments in the Military Academy of the United States; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; which were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 310) to change the place of holding the courts of the United States for the northern district of Mississippi;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 88) authorizing the Secretary of War to grant the use of certain lumber for the fair for the Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphan Home;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 66) relative to the courts and post office of New York city; and

A bill (H. R. No. 397) to authorize the coinage of five-cent pieces.

ADMISSION OF COLORADO—VETO.

Mr. EDWARD COOPER, Secretary to the President of the United States, appeared below the bar and delivered the following message:

Mr. President, I am directed by the President of the United States to return to the Senate in which it originated, a bill (S. No. 74) entitled "An act for the admission of the State of Colorado into the Union," with his objections in writing.

APPOINTMENTS AND REMOVALS.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire to call up a bill that I introduced a few days ago—Senate bill No. 315—to regulate appointments to and removals from office. I desire merely to call it up, with a view of referring it to the Judiciary Committee. The committee, I understand, meets to-morrow morning and I desire that it shall be referred to them for action.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will entertain the motion to commit.

The motion was agreed to.

PREVENTION OF SMUGGLING.

Mr. MORRILL. I call up the special order. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is now before the Senate, being Senate bill No. 222, to further prevent smuggling, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOWARD. I move to set aside all other orders and take up Senate bill No. 109.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope not. This is the special order which was laid over yesterday; and I want to take up some appropriation bills as soon as it is disposed of.

Mr. HOWARD. The bill to which I call attention has been up once.

Mr. MORRILL. This is the unfinished business of yesterday. We can soon finish it. The only question is on concurrence in some amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator is not aware, perhaps, that this bill comes up as a special order and is now before the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. It can be finished in five minutes.

Mr. HOWARD. Very well. I withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (S. No. 222) further to prevent smuggling, and for other purposes, is before the Senate; and the question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, which were excepted out of the general scope of amendments that were concurred in. The first excepted amendment will be read.

The Secretary read the first excepted amendment which was in section four, line thirteen, to strike out the words "and the guilty knowledge of the defendant, when convicted of the fact, shall in all cases be presumed unless he or she prove the contrary" and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

And the onus probandi in cases of seizure shall lie upon the claimant where probable cause is shown for such prosecution, to be judged of by the court before whom the prosecution is had.

Mr. MORRILL. I should like to make a verbal amendment to which nobody will object, in that amendment, to use the phrase "burden of proof" instead of "onus probandi."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That correction will be made if there be no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think there were two amendments proposed by the committee, one to strike out and the other to insert. I suppose they can be divided.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A motion to strike out and insert is not divisible.

Mr. JOHNSON. That seems singular.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the motion to strike out and insert shall be rejected, a motion to strike out will then be in order; but under the rules of the Senate a motion to strike out and insert is one motion and not divisible.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope the Senator from Maine, who has charge of the bill on behalf of the committee, will change the form of his motion and move first to strike out so as to simplify the matter, in order that we may vote separately on the propositions.

Mr. JOHNSON. As I understand the ruling of the Chair, the amendment proposed is one that cannot be divided; but if it shall be voted down we can then move to strike out the clause as it stands in the bill. Before the vote is taken I beg leave to add another remark or two to those which I submitted yesterday to the Senate against this amendment.

The honorable member from Massachusetts [Mr. SUMNER] yesterday, said, in regard to the burden of proof, or the onus probandi, as it is classically termed—my friend from Maine does not like the classic language, [laughter]—that it was a very common thing in court that the onus probandi or burden of proof is changed from one to the other of the litigants as the case may progress. That is all true; but how is it done in a civil suit? It is left by the court to the jury to say that if they believe that the fact was so and so, then it is for the other side to satisfy them that notwithstanding this fact the plaintiff is not entitled to recover, or whatever the effect may be. Now, what is the effect of this amendment? I am not bringing now the arts of the practicing lawyer, which my friend from Massachusetts seems to suppose I am always resorting to.

Mr. SUMNER. Oh, no.

Mr. JOHNSON. He does me great injustice in any such supposition. If I have any of the arts belonging to the practicing lawyer, I do not bring them into this forum knowingly; and let me say that if my friend from Massachusetts had been at the bar as long as I have been, I think, perhaps, some of his speeches would be, as far as the law is concerned, a little more sound than they are. [Laughter.]

The effect of this amendment is to take from the jury the finding of the fact. If this section passes as it is, instead of telling the jury that if they believe that the goods were imported contrary to law, and if they believe that the defendant, if he is prosecuted, as having bought goods, or being in possession of goods illegally imported, really bought the goods in fact, or was found in possession of the goods, then they must convict unless he shall be able to account for his purchase or possession; instead of leaving it to the jury to find the fact that the goods were imported illegally, and that if imported illegally they came into the possession of the defendant against whom the prosecution is instituted, it leaves it to the court to say, as I understand it, that the case as it stands upon the proof is one in which in point of law there must be a conviction unless the defendant can absolve himself from the supposed prima facie evidence of the facts offered on the part of the Government. It is, therefore, in my judgment to deprive a party charged in a criminal prosecution of the security which the common law gives and which the Constitution of the United States expressly gives, of having the offense with which he may be charged passed upon by a jury; and of the right he has to have all the facts passed upon by the jury, to have the evidence offered on the part of the Government as well as the evidence offered on the part of the traverser or accused heard by the jury. If this means anything it means to say that importation illegal in fact and possession in fact is to be considered as possession with a knowledge of the illegal importation, unless the party can clear himself of it by affirmative evidence; and the jury have nothing to do but to convict, taking away from the jury the right to find whether the fact charged existed or not, whether the importation was an illegal importation or not, or whether the defendant was a purchaser of the goods or found in possession of the goods thus illegally imported. Unless I am grossly mistaken, it very materially interferes with the security which the Constitution gives to every man charged with an offense, of having the matter investigated by a jury.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator from Maryland reminds me that I do not bring to this discussion the large professional experience which we all know belongs to him. Sir, nobody can regret that more than I do, nor am I unwilling that the Senator should remind me of it. I bring to the question nothing but an honest judgment.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not doubt that.

Mr. SUMNER. I bring to the question nothing but an honest judgment, with some slight recollection of early professional study. That is all I pretend to do. But bringing such as I have to the discussion, the Senator from Maryland will pardon me if I suggest to him what it seems to me are two mistakes on his part on this occasion.

In the first place, he argues on this proposition as if we were to bring it to the test of existing law. Now, bringing it to the test of existing law, I am not going to argue that the proposition could be sustained; but the question is whether it is not in our power to declare a new rule applicable to this case to meet what I said yesterday was the stringency that seemed to be required, and there I differ with the learned Senator. It does seem to me that it is clearly within our province to lay down this rule, and if it is within our province I think that the exigency demands it; and therefore the Senator will pardon me if I put aside absolutely all his ingenious argument, which is founded on existing law, and which goes to show that according to existing law this cannot be done.

I put it all aside; but then I am not willing to stop there. I remind the learned Senator—and no one needs to be reminded of it less—that there is a whole class of legal presumptions, presumptions of law in contradistinction to presumptions of fact, which when they occur are considered the grounds of conclusion in a case. Certain facts appear; to those the court apply not a conclusion merely of fact, but an absolute conclusion of law, and that we call a presumption of law. How often that occurs in criminal proceedings; I will not go into details, but the Senator will remember them, I dare say, by the dozen, much more freshly than I should. Suffice it to say they do occur; and now, as I understand it, here is simply one more presumption of law which it is proposed to add to other presumptions of law.

The other mistake which it seems to me my honorable friend fell into—I have mentioned one—was one which we all know in the excellence of his disposition and from long professional habit he is disposed to fall into—that is, to become the attorney general of criminals. He falls into that character easily. In short, my learned friend seems to have a warm side for criminals; and whenever any proposition is brought forward which promises to give a new restraint to crime, my learned friend finds some objection; he receives the criminal on his warm side; he embraces him and he resists the statute. Now, I think he is under that influence to-day. He resists this proposition because if adopted it will be a new restraint upon crime, it will help to prevent smuggling, and to that end certainly it will be a benefaction to the country.

Mr. HENDERSON. I certainly have no desire to enter into the discussion of the legal question that has grown up between the two Senators. I desire simply to regulate my own vote on this subject, and I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator having charge of the bill, in order to ascertain the extent of this provision and what is the meaning of it; for I really do not understand it. The first part of the section provides for the punishment of a person who "shall fraudulently or knowingly import or bring into the United States, or assist in so doing, any goods, wares, or merchandise contrary to law, or shall receive, conceal, buy, sell, or in any manner facilitate the transportation, concealment, or sale of such goods, wares, or merchandise, after their importation, knowing the same to have been imported contrary to law."

The Senate will see that the first clause provides that before the party can be guilty he shall fraudulently or knowingly import or assist in the importation of goods against the law, that is, with a design not to pay custom duties. The second clause of it applies to those individuals who shall attempt to sell and to assist in the transportation through the country of goods that are thus fraudulently brought in. The Senate will see that it requires, first, a fraudulent knowledge of the improper importation; and secondly, even if he assists in receiving, buying, or selling the goods, it must be with a knowledge that they were imported contrary to law. Now, suppose that a prosecution is lodged against an individual thus situated. He has either imported the goods into the country and failed to pay the duties, or he has purchased the goods after they are imported. What is necessary to be established in order to produce a conviction? Is it not a knowledge of the fact? Is it not necessary for the prosecution to show that the party thus affected must have shown of the violation of the law? Then it rests upon the United States to establish guilt, to show a guilty knowledge. There can be no question about that fact; and the original bill it seems provided that if the fact itself were shown, that is, if the party was found in the possession of goods that had not paid duty, or if the party had bought goods that had been thus imported, whether he knew the fact of the illegal importation or not, guilty knowledge should be presumed. "The guilty knowledge of the defendant, when convicted of the fact, shall in all cases be presumed unless he or she prove the contrary."

I can understand that provision. That will produce uniformity in the administration of justice under this bill. When the fact is once established against a party that he is found in possession of goods fraudulently brought by somebody, then guilty knowledge is to be presumed against him. Where a party has struck another with a deadly weapon, he is presumed to have done it with the intention to kill, because of the fact that it is a deadly weapon; and when once that fact is shown, the presumption of law arises that the assault was with intent to kill and malice is presumed from the act itself, and it then devolves upon the defendant to show facts that will exculpate him; it devolves upon him then to remove the presumption which would naturally arise from the use of a deadly weapon. Now, the intention of the committee originally evidently was that if goods were imported and the duty not paid, the party who is in possession of the goods is to be presumed in a prosecution to have had guilty knowledge of the fact of illegal importation.

Mr. MORRILL. Not merely possession, but possession surrounded by such circumstances as in the opinion of the court to lead to such an inference.

Mr. HENDERSON. There is the difficulty. If the Senator will provide some fact which being established the presumption of guilt will arise unless the defendant can exculpate himself, I will vote for it; but I cannot vote for the amendment as it now stands—"and the burden of proof shall lie upon the defendant where probable cause is shown for such prosecution."

Take a case. A man is prosecuted and it is shown that he commanded a vessel which brought goods into this country. Am I to understand, as would seem to be inferred in the argument of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. WILLIAMS] yesterday, that he commanding the vessel is to be supposed to be guilty when the fact is once established that the goods came in his vessel? Or is it his duty to land the goods and to let the revenue officers attend to that matter, or must he know that the goods have paid duty?

In one part of the United States it may be supposed that the court in trying the party under circumstances of this sort will say that the mere fact of the delivery of goods by the master of the vessel and the non-payment of duties on them is a prima facie case from which his guilt is to be presumed, because they will say that that thing itself constitutes probable cause. Or I will give the Senator another instance. Say that goods are imported into this country by A, and in the course of five days thereafter B is found in possession of them, and B is prosecuted. Now, I desire to know of the Senator if B is to be presumed guilty when the fact is shown that the goods were improperly imported and had not paid duty. So recent a possession as that certainly ought to constitute some evidence of guilt; it ought to constitute a prima facie case anyhow, and make it obligatory on the defendant to show facts exonerating him. But is that the intention of the section? One court may say that five days' possession is so very recent that the party in possession of the goods will be presumed guilty, and it devolves on him then to show that he is not guilty. Another court in another section of the country may say it requires twenty days; another may say it requires forty days, or that forty days' possession is yet so recent that probable cause is made out against the party.

I merely suggest these difficulties. If the section is left as it is now proposed by the committee, there can be no uniformity in the establishment of guilt in the courts of the United States. There is no prima facie case except that which is framed in the breast of the court itself. Is that the intention of this section?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes.

Mr. HENDERSON. If that be the intention I cannot vote for it; but if the Senator will say that one fact being established—I care not what that fact may be—if he will say that the importing of goods by an individual who is owner of the goods, and the neglect or refusal to pay the duties being established against the party, however innocent his intention may be, a prima facie case of guilt shall arise against him, and it shall devolve on him, then, to show that he is innocent, I am willing to vote for it; or if he will say that although the party did not import the goods himself, but was an innocent purchaser of the goods, I am willing to say that on the fact of the purchase of goods improperly imported being established the presumption of guilt shall arise until the man establish his innocence.

Mr. MORRILL. Establish it to whose satisfaction?

Mr. HENDERSON. Let there be uniformity; let the establishment of the fact go to the court, because then there will be uniformity. The court will certainly always instruct the jury hypothetically, that if the jury are satisfied from the evidence in the case that A imported the goods illegally and that B purchased the goods from A, they will presume B to be guilty unless he shows that he innocently purchased them. That would make a perfectly clear case. The court would instruct upon the fact and instruct the jury of course hypothetically. This would leave it to the jury to say whether the original fact upon which the presumption is to be based has been established or not. But I really cannot see the meaning of this proposition as it stands, because the section in the first part of it requires that there shall be guilty knowledge, and it devolves upon the Government to prove that fact; but in the latter part of it it is distinctly stated that the burden of proof shall rest upon the defendant to show his innocence where probable cause is shown for the prosecution. Then this "probable cause" is left to the discretion, left in the bosom of each and every judge, and there is no uniformity in the practice.

I hope the amendment will not be adopted in its present shape. I am perfectly willing to take that portion of the section proposed to be struck out, for I think that covers all that could be desired. I understand the design of the committee is to reach all guilty parties. Although we allow the presumption of guilty knowledge in a case of this sort, the defendant may show himself to be innocent, or may produce evidence tending to show his innocence, or at least bring it within a reasonable doubt; and the court will instruct the jury, of course, according to the criminal law of the land, that the man's guilt must appear beyond any reasonable doubt, and every other reasonable hypothesis must be excluded in order to convict the defendant. It may very easily be shown that he had no knowledge, or at least a prima facie case may be shown by him, that he had no knowledge of the violation of the law originally in the importation of the goods. But to leave it within the discretion of a judge in Oregon to say what is probable cause, and a judge somewhere else to say that something else is probable cause, it seems to me, is placing the liberty of the citizen in jeopardy, and too much in jeopardy for us to let this provision stand. I think it ought to be stricken out and the original clause left as it was, or else the section left without either. It would then devolve upon the prosecuting attorney in every case to show the guilty knowledge; but I have no objection to saying that the guilty knowledge shall be presumed when the fact itself of a violation of the law shall have been established, and it shall then devolve upon the defendant to show that he did not possess that knowledge; that is, that the prima facie case shall be taken against him; but beyond that I am not willing to go.

Mr. HOWE. I asked to have this amendment excepted and to have a special vote upon it. I did it for two reasons: first, I am utterly opposed to the amendment as reported by the committee. I do conceive the effect of it to be neither more nor less than practically to transfer the trial of the issue from the jury to the court, because the issue is guilty or not guilty; that is all there is of it; the Government says the defendant is guilty, and he says that he is not. Practically the Government goes on and marshals its testimony, makes out as strong a case of guilt as it is able to do. The defendant has no testimony, or has it and introduces it. This statute says that whenever the trial stops or before it stops, if the court sees fit to do so, the court may say, "Gentlemen of the jury, here is a case of guilt made out; now I instruct you to find this man guilty, unless the testimony subsequently satisfies you that he is innocent." That is one reason why I object to it.

But I wish to call the attention of my friend from Maine to an amendment that has been incorporated here since the bill came from the committee, which seems to me to be entirely foreign to the whole purpose of the section in which it stands. I ask to have the amendment as it now stands reported.

The Secretary read the amendment, which was to strike out the words "and the guilty knowledge of the defendant, when convicted of the fact, shall in all cases be presumed unless he or she prove the contrary;" and to insert in lieu thereof the following: "and the burden of proof in cases of seizure shall lie upon the claimant where probable cause is shown for such prosecution, to be judged of by the court before whom the prosecution is had."

Mr. HOWE. The whole purpose of the section is to punish men for importing goods contrary to law, or buying them or selling them after they have been imported contrary to law; and it declares that if a man imports goods in violation of law, that is without paying the duties, the goods shall be forfeited and he shall be punished so and so; and the purpose of the amendment reported by the committee was to regulate the proof on the trial of such an issue, but the amendment as it now stands is that in case of seizure (which is a case not contemplated by the section,) the burden of proof shall be on the claimant, who is a new party, a party that cannot be present upon any trial contemplated by the section—the burden of proof shall be upon the claimant on such and such conditions which is entirely foreign, as it seems to me, to the whole purpose of the section. I think that it ought to be corrected, if no more.

Mr. MORRILL. It seems to me that the objection of the Senator from Wisconsin is well taken to the proposition of the Senator from Vermont. It will be seen at a glance that the provision of the section is simply as to the punishment of the person; it provides a remedy in cases where any person "shall fraudulently and knowingly import or bring into the United States," &c., any goods improperly imported. The penalty is provided for the person who shall do the acts prohibited; and the provision is that upon such an issue as that, the onus probandi shall be on him, the court having found certain things. I think that is the statement of the whole case; and on the trial of that issue this rule applies. Now, the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] is, that upon a question of seizure this principle shall apply, which would make it apply to goods when no such issue is proposed by the section.

Mr. POLAND. It seems to me that the Senator from Maine does not precisely understand his own bill. This fourth section provides that where goods are illegally imported the goods shall be forfeited and the person illegally importing them shall be subject to fine and imprisonment. The provision in relation to the burden of proof would apply to both classes of cases—to proceedings against the goods where they were libeled in the district court and where some person came in as a claimant; and would also apply to cases where a prosecution was brought, where a man was indicted or informed against for having illegally imported goods, or having goods illegally imported in his possession, with knowledge. Now, I entirely agree with the Senator from Maryland that in a prosecution against a man where you treat him as a criminal, where you institute proceedings against him for the purpose of subjecting him to fine and imprisonment, it is altogether wrong to undertake to interfere with the common-law rules of evidence. He is entitled to have his case go to the jury untrammelled by any such provision; and as I understand the effect of the amendment which my colleague proposed, and which was adopted yesterday, it relieves it entirely of any application to that class of cases; it merely makes it apply to cases where a proceeding is instituted against the goods; what is known—that is a technical term—as a seizure case, that is, where certain goods are libeled as having been unlawfully imported.

It seems to me there is nothing wrong in our saying that where the fact of illegal importation is proved, then if the party should excuse himself upon the ground of some accident or some inadvertence, the burden of proof should be upon him; and as I understand, the effect of this amendment is to confine it merely to that class of cases, to proceedings against the goods. To be sure in this section they do not go on and provide anything in relation to the mode of proceeding against the goods in order to procure a forfeiture; but that is already provided for by other laws, and, indeed, I do not know but by some other section in this bill. At any rate we have other statutes that apply to that class of cases, and this amendment merely confines this rule of evidence, as I understand it, to proceedings against goods, and entirely takes away the effect of this clause in relation to the burden of proof in relation to prosecutions against the person.

Mr. MORRILL. Which prosecution of the goods, the Senator will allow me to say, is not contemplated by this section, and therefore it is irrelevant, to say the least of it.

Mr. POLAND. It leaves this section to apply to seizure cases merely, proceedings against the goods. Perhaps it may not exactly be cognate to the section itself, and it is perhaps unnecessary, because I think the act of 1799, that was referred to yesterday, establishes precisely the same rule in seizure cases, and unless this bill repealed it there was no necessity for having this clause in.

Mr. MORRILL. That was the answer I was about to make to the Senator. My understanding of the bill is a little different from his. This provision certainly is not necessary at all in the view the Senator from Vermont takes of it.

Mr. POLAND. If you leave the act of 1799 in force, it is not.

Mr. MORRILL. The case of a libel against the property is already provided for by other acts. But the Senator will see that this section by no possibility can apply to the property by the very use of the language, "the onus probandi shall lie upon the defendant where probable cause is shown for such prosecution." That is, as to a prosecution against the person, not a libel against property.

Mr. POLAND. I understand the section now to read, as amended, "and the burden of proof in cases of seizure shall lie upon the claimant."

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, sir; but I am speaking of the intent of this section. It was to provide a remedy against the person, and not against the property. We have a remedy against the property in the laws already provided for. Now we propose to provide an additional remedy against the person, and the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] ignoring that part, makes a provision for a proceeding against property. That amendment ought not to be accepted, first because it has no application to the bill and is not necessary, and whether the Senate will accept this provision or not is a question that is entirely independent of that; whether they will do it or not depends upon whether the Senate is disposed now to apply the same principle as to the burden of proof against a man who is charged with violating the law that has been uniformly applied against his property when you were proceeding in rem against it. That is all there is about it.

Mr. POLAND. It is very true that this section does not provide specifically for proceedings by way of libel in what are termed seizure cases, but it does provide for the forfeiture of goods. The subject is not entirely foreign to this section, as the Senator from Maine says. It provides that where goods are illegally imported the goods themselves shall be forfeited and the person illegally importing them shall be liable to be punished by fine and imprisonment. As the bill was drawn it intended to make this change in relation to the burden of proof apply to both classes of cases, to proceedings against goods, what are known technically as seizure cases, and also to prosecutions against the person for illegally importing them or having them in possession after they were illegally imported with knowledge.

There is nothing new in reference to this. We had statutes before which forfeited goods that were illegally imported, and statutes providing for proceedings of that character. We had also statutes before this that provided penalties for smuggling. There is nothing new in this unless it provides a higher penalty, a greater penalty than the law did before. As this last clause of the section stood originally, and as the amendment that the committee proposed to it stood until amended, it applied to both classes of cases where goods were liable, and where a person who was prosecuted for being a smuggler, for illegally importing goods. In both classes of cases, upon the fact of illegal importation being proved, the burden of proof was thrown on the individual. It seems to me just and right, so far as the proceeding against the goods is concerned, and perfectly competent for us to say—violating no rule of law, no constitutional provision, not invading this particular right of trial by jury, and of having them pass on all the facts of the case—"If you illegally import goods, and the fact of the illegal importation be shown, the goods shall be forfeited unless you have some excuse that you are able to produce and show; we cast the burden on you." But when you proceed against the man as a criminal, undertake to charge him with a crime, and subject him to fine and imprisonment, then I think the principle that the committee undertook to establish here is all wrong; but the amendment that my colleague proposed, and which we adopted yesterday, it seems to me relieves it of all difficulty, and it is precisely proper that it should be passed in the form in which we amended it.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have no doubt that the honorable member from Vermont is right that we have the power to make the law as the amendment suggested by his colleague would make it; but that is the law now in relation to seizures. The seventy-first section of the act of 1799 says that in all cases of seizures of goods liable to forfeiture the burden of proof shall be cast upon the claimant. When this section says that goods illegally imported shall be forfeited, it brings the goods within the operation of the act of 1799; and that provides precisely what would be provided for by the amendment suggested by his colleague, as I think the honorable member will admit.

I endeavored to distinguish the rules prescribed by the section of the act of 1799, relied upon yesterday, from the principle contained in the amendment of the committee, and I am glad to find that the honorable member from Vermont [Mr. POLAND] agrees that that distinction was well taken, and I understood his colleague, who offered the amendment which is now before the Senate, to agree also in the same view.

The fourth section has two objects. The first is to provide that the goods illegally imported shall be forfeited. That is one of their amendments, and the second is that the party who imports or the party who comes into possession of the goods knowing them to have been illegally imported shall be personally liable to punishment if convicted.

I have no doubt that the act of 1799 in the provision referred to was clearly within the authority of Congress; and of course we could provide in the same way now; and that is all that is done by the amendment suggested by my friend from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.] But it seems to me that it is unnecessary, because the law will be precisely the same. If we pass the fourth section unchanged in the particular in which it provides that the goods imported shall be liable to be forfeited, then we bring the goods under the operation of the act of 1799, which authorizes the Government to proceed by way of libel against the goods, and the act then provides that whoever comes in and claims the goods as his own shall be compelled to establish his case. That is reenacting the act of 1799, and that is all, as I think.

Mr. GUTHRIE. There is a great necessity for a rigid enactment to prevent the smuggling of imported goods into the country; and in the customs' laws we have always provided for seizures, and under the internal revenue laws goods are liable to seizure after they pass from the hands of the manufacturer if the duties have not been paid. It is impossible to enforce these laws without some such provision.

I have made up my mind to vote for this bill without question, without doing any injustice to my conscience. I take it for granted that every man who imports goods enters them at the custom-house if he intends to do honestly, and I take it for granted that every man who purchases imported goods takes care that he deals with individuals who comply with the law. When I was Secretary of the Treasury I was hunting for the means to prevent smuggling on the Canada coast, and a gentleman introduced to me an individual who he said could give me all the information I desired on that subject, and sent him to me with a little note. I told him that the friend who introduced him wished him to tell me all he knew on the subject. "Well," said he, "when I was engaged in smuggling there was very little profit unless the duty was twenty-five per cent. We had to pay ten per cent. for running the goods across; it had to be done in the night. Then we had to make an allowance of ten per cent. to the merchants who purchased of us, or they would not buy of us, and we could not hide the goods when we got them across; and if there was not five or ten per cent. left to us there was no profit in the business." He explained to me how it was done, and I expect that he gave me a very accurate account.

I think we must go on the presumption that every man who comes into the possession of goods that have been imported into the country is bound to know that they have been regularly entered and the duties paid, and it is his business to know, if he is a regular trader. If a man goes to New York or Boston or any of these eastern ports to buy goods, or if he purchases on the Canada borders, it is his duty to know that the goods have been entered at the custom-house and have paid the duties. If he does not know it, and you make your law so that he is not bound to know it, you encourage smuggling. I am willing to vote for this bill because I think in all our laws on this subject we must assume that it is the duty of the individual who purchases goods upon which there is duty levied to see that they have been regularly entered and the duty paid; and a declaration in your law that he is presumed to know that fact, and that he is guilty if he does not know it is perfectly correct. You will never enforce your revenue laws without such a principle, in my judgment.

Mr. HENDERSON. I understand that if we concur in this amendment, in prosecutions in criminal cases the burden of proof will not lie on the defendant; there will be no presumption against him.

Mr. MORRILL. That is so; that is the effect of it.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is it in order to amend the clause intended to be stricken out before the vote is taken on the other?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.) The Chair thinks that it is in order to amend the portion proposed to be stricken out.

Mr. HENDERSON. My idea is that the establishment of some fact as against the defendant in a criminal prosecution ought to raise a presumption of guilt against him. I think recent possession of goods illegally imported ought to raise the presumption of guilt.

Mr. CLARK. That is a matter for the jury.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MORRILL. I want the first question to come upon the amendment moved by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] which was to the original amendment, applying it to cases of seizure alone.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President—

Mr. McDOUGALL. Allow me to ask a question. Why make a new law of evidence in maritime law? Is there any cause for it?

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no cause whatever. It is the old rule.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Then why make the provision here?

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is just what I am about to explain. The amendment which I offered in committee was agreed to. This amendment of the Committee on Commerce being under consideration in Committee of the Whole yesterday, I proposed the amendment which has been named. That amendment to the committee's amendment reporting the bill was agreed to. Then the whole amendment was agreed to in committee and reported, so that the only question now possible before the Senate is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee of the Whole, if I correctly understand parliamentary law.

Mr. MORRILL. Now, allow me. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Howe] took exception to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont alone, and stated that he desired to try that question of the proposed amendment of the Senator from Vermont applying the rule to cases of seizure. That was the proposition.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator from Wisconsin undertook to make that reservation, it was totally beyond his power and that of the Senate regularly to grant it, because there was no such question pending.

Now, I wish to say a single word on the merits of this question. It is true in my opinion, as my honorable friend from Maryland [Mr. JOHNSON] says, that we are simply in these cases of seizure reenacting what the law now is. I agree to what he states about that. We are also ten lines above reenacting what the law is as to the forfeiture of the goods. That is the law now in both cases. The difficulty we shall get into in the courts where those who are engaged in smuggling retain the astutest counsel they can find, will be this: if we reenact the law as to forfeiture and do not reenact the law as to the burden of proof, it will be immediately contended that we intended to drop it, that we have created a new code, that we have provided a fresh forfeiture, and have failed to provide for the old rule of evidence, and therefore that rule no longer applies; and half the judges of the country will decide so. It is, however, my opinion that the law is the other way; but at all events if we have the cause of forfeiture in we had better have the law of evidence in.

Mr. JOHNSON. It will do no harm.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly not.

Mr. MORRILL. I will settle this question then. We are in the Senate now, and I move to strike out the amendment proposed in committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. An amendment to the amendment is in order.

Mr. MORRILL. I maintain that the clause as it stands is obviously useless, for this reason: the section does not provide nor propose any remedy for goods forfeited; that is provided for by the act of 1799, which also provides the rule upon which the trial of the proceeding shall be had, and therefore it is not necessary in this bill. Now, the only reason for stating the rule of evidence in this bill is because, contrary to all the other acts, we propose to proceed against the person by a prosecution, and in proceeding against the person by a prosecution we say the burden of proof shall be on him in certain conditions. Now, it would be perfectly incongruous to say that in a proceeding, which is the only one provided for by this bill, against the person, cases of seizure shall be proceeded with in a certain way; that is, in a proceeding, the only one provided, which is against the person, you are to make your evidence apply to cases of seizure. That raises the question, and it is the only question raised.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to inquire, in this precise connection, what was the purpose of the Committee on Commerce in introducing into this section the amendment in the eighth line reenacting the law as to the forfeiture of goods. Why did the committee amend by inserting that clause? It is the law already.

Mr. MORRILL. No, I do not say it is the law already; but I say if you proceed against the goods as for forfeiture the remedy is that provided for by the act of 1799.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes; but what is the object of introducing into the section this fresh clause relative to the forfeiture of the goods?

Mr. MORRILL. Because the forfeiture of the goods depends on the manner in which they shall be introduced into the country.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It always has, has it not?

Mr. MORRILL. No, sir; not as provided for in this section.

Mr. HENDERSON. This permits a seizure in such cases as were not provided for before.

Mr. MORRILL. That is what I say. It adds additional circumstances under which goods shall be forfeited.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If that be true, then most certainly there is a new forfeiture here, not already provided for, and we must in that case apply the new onus probandi or we shall lose it.

Mr. MORRILL. That does not follow by any means. All I mean to say, and all that it is necessary to say for this argument, is that there is no provision in this section for a procedure against the goods; there is no provision in this bill to proceed against the goods; and therefore the idea of providing for the burden of proof against goods is not pertinent. It should be against the person. So the question is simply whether it is the sense of the Senate that we ought to change the rule in the case of a prosecution against the person. On that I submit that there are two sides.

Mr. EDMUNDS. One word more. My friend from Maine says that there is no provision in this section for a proceeding against goods, and therefore there is no occasion for a provision regulating the rule of evidence in such cases; but there ought to be a provision regulating the rule of evidence in a proceeding against the person, because such a proceeding is here contemplated. Now, I undertake to declare, without the fear of successful contradiction, that there is exactly the same provision for a proceeding against goods forfeited in this section as there is against the person who has incurred the penalty—exactly as much and no more. But it appears to me to be perfectly plain that there is no provision for a proceeding in the proper sense of the term, against either. The section is merely penal. As applied to goods, the necessary penalty must be forfeiture, because that is the only way you can punish the thing. As to the person, it is fine. The section, therefore, declares that goods brought in under the prohibited circumstances shall be forfeited, and that the person who brings them in shall suffer a fine. That is all. It does not organize the court which is to condemn the goods; it does not organize any admiralty or maritime or seizure court, and provide for libels and answers and claims and proofs and decrees. It does not organize any common-law court, with a jury, to hear, try, and determine an indictment against the defendant for a violation of this law; but it simply, as applied to each class of the objects, provides for imposing a penalty. The penalty against goods is forfeiture necessarily; the penalty against the person is fine. Now, then, as applied to goods, the committee thought it necessary to introduce an amendment to the original bill which declares a forfeiture of goods; and they have thought it necessary to introduce as against the person a clause which provides for a penalty. Then they thought it necessary as to both classes of cases, because, as the amendment originally stood, it applied to both, that the onus probandi should be upon the defendant where probable cause was shown. I thought it wise, upon the argument of my friend from Maryland, who demonstrated, as it appears to me, the propriety of such a rule in an ordinary criminal cause, to limit the application of that rule to those cases which were analogous to the old limitation as applied to that description of proceeding. That amendment has been agreed to, and I hope it will not be stricken out.

Mr. CONNESS. I desire to ask the honorable Senator from Maine, who has reported this bill and prepared this section particularly, if it has been found that without this section, which proposes a penalty as against the person and proposes to put the burden of proof upon the person charged with the offense, the existing law is insufficient. Is the reason for preparing and introducing this section that it has been found that the existing laws providing for a penalty against the person are insufficient?

Mr. MORRILL. In the judgment of the Treasury Department, that was so. The bill was framed at the Treasury Department as originally expressed.

Mr. CONNESS. I would sooner take the opinion of some of the gentlemen of the Senate who are practitioners of the law, members of the bar, than the opinion of the Treasury Department on such a point. I think I can throw some light on this case.

Mr. MORRILL. I thought the honorable Senator asked as to the fact, not as to the law.

Mr. CONNESS. I desire to be understood, because I think I understand something about the difficulty that lies behind this section. My question was, did those who prepared this section prepare the provisions that are made here as against the person who commits the offense because existing statutes were insufficient in that respect, or was it for some other purpose?

Mr. MORRILL. It was simply to enable the Government to prosecute more successfully guilty persons. That was the object, and that alone.

Mr. CONNESS. So they are of opinion, then, at the Treasury Department that guilty persons mostly have escaped.

Mr. MORRILL. That was the opinion.

Mr. CONNESS. To that point I desire to call the attention of the Senate. The existing revenue laws provide for giving one half, I believe, of the amount of the value of seized goods to the customs officers—to the collector, to the naval officer, and to the surveyor of the port.

My experience is (and I have had a little light upon what I am going to say) that the customs officers of the United States have but in rare instances ever instituted prosecutions against persons, when they could seize the goods, and then the persons would fail to claim them, would abandon them, and thus allow a division of the goods that would be profitable to the officers. I can state in reference to the port of San Francisco alone, that in proportion to the amount of business done, which is very great, as many attempts have been made at smuggling or fraudulent importation as, perhaps, at any other port in the Union; and the cases are few and far between (perhaps there never have been half a dozen all told) where prosecutions have been instituted and carried out against the persons engaged in perpetrating the crime. On the contrary, my opinion is—and I have filed at the Treasury Department before this time, official evidence going to show upon the sworn affidavits of subaltern officers of the customs at that port, that again and again information was presented to the collectors, naval officers, and surveyors that fraudulent importations were being made, that the laws were being violated, and the criminals pointed out, but those officers in place of causing arrests to be made and stopping the crime there, refused to do anything of the kind, but bided their time until such a period as they could seize the largest amount of goods, and then upon an abandonment of the goods by the parties who perpetrated the crime, where there could be a division of the goods with them, they abandoned the prosecution and the prosecution was never pressed.

Now, I undertake to say—I cannot speak with certainty, for I am not sufficiently acquainted with the law—that it will be found upon an investigation that the existing laws, without this portion of the act before us, are sufficient already for the punishment of persons engaged in infracting and violating the law; and that the better remedy to compel that to be done would be to take away this immense incentive that exists under the present law in the profits which are given to customs officers by the seizure and confiscation of goods. I have heretofore suggested to the Treasury Department that the law be changed in that respect, and one of the Secretaries, I believe, was in favor of it; indeed, he told me on one occasion that he would recommend such a change as would give a reasonable per centage to the officer, and make it not so much his duty to compromise with crime and get the goods as it was under the existing law. If really the difficulty is in what I point out, if the reason why persons have not been prosecuted and convicted is that this great incentive exists, the incentive should be removed and the law allowed to remain as it is in this respect and officers compelled to do their duty under the law.

I apprehend that the Treasury Department are entirely in the fog, entirely in error in this respect. They have arrived at their conclusions by the Commissioner of Customs, and other officers in that Department. They saw that there were a great many seizures and but few criminal prosecutions; and the disparity between the fraudulent importations and the consequent seizures and the number of prosecutions, led them to the erroneous conclusion that some additional statutory enactments were necessary to prevent that condition of things.

I have no doubt, from the knowledge I have of these affairs that has come to me now for a series of years, that what I state is really the condition of the case, that the law is sufficient already for the punishment of the crime; but that as long as the reward is so great for compromising crime you cannot punish any person. Now, the question is whether you shall make your laws unnecessarily vindictive and throw the burden of proof, in the trial of a person, upon him, when under the law, as it exists, no sufficient effort has ever been made to convict.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the words "in cases of seizure" from the words which the amendment proposes to insert.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes 18, noes 9.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I now move to strike out the whole.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is the very question now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If it is proper to amend the amendment reported by the Committee of the Whole, in one respect it is in all. Now, I move to amend the pending amendment by striking out the words "and the guilty knowledge of the defendant, when convicted of the fact, shall be presumed unless he or she shall prove the contrary;" and also the provision that the burden of proof shall lie upon the defendant where probable cause is shown.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I suggest to the Senator that he will meet it more simply by just taking the vote on concurrence with the amendment made in Committee of the Whole. If that be rejected, if we do not concur, then he can move to strike out the words which may remain.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If that is the whole of the proposition it is the same question.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If we reject the amendment a motion can be made to strike out the original words, and in that way he can put all out.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If I correctly understand the present question it is on agreeing to the amendments reported by the Committee of the Whole, and one of those amendments reported by the Committee of the Whole has just been amended by striking therefrom the words which the Senator from Maine [Mr. MORRILL] proposed to strike out. Now, having agreed to that, the amendment reported by the committee or what remains of it meets my disapproval decidedly. I entirely agree with the Senator from Maryland that it ought not to be adopted as it now stands. If that is the whole of the amendment we can take the question just as well upon agreeing or disagreeing to the amendment. Is that the whole of the amendment now pending?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands it to be the whole of the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I ask for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is it in order to amend that portion by moving to strike out the same matter and insert other matter?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his amendment.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire to strike out the whole of the matter in this section after the word "and," in line thirteen, and to insert:

In all cases where it is proved that any person has imported or brought into the United States, or assisted in so doing, any goods, wares, or merchandise contrary to law, and in cases where any person shall receive, conceal, buy, or sell any such goods, wares, or merchandise contrary to law, it shall be presumed that such person had guilty knowledge of such violation of law, and the burden of showing the contrary shall be upon the party so offending.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not suppose it is in order to move that at this time. The question, I think, must be on concurrence in the amendment made in Committee of the Whole, as amended; but if I understand the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, it does not differ materially from the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. HENDERSON. The difference is this: my amendment declares that upon the establishment of a fact a presumption shall arise; whereas as it now stands it leaves to the court at any stage of the proceedings to declare that the defendant is guilty and that it devolves on him to show his innocence. My amendment establishes a rule, instead of leaving it entirely in the breast of the court.

Mr. MORRILL. I understand it to be substantially this, that provided the Government shall establish the fact of the illegal importation or the fact that aid and assistance were given to facilitate the transportation, then upon the proof of those facts the inference of guilt shall follow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the amendment of the Senator from Missouri is not in order at this time, as it proposes to strike out that which has been partly concurred in and partly not concurred in, and the very question is whether the Senate will concur in that portion.

Mr. HENDERSON. I withdraw it for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate concur in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, as amended?

Mr. HOWE called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 25, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chandler, Cragin, Creswell, Fessenden, Foster, Grimes, Guthrie, Howard, Kirkwood, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Morrill, Nye, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Van Winkle, Wado, Willey, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Conness, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Edmunds, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Howe, Johnson, McDougall, Norton, Poland, and Trumbull—15.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Clark, Cowan, Lane of Indiana, Nesmith, Riddle, Saulsbury, and Wright—9.

So the amendment as amended was concurred in.

The next excepted amendment was in section seven, line three, after the word "days," to insert "after the facts shall come to their knowledge;" so that the section shall read:

That it shall be the duty of the several collectors of customs to report, within ten days after the facts shall come to their knowledge, to the district attorney of the district in which any fine, or personal penalty may be incurred for the violation of any law of the United States relating to the revenue, a statement of all the facts and circumstances, &c.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As the law now stands, if I correctly understand it, it is the duty of the collector of customs or other customs officer making a seizure to report that seizure to the district attorney within ten days after the seizure in order that proceedings may be instituted against the property, when the claimant may, by giving bail or other security, receive his property from the officer, and a trial may be had. This amendment proposes to change that law, and to only make it the duty of the collector to report to the district attorney after the facts come to his knowledge. That means all the facts, I take it; and he may therefore postpone making a report to the district attorney as long as in his discretion it may seem to be desirable. The consequence will be that the district attorney cannot take any proceedings against the property until he gets this report, and the claimant cannot take any proceedings or steps whatever to recover the possession of the property until that is done. In my judgment, it is giving too large a discretion to the collector of customs to effect a purpose of that description. I hope, therefore, that this amendment will not be concurred in, in order that it may be made the duty of the collector or the informing officer to report to the district attorney within a definite time after the seizure, as the law is now.

Mr. MORRILL. I am satisfied that the Senator is right, and that the amendment is obnoxious to the difficulties he suggests, and I hope it will be stricken out. I did not so understand it at first.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I ask the permission of the Senate to call up, with a view to its reading, the veto message received some time since from the Executive.

Mr. CHANDLER. Let us finish this bill first. We can dispose of it in five minutes.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I only desire to have the message read, which should be done at once out of respect to the Executive, and then it can be ordered to be printed and go over until tomorrow.

Mr. MORRILL. Let us dispose of this bill before taking that up. We shall be through in a very short time.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Very well.

The next excepted amendment was to strike out the nineteenth section of the bill in the following words:

SEC. 19. And be it further enacted, That nothing in this act contained shall be taken to abridge or limit any forfeiture, penalty, fine, liability, or remedy provided for or existing under any law now in force.

Mr. MORRILL. That section, I am inclined to think, on further reflection, ought to remain. It was stricken out after the bill was sent to the committee, and the committee gave their assent to striking it out; but since action was taken on striking it out yesterday, I have been to the Treasury Department, and I am afraid that if that section is stricken out certain rights of the Government in forfeitures and penalties which have been provided for in former acts will be impaired. No harm can arise from its being in the bill, and it is safest, on the whole, I think, to allow the section to stand. I therefore hope that the Senate will not concur in the amendment striking out that section.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I agree with my friend from Maine that the section ought not to be stricken out, but I suggest to him whether it would not be well to add "except as herein otherwise specially provided," so as to guard against any double forfeitures or double penalties.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That can be done afterward. Let us non-concur first in the amendment to strike out the section, and then the Senator can amend it.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I now move to amend this nineteenth section by adding the words, "except as herein otherwise specially provided."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next excepted amendment was in section thirty-three, line seventeen, after the word "when" to insert the word "any;" and also to strike out the letter "s" in the word "officers;" in line nineteen to strike out the word "make" and insert "furnish information to he collector leading to a;" in line twenty to strike out the final "s" in the word "seizures;" and also to strike out the word "they" and insert the word "he;" and in line twenty-one after the word "distribution" to insert the words "with such collector, naval officer, or surveyor;" so that the proviso will read:

Provided, That when any officer of the customs, other than the collector, naval officer, or surveyor, shall furnish information to the collector leading to a seizure he shall be entitled to an equal share of the distribution with such collector, naval officer, or surveyor.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to make a single statement about that provision and the effect of it. As the law now is, one half the money arising from seizures is distributed among the collector, surveyor, and naval officer.

Mr. JOHNSON. Equally?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, sir; one half of the whole seizure is distributed among those officers. As it has been amended, this proviso is that the one half shall be divided between the collector, naval officer, or surveyor, and any other officer of the customs furnishing the information leading to the seizure, and that would include appraisers, measurers, &c., which is said to be against the policy of the law. On account of the peculiar duties attached to those officers they have always been excluded. There is no necessity for any change of the law so far as informers are concerned. The committee were under a misapprehension when they amended this proviso, thinking it ought to be extended to all persons who gave information. That is the law now. We have only, therefore, added a further division between another class of officers, which I am told at the Treasury Department is against the policy of the law, on the ground of the peculiar duties that they perform. They are measurers and appraisers, whose duty it is to fix the value of the goods, and therefore they ought not to be subject to this temptation. I hope, therefore, the amendment will be non-concurred in and then I propose to strike out the whole of that proviso.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. MORRILL. I now move to amend that section by striking out the proviso at the end of it, in the following words:

Provided, That when officers of the customs other than the collector, naval officer, or surveyor shall make seizures, they shall be entitled to an equal share of the distribution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next excepted amendment was to strike out the thirty-fifth section of the bill, in the following words:

Sec. 35. And be it further enacted, That in all cases in which the fees and emoluments received by any collector or other principal officer of the customs are, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury, insufficient to afford a reasonable compensation for the services of such officer, after payment out of the same of reasonable incidental expenses of the office, the said Secretary may direct that so much of the said incidental expenses as shall seem to him to be just shall be paid out of the appropriation for paying the expenses of collecting the revenue; and the said Secretary shall have the same power in regard to incidental expenses which have heretofore been incurred and which have not been settled and paid into the Treasury; and all fees paid into the Treasury by customs officers shall be placed to the credit of the fund for defraying expenses of collecting the revenue from customs.

Mr. JOHNSON. I should like to know of the Senator from Maine the reasons for striking out that section.

Mr. MORRILL. I will state all I know in regard to it. It will be seen that this section gives the Secretary of the Treasury authority to pay the expenses at places where the revenue does not produce sufficient to meet the expenses in certain ports. It confers additional power to meet such cases. The necessity for it, it is said, has arisen in the southern ports. The committee had no evidence when it struck out this section of any such case, and had no information of the necessity for it. The information that I have obtained at the Treasury Department this morning is that it is necessary to meet a certain class of cases that have arisen in the insurrectionary States. In opening ports there the business is light, the expenses are large, and this additional authority is deemed by the Secretary of the Treasury to be necessary to meet the new state of circumstances.

Mr. JOHNSON. Why do you propose to strike it out?

Mr. MORRILL. We struck it out before we knew these facts, and the question now is on concurring in the amendment to strike it out.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will inquire of my colleague whether the object sought to be obtained cannot be accomplished substantially by retaining the last part of the section. Heretofore in the disturbed condition of things in the southern States it may have been necessary to incur additional expense in this way; but now that there is no such trouble down there, I am a little averse, unless very good reasons can be given for it, to clothing the Secretary of the Treasury with the power to increase, according to his own judgment, the compensation of officers. I think, from a casual glance I had of it, we might make a distinction between the two classes of cases.

Mr. MORRILL. Very well. I hope the Senate will non-concur in the amendment to strike out the section, and then I will move to amend it by striking out all after the enacting clause down to and including the words "revenue and" in the tenth line.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole striking out this section.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. MORRILL. I now move to strike out all of the section after the word "that" in the first line down to and including the words "revenue and" in the tenth line.

Mr. JOHNSON. That will not do. You will have to change it further.

Mr. MORRILL. Why?

Mr. JOHNSON. Because the subsequent part of the section refers to what you propose to strike out. It reads, "and the said Secretary shall have the same power." What power?

Mr. MORRILL. Then I will strike out the word "same."

Mr. JOHNSON. Then what "power" is referred to?

Mr. FESSENDEN. My impression was, after reading the section, that it could not be amended; that it had better be redrawn.

Mr. MORRILL. There is no difficulty in the particular referred to by the Senator from Maryland, because the Secretary has the power now to pay the incidental expenses that have been incurred.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If he has the power now there is no need of the section, and you had better strike it all out.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think it had better be kept in, because they get nothing down there now. I suggest to my friend from Maine [Mr. MORRILL] that the section had better remain as it was originally drafted.

Mr. McDUGALL. I desire now to renew the suggestion I made a short time since, as there seems to be some misunderstanding and difficulty about this bill, that we take up some other business that belongs to the business of the day. I therefore move to postpone everything else and take up the message of the President of the United States returning with his objections to the bill for the admission of Colorado into the Union.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope that will not be taken up to-night. It is very late.

Mr. WILSON. Has the bill to prevent smuggling been disposed of?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That bill is still before the Senate.

Mr. McDUGALL. I have possession of the floor and have not yielded it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California is entitled to the floor.

Mr. McDUGALL. I insist on my motion that all other business be suspended, and that the Senate proceed to the reading of the message of the President of the United States returning the Colorado bill to this body.

Mr. MORRILL. I am very desirous of disposing of the bill before the Senate. I think we can pass it in five or ten minutes more.

Mr. McDUGALL. Oh, no; it cannot be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California withdraw his motion?

Mr. McDUGALL. I only want to have the message read and ordered to be printed; that is all.

Mr. MORRILL. You had better withdraw it for the present.

Mr. McDUGALL. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is withdrawn, and the question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine to the thirty-fifth section of the bill.

Mr. MORRILL. I withdraw that amendment. It has been suggested to me that the section had better stand as it is in the bill.

I will inquire how the question stands in regard to that section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate did not concur in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, and therefore the section now stands in the bill.

Mr. MORRILL. Very well; then I will make no motion in regard to it. I move further to amend the bill in section thirty-one, line twelve, after the word "naval officer," to strike out the words "surveyor of customs;" so that it will read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized, whenever he shall think it advantageous to the public service or revenue, to abolish or suspend the office of naval officer, or any subordinate office, in any collection district of the United States, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to move an amendment to the third section of the bill. It is to add the following proviso:

Provided, That no railway car or engine shall be subject to forfeiture by force of the provisions of this act, unless it shall appear that the owner, or agent of the owner in charge thereof at the time of such unlawful importation or transportation thereon or thereby, was a consenting party, or privy to such illegal importation or transportation.

It is well known to everybody on the northern frontier that it is perfectly impossible for railway companies to guard against the introduction of contraband goods, to some extent or other, in their trains. They take, like a carrier by the sea, the manifests and invoices of the owner, and the contents of the packages are stated, and they put them in their trains and bring them along. Now, by the force of this section as it stands, while in the same case a steamboat on Lake Champlain or Lake Michigan, for instance, would not be forfeited by bringing in a contraband package, a railroad train from Montreal to St. Albans, in Vermont, or from Montreal to Portland, in Maine, would be subject to forfeiture. That I believe to be unjust; and therefore my object is to limit these cases of forfeiture on railway trains doing an immense business, and which cannot get information about all these things, to cases where the conductor in charge, the agent of the owners, had guilty knowledge of the fact.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I wish to ask the Senator from Vermont if he has looked at that section; I have not; but I have got the impression that it gives extraordinary powers with reference to stopping railroad trains.

Mr. MORRILL. No, sir; it does not mention railroad trains.

Mr. FESSENDEN. But it speaks of all sorts of vehicles. Now, if the officer, because he finds two or three contraband packages, is to take the whole train into his possession, it would create a confusion with regard to transportation that would be very onerous indeed, and that ought to be guarded against. That kind of transportation does not stand like anything else. A train is a vehicle, according to the definition given here, and if the officer finds that there are smuggled goods on board he is to take possession of the vehicle, the car, the engine, &c. Now, where these trains are coming from another section the consequence would be that if an officer found any contraband packages on board he would stop the train and take possession of it. That would create infinite difficulties, because a railroad train is so unlike any other kind of transportation; and that ought to be carefully guarded against. If Senators have examined the section carefully, so as to be sure that that consequence would not follow, and it would create no particular difficulty, I will not object. I have not examined it myself sufficiently to determine that question.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think we shall be obliged to submit to the inconvenience which has been mentioned by the Senator from Maine. It will be impossible to have the inspection laws vigorously and faithfully executed unless the officer has power to stop a train for the purpose of inspection, if he thinks it necessary and proper to do so, just as he may stop a vessel or anything else. Of course, it is a large power, and may be abused; but I am satisfied, from the means of observation I have had, that it is a power which it is necessary for the protection of the revenue should be confided to these officers. There is not much danger of their abusing this power of inspection. They must have the power to stop the train for the purpose of inspection. That is about the substance of it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I know that; but if the train is to be forfeited then, of course, they take possession of the train.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I propose to provide for that in the amendment which I have offered.

Mr. MORRILL. I should like to have the amendment read at the desk.

The Secretary read it.

Mr. MORRILL. The difficulty that occurs to me is about establishing the ownership. The language of the amendment is "the owner or agent of the owner." Ought it not to be so broad as to include any of the agents of the company, the conductor or any officer?

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not think a train ought to be forfeited for the act of the conductor.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That part of the amendment provides that if the responsible party, the manager in charge of the train, has the guilty knowledge, then the train or car is subject to forfeiture; but if the responsible manager, or the conductor, is not guilty of any impropriety, then I think it would be too hard, if the engine-driver, or stoker, or brakeman should happen to be smuggling in a small keg of brandy, that the owner should be subjected to the forfeiture of the train for that reason. I think that is going too far.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then say the agent of the company.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have said the owner, and that must be the company or the private person who owns the car or engine. Many of the northern roads are not owned by companies, but by private persons, who are trustees. Hence the term "owner, or agent of the owner in charge," it appears to me, covers both classes of controlling parties, the proprietor or the agent of the proprietor who has control of the train. If any language can be found to express the idea better, I shall certainly be very glad to accept it.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not know but that that answers the purpose; but it seems to me it will not be possible to bring a guilty knowledge of the fact to the owner.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is in the alternative.

Mr. CHANDLER. Say "owner or agent."

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is exactly the language of my amendment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Had you not better put in the word "superintendent?" All these companies have superintendents.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well; I have no objection to inserting the word "superintendent" after the word "owner," or in place of it, as may be most agreeable.

Mr. CLARK. Let the amendment be read with that word in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read as modified.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

Provided, That no railway car or engine shall be subject to forfeiture by force of the provisions of this act unless it shall appear that the owner, superintendent, or agent of the owner in charge thereof at the time of such unlawful importation or transportation thereon or thereby was a consenting party, or privy to such illegal importation or transportation.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. HOWE. The second and third sections of this bill speak of the seizure, search, and examination of all trunks, packages, and envelopes. It seems to me that language is broad enough to cover the United States mails. I suppose it is not the purpose of the bill to authorize the examination of the United States mails.

Mr. MORRILL. Of course not.

Mr. HOWE. I propose to offer an amendment to prevent such a construction.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no danger of such a construction being placed upon this language. It is the language usually employed in these bills.

Mr. HOWE. If gentlemen are perfectly confident that it will bear no such construction, and will receive no such construction, I do not care to press it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin withdraws his amendment.

Mr. HOWE. I will suggest another amendment, in section three, line thirty-nine, to strike out the word "appoint," and insert the words "for the employment of;" so that the clause will read:

And the Secretary of the Treasury may from time to time prescribe regulations for the search of persons and baggage, and for the employment of female inspectors for the examination and search of persons of their own sex.

The amendment was agreed to.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 134) relative to appointments in the Military Academy of the United States was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

Mr. FESSENDEN. For the purpose of having the bill which I wish to take up in the morning left as the unfinished business, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill.

Mr. SUMNER. There is House bill No. 11, on which the Senate has been engaged for several days, and on which we are just on the verge of a vote, which I think had better be taken up.

Mr. FESSENDEN. What bill is that?

Mr. SUMNER. It is the New Jersey railroad bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We shall not get through with that for six weeks to come.

Mr. SUMNER. We have got to the end of the discussion upon it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I shall not withdraw my motion for that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine moves to take up the bill (H. R. No. 261) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes.

Mr. SUMNER. I should like to interpose the other bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator can try a vote upon it. You cannot interpose it unless you vote my motion down.

Mr. SUMNER. Then I hope the Senate will not take up the appropriation bill until the other bill is disposed of.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Let us adjourn.

Mr. SUMNER. Very well; I think we had better adjourn.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Oh, no; let us have a vote on this question first.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine.

The motion was agreed to—ayes twenty, noes not counted.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. McDUGALL. I have twice before asked, and now again ask, for the reading of the veto message of the President. I merely desire to have it read and printed. I want to see what it is. I am not informed. It is a matter of importance, and it should be read. That is all I desire.

Mr. STEWART. Take an order to print without reading it.

Mr. McDUGALL. No; it should be read and printed.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I insist on my motion.

Mr. McDUGALL. This can be done in five minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. McDUGALL. On that question, I call for the yeas and nays. I want to see whether—

Mr. SUMNER. Order!

Mr. McDUGALL. Mr. President, I address you, and I have the floor. When a message comes to this body from the President of the United States, without regard to the individual, but out of regard to his high office, it is, as a matter of courtesy, the duty of the Senate on the first opportunity to hear what he may have to say why he did not indorse the proceedings of the two Houses of Congress. That is a courtesy that has always been observed, and never unobserved, I think, until this day; at least, this will be the first time when it has been refused.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will simply say in answer to that—

Mr. McDUGALL. I am speaking to the question, sir. It is in the course and order of proceeding that a message of the President of the United States should be read to the House to which he sends the message on the first opportunity, not interfering with the pending business; and that would be the pending business of the moment. It should have been read some hours since. It has not been read as yet. I do not know what it is. I want to see what advice is contained in the counsel he may convey to me as a Senator of the United States and to other Senators of the United States; for under the system of Government under which we live, when the tribune of the people says, "I forbid" for "I have cause; I think you are in error; I think passion may have been uppermost and reason may have been overthrown;" we should receive his message with all the consideration which belongs to a high body of which he is an equivalent, not a superior. It has come here, and has been on our desk, now, for hours. There is, it seems to me, a perverse, adverse spirit not disposed to extend to his statement of his objections the courtesy that always has been extended to men who occupied his high place in years gone by. We are not happy in wandering from our former paths. We are wandering, and wandering into the wilderness. How soon we may get lost, none but Him alone knoweth. I say it is our bounden duty to hear that message read now, and have it printed for the advice of the Senate. I ask that it may now be read and printed; and that is the motion which I made some time ago, when I had the floor, but waived it. It is my right to move it now, and I make that motion that the message be read and printed.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The question now is simply on the call for the yeas and nays, as I understand it, on the motion to go into executive session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the motion to go into executive session the Senator from California asks for the yeas and nays.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is the motion before the Senate, and the only one that can be in order. They have not yet been ordered.

Mr. McDUGALL. Very well; I trust they will not be ordered until this thing be done.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I wish simply to say that if by any possibility the motion I have made could be construed into any disrespect of the Chief Magistrate, that at this late hour we let his message go over until the morning before having it read, in order that we may have a full Senate, I certainly would withdraw it for that purpose; but as I have no such intention, and as the idea of disrespect to the President is entirely imaginary, I shall insist on my motion and let the yeas and nays be taken upon it if Senators call for them. That is the motion before the Senate.

Mr. McDUGALL. I do not charge the Senator from Maine—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the duty of the Chair to suggest that on the question of going into executive session extended debate is not allowed in the Senate.

Mr. McDUGALL. I shall not go beyond the question of going into executive session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Upon that question a mere expression of opinion is allowed.

Mr. McDUGALL. I will confine myself to that, and all my remarks have relation to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. But the question of going into executive session is not debatable.

Mr. McDUGALL. Very well. Allow me to remark, then, to the Senator from Maine—and I want it marked down with exact periods—this is the first time that for hours a message from the President upon an important public question, a brief message, requiring no time to read it, has been denied a hearing in the Senate of the United States, when this was the body to whom the bill was returned; and I hold it to be a vindictive assault upon the Chief Executive.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Upon the motion to go into executive session the Senator from California asks for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the motion of the Senator from Maine to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and after some time spent in executive session, the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, May 15, 1866.

The House met at twelve o'clock m.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ADDRESS FROM SWISS CANTONS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House an address from Swiss Cantons in favor of emancipation, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

RECONSTRUCTION.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent to present, that it may be printed, an amendment which I intend to offer to House bill No. 543, to provide for restoring to the States lately in insurrection their full political rights.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the proposed amendment will be ordered to be printed.

There was no objection.

The amendment proposes to strike out all after the enacting clause in the first section of the bill, and insert the following:

That whenever the above-recited amendment shall have become part of the Constitution of the United States, and any State lately in insurrection shall have ratified the same, and shall have modified its constitution and laws in conformity therewith, the Senators and Representatives from such State, if found duly elected and qualified, may, after having taken the required oaths of office, be admitted into Congress as such: Provided, That if any State after ratifying said amendment, and conforming its constitution and laws therewith, shall establish an equal and just system of suffrage for all male citizens within its jurisdiction who are not less than twenty-one years of age, the Senators and Representatives from such State shall be admitted as aforesaid, without being required to await the action of other States on such amendment: And provided further, That nothing in this section contained shall be so construed as to require the disfranchisement of any loyal person who is now entitled to vote.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. BROMWELL asked leave of absence for Mr. Moulton for ten days.

Leave was granted.

AMERICAN COTTON COMPANY.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to incorporate the American Cotton Company of the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

SOLDIERS' AND SAILORS' ORPHANS' FAIR.

On motion of Mr. LYNCH, by unanimous consent, a joint resolution (S. R. No. 88) authorizing the Secretary of War to grant the use of certain lumber for the fair for the Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphan Home, was taken from the Speaker's table, and read a first and second time.

It proposes to authorize the Secretary of War to grant the use of lumber, not demanded by the Department for immediate use, for the erection of temporary buildings in the city of Washington for the national fair for the benefit of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphan Home.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. LYNCH moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DUNDAS PATENT.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to communicate to this House whether any application has been made for the reissue of the Dundas patent for cultivator, and if so, by whom, and at what time, and upon what grounds, and to transmit to this House copies of all the papers and documents connected with the application; and also to state what effect it will have upon the agricultural interest to reissue said patent and have the same relate back and cover the essential improvements made since the year 1851. And also further to communicate what further legislation is necessary to protect the interests of the public in regard to such reissues of patents.

Mr. JENCKES. I object to the resolution.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. It is a matter which strikes at the interest of every agriculturist of the country. It is only for information.

Mr. JENCKES. I do not object to its introduction for reference to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I desire to get the information for reference to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. JENCKES. It should come from the committee.

REIMBURSEMENT TO WEST VIRGINIA.

On motion of Mr. HUBBARD, of West Virginia, Senate bill No. 280, to reimburse the State of West Virginia for moneys expended for the United States in enrolling, equipping, and paying military forces to aid in suppressing the rebellion, was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move to reconsider the vote just taken; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HUBBARD, of West Virginia, also presented joint resolutions of the Legislature of West Virginia on the same subject; which were referred to the Committee of Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MEMPHIS RIOT.

Mr. BOUTWELL asked to be excused from service on the select committee on the Memphis riot.

It was ordered accordingly.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. KASSON, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported back Senate amendments to House bill No. 280, making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes.

First amendment:

Insert at the end of the first section of the bill the following:
To enable the Superintendent of the Naval Observatory to carry out the object of Senate resolution of March 19, 1866, for report of Isthmus routes to the Pacific ocean, $1,500.

Mr. KASSON. The committee recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Second amendment:

Strike out the following words: "To take effect so soon as Brazil shall have performed the condition on her part provided in the law authorizing said service;" so it will read:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the following sums, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same are hereby, appropriated for the year ending June 30, 1867, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated:

Mr. KASSON. The committee recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Third amendment:

Add the words just stricken out, so that the paragraph will read:

For the mail steamship service between the United States and Brazil, $150,000: Provided, That this appropriation shall take effect only when Brazil shall have performed the condition on her part provided in the law authorizing said service.

Mr. KASSON. The committee recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Fourth amendment:

Add:

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That the Postmaster General be, and is hereby, required to report to the Secretary of the Treasury annually, prior to the 1st day of November of each year, his estimate of the money required for the service of the Post Office Department for the ensuing fiscal year: which estimate shall be reported to Congress with the printed estimates of appropriations required by the joint resolution of the 7th of January, 1846.

Mr. KASSON. The committee recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Fifth amendment:

Add:

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That the balance of the appropriation of $100,000 under the thirteenth section of an act to establish a postal money-order system, approved May 17, 1864, which may remain unexpended at the close of the present fiscal year, may be used as far as necessary to supply deficiencies in the proceeds of the money-order system during the fiscal year commencing July 1, 1866.

Mr. KASSON. The committee recommend concurrence.

The amendment was concurred in.

Sixth amendment:

Add:

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That all advertising notices for proposals for contracts for the Post Office Department, and all advertising notices for proposals for contracts for the Executive Departments of the Government required by law to be published in the city of Washington, shall be hereafter advertised by publication in two daily newspapers in the city of Washington having the largest circulation; and to no others: Provided, That the charges for such publications shall not be higher than what is paid by individuals for advertising in such papers: Provided also, The publications shall be made in each of said papers equally as to frequency; and that the circulation of such papers shall be determined upon the 10th day of June annually; and the publishers of all papers competing for such advertising shall furnish a sworn statement of their bona fide paid circulation of each regular issue for the preceding three months; and shall in like manner certify under oath that such circulation has not, during the said three months, been increased by any gratuitous circulation, by a reduction in price below the ordinary and usual price of such papers, or by any other means, for the purpose of obtaining the official advertising: Provided, That the charge for such advertising shall not be greater than is paid for the same publications in other cities; or at a higher rate than is paid by individuals for like advertising.

Mr. KASSON. The committee recommend concurrence in this amendment. There are one or two repetitions in it, but it is not worth while to send it back to the Senate.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. KASSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BREVET PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

Mr. SCHENCK, by unanimous consent, introduced the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to communicate to this House, at as early a day as practicable, a statement of every promotion by brevet of officers in the regular Army made since the 12th day of April, 1861, and that he indicate, in the list furnished, the absolute or full rank in the line or staff of each officer so brevetted, the time from which such brevet rank takes effect, whether the appointment or nomination has been confirmed by the Senate, and if so, at what date; specifying and setting forth, also, in each case the particular "gallant action" or the exact kind of "meritorious conduct" or service, and in what arm of the service or department rendered, for which such brevet promotion was conferred, whether the same be mentioned or described in the letter of appointment or commission or not.

PENSION AGENTS.

Mr. TAYLOR, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Whereas it is the practice of United States pension agents to deduct from the pensions of widows, orphans, and decrepit soldiers, wherever they draw their pensions, the sum of forty or fifty cents under the pretense that it is a fee allowed by law for making out pension papers, which practice has become the cause of much complaint; Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Invalid Pensions be, and are hereby, instructed to inquire into the expediency and propriety of so amending or modifying the present pension laws, if that be necessary, as will require pension agents to pay full pensions to those who are or may be entitled to receive them, and to report by bill or otherwise.

COMMISSIONER OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds in reply to a resolution of the House of the 10th instant in regard to clerks employed, their former occupation, &c.; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

APPOINTMENTS TO THE MILITARY ACADEMY.

Mr. SCHENCK, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred House joint resolution No. 184, relative to appointments to the Military Academy of the United States, with leave to report at any time, reported back the same with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, as follows:

That the age for the admission of cadets to the United States Military Academy shall hereafter be between seventeen and twenty-two years; but any person who has served honorably and faithfully not less than one year as an officer or enlisted man in the Army of the United States, either as a volunteer or in the regular service, in the late war for the suppression of rebellion, and who possesses the other qualifications prescribed by law, shall be eligible to appointment up to the age of twenty-four years.

And be it further resolved, That cadets at the Military Academy shall hereafter be appointed one year in advance of the time of their admission, except in cases where by reason of death or other cause a vacancy occurs which cannot be thus provided for by such appointment in advance; but no pay or allowance shall be made to any such appointee until he shall be regularly admitted on examination as now provided by law; nor shall this provision apply to appointments to be made in the present year; and in addition to the requirements necessary for admission, as provided by the third section of the act making further provision for the corps of engineers, approved April 29, 1812, candidates shall be required to have a knowledge of the elements of English grammar, of descriptive geography, particularly of our own country, and of the history of the United States.

Mr. THAYER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question. By what time, in the ordinary course of human events, does he think a man who enters the Military Academy at the age of twenty-four years can be made captain?

Mr. SCHENCK. That would depend very much upon whether we continued in a state of peace or became again involved in war.

Mr. THAYER. I think that about the time he is ready to be appointed captain he would be in a condition to go upon the retired list.

Mr. SCHENCK. The House will understand that the provision to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. THAYER] now directs attention is simply this: we propose to extend the age at which a person may enter the Military Academy to seventeen years instead of sixteen years, as it now is. That has been recommended by more than one board of visitors, in consequence of the fact that the young men are found not to be able physically to endure the hardship of the service at West Point at the age of sixteen years. And we propose to make it seventeen years, and then put a year on the other end, making the maximum age at which they can enter twenty-two years instead of twenty-one years.

And the committee further propose that in the cases of those who have served faithfully for one year in the last war, either in the volunteer service or in the regular Army, shall have the benefit of two years, in consideration of that service, in entering the Academy at West Point. Of course, this provision will exhaust itself in the course of the next three or four years, for there will then be no candidates to which it can apply. The committee thought it but proper that this should be held out as a sort of bonus or compensation to these young men for that portion of their time which has been cut out of their lives, as it were; that there should be added to the time when they can enter the Military Academy the term of two years, so they may have the opportunity of obtaining the benefit of a further military education, if they can get the appointment, in addition to the practical military education they have obtained in the field. It does not amount to much; but it is something.

Mr. THAYER. I would vote cheerfully for anything that would benefit the class of officers to whom the chairman of the Military Committee [Mr. SCHENCK] has referred; but it seems to me to be a very equivocal kind of benefit to propose that a gentleman of the age of twenty-four years shall be allowed to enter the Military Academy, for by the time he graduates and is eligible to appointment as a brevet second lieutenant he will be twenty-eight years of age.

Mr. SCHENCK. The gentleman may perhaps not be aware that in filling the five hundred and sixty-four vacancies in the grades of first and second lieutenants of the regular Army, it is found that the candidates for those positions include not merely those who have served in the late war as lieutenants, but many captains and field officers, and even some who have attained the rank of brigadier general in the volunteer service. It is found that men who have obtained some experience of military life during the war, and have acquired some practical knowledge of the service, desire to continue in the service, even in instances where they have become brigadier generals. In almost numberless cases, where they have become field officers, they are willing to be turned back and enter the service again as second lieutenants. Now, if that can be taken as a sample of what may be expected, there will be found many young men whose devotion to civil pursuits has been interrupted by the war, who will be glad to enter West Point even up to the age of twenty-four years, if vacancies shall occur in the districts in which they reside and they can secure the appointments.

I now call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the substitute was agreed to.

The joint resolution, as amended, was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RECONSTRUCTION.

Mr. MORRILL. I now call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is House bill No. 543, to provide for restoring to the States lately in insurrection their full political rights, which was reported from the committee on reconstruction, and made the special order for Wednesday last, after the reading of the Journal, and now reached for the first time.

Mr. STEVENS. I learn that the Senate will not probably proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which we have sent to them, until this day week. It will therefore be very awkward to proceed to the consideration of this bill until the Senate shall have acted one way or the other upon the joint resolution we have sent them, inasmuch as this bill recites the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States as having been acted upon and submitted to the Legislatures of the several States. I therefore move to postpone the further consideration of this bill until after the reading of the Journal until this day two weeks.

Mr. BINGHAM. I hope that this bill will not be postponed for so long a time as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] has proposed. The recital in this bill can no more be urged against the consideration of it before the Senate shall act upon the constitutional amendment recited in it than it could be urged against the enacting clause of any bill originating in this House, that because the Senate had not acted upon and passed it the House could not truthfully declare and enact the words "be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives." The suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] would have as much force in the one case as the other. I hope, therefore, this House, if they deem this bill of any importance, will not postpone its consideration any longer than until after the reading of the Journal on Monday next. Let the House do its duty. If it is necessary to pass the entire scheme for the reconstruction of the States lately in insurrection, as reported by the joint committee on reconstruction, then let the House do its duty, its whole duty, and leave the responsibility with the Senate, where it belongs. Suppose the Senate do not act on the constitutional amendment for two weeks or four weeks or two months; are we to stand idle here looking on to see whether the Senate will act upon the amendment before we act upon the other measures necessary to the restoration of the insurrectionary States?

The American people expect this Congress to present to them a system of measures full and complete for the restoration of the States lately in insurrection, depending alone for final consummation upon the sovereign will of the organized States of this Union and the people of the disorganized States, acting under your law.

In this connection I desire to make one other remark. There are now one or two State Legislatures in session. If it shall be the pleasure of this House to amend the bill now under consideration so as to permit the States lately in insurrection, by the solemn ratification of the amendment to the Constitution which is proposed to them, and by conforming their own constitutions and laws thereunto, to be represented in the Congress of the United States, then it becomes a matter of some importance that Congress shall give them the opportunity to do so while their Legislatures are in session. The House has a duty to perform to that end as well as the Senate. So far as I understand, there is but one Legislature of a State lately in insurrection now in session, and that is the Legislature of the State of Tennessee. Now, I do not know that it will be the pleasure of the House to change this bill in the respect I have indicated; if that change is to be made, then the sooner the House make that change the better, so that the Legislature of Tennessee may indicate its readiness, upon the passage of the bill of the Senate, to accept the terms.

But whether the House shall make that change or not, it is well known that there is a Legislature of a northern State now in session—I mean the Legislature of the State of Connecticut. And therefore, if this bill is to pass in the form in which it came from the committee, it is important that it should pass, as well as the joint resolution proposing the amendment to the Constitution of the United States, in order to allow the Legislature of Connecticut to ratify your amendment, with the knowledge that until it is made part of the Constitution the insurrectionary States cannot be admitted to representation, and thus take that step for the restoration of those States and the reestablishment of the Constitution and the laws over every rood of the lately insurgent territory.

I hope, therefore, if the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] desires to take up and consider the revenue bill, that this bill for reconstruction and restoration will not be postponed longer than until Monday next after the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. This bill could not come up next Monday immediately after the reading of the Journal, for the morning hour of that day has been set apart especially for another measure.

Mr. BINGHAM. Then say Tuesday next, after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. STEVENS. I must say that I do not understand what the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BINGHAM] means. I thought it was understood that this bill should take the course I have indicated, but it so happens that my friend from Ohio never agrees long to what he and the rest of the committee may agree to at any time upon any particular point.

Mr. BINGHAM. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I never understood any such thing.

Mr. STEVENS. I do not understand the force of the objection of the gentleman from Ohio when he says that we ought to go on and pass this bill so that it may be presented to the Legislatures now in session. These bills which have been reported from the joint committee on reconstruction are not to be presented to the Legislatures now in session or to any Legislatures, whether now in session or not. It is only the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States which is to be submitted to the Legislatures of the several States for their action. Therefore, whether we proceed to pass this bill to-day or two weeks hence will not make a particle of difference in that respect.

The gentleman is mistaken; a confusion of ideas has taken possession of his mind, generally so clear, when he supposes that it is necessary to proceed with the consideration of this bill now in order to enable the proposed amendment to the Constitution to be ratified by the State Legislatures. The moment the Senate shall pass the amendment, if they do pass it, it will be sent to the Legislatures of the various States for their action, whether we pass this bill or not, and before we have passed any bill.

Mr. BINGHAM. With all respect to my venerable friend, I must say that the "confusion of ideas" is with himself. The remark I made was this, that if this bill be amended the Legislature of one of these insurrectionary States is now in session—

Mr. STEVENS. The gentleman mentioned several northern States.

Mr. BINGHAM. I mentioned the several northern States in regard to the other matter. In regard to the several northern States, if the bill is to pass as reported by the committee, it might become a matter of very serious consideration with the Legislature of a northern State whether it should not before action upon the question look into the conditions of this bill and ascertain the will of Congress, to wit, that this constitutional amendment must first become a part of the Constitution of the United States before any State lately in insurrection, by adopting it and conforming its own constitution and laws to it, can be restored to representation in Congress. That becomes a very serious matter in this respect, if we want speedy restoration of these States. If this bill is to pass as it came from the committee and without amendment, it will, I submit to the House, be necessary that the Legislatures of all the northern States, except those whose Legislatures may be in session, shall be convened as soon as practicable for the purpose of ratifying this amendment and laying the foundation, according to the very terms of your bill, for the restoration of the late insurrectionary States. As the measures stand before the House, if they are not changed in one line or word, they are to be taken as an entirety, and the whole people of this country, therefore, have a direct interest in the final action of Congress upon them, and ought to know our final action before being called upon to act upon them. If the measures be finally passed as they now stand, the constitutional amendment must be first ratified by the northern States or three fourths of the States now represented in Congress before any of the insurrectionary States may ratify it, reorganize their government, and be admitted to representation. Upon that state of the case, I am sure gentlemen who desire the speedy restoration of those States cannot favor any unnecessary postponement of this bill.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. Speaker, the proposed amendment to the Constitution may be a good and perfect amendment, without any reference to the bills which are to be passed in furtherance of that amendment or to carry it into effect, or what is more, without reference to bills making exceptions with regard to those who shall hold office. It may be that the bill disfranchising or rendering ineligible to office certain persons in the southern States may or may not pass; but how does that affect the constitutional amendment? Not in the least. There is no reference to it in the constitutional amendment. So also with regard to the other bills which declare certain things with regard to those States. Each of them stands by itself. One may fall and the other may stand, without affecting the constitutional amendment at all. None of those bills are submitted to the States of the Union; none of them are submitted to the northern States. Therefore the plea of the gentleman amounts to nothing.

But the first bill which now comes before us for consideration recites that Congress has submitted to the Legislatures of the different States certain propositions for amendment of the Constitution, reciting the very amendment which we have sent to the Senate. Now, it is not true that Congress has submitted such an amendment to the respective State Legislatures. As it stands at present, that recital is a falsehood upon the face of the bill. Now, in what position would this House place itself if we should go on and pass this bill making that recital, and the Senate should fail to pass the measure which we have recited as passed? It would make us look ridiculous. It is an absurdity to ask it; and I do not understand why it should be asked, unless to render this House more ridiculous than it can be made in any other way.

I trust, therefore, that the business of the House will not be needlessly interrupted and the time of the House wasted in the consideration and passage of bills which may become nugatory by the action of the Senate. When the Senate shall have concurred in our action on the constitutional amendment it will be time enough for us to go on and pass the bill reciting the action of both branches of Congress. I think, therefore, that this day two weeks hence, when we shall have got through other business now before us, it will be time enough to take up this bill. The constitutional amendment, as I have learned this morning, will not come up in the Senate till Tuesday of next week; and a week will probably be required to discuss the proposition.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I trust that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] will consent that the postponement shall be until after the expiration of the morning hour on the day named. Let us have the morning hour for reports of committees.

Mr. SCHENCK. With the permission of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I would make a further inquiry, not merely as to the propriety of having this special order come up after the morning hour so as to save the current business of the House, but as to the necessity of postponing at all House bill No. 544, declaring certain persons ineligible to office under the Government of the United States. All the reasons assigned by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] apply to that bill.

A part of the scheme reported by the committee on reconstruction is the House bill No. 544, declaring certain persons ineligible to office under the Government of the United States. It seems to me as a part of the scheme of reconstruction it should be taken up and postponed with the other bill. Thus we will so far indicate to the Senate and the country what we are ready and prepared to do in reference to one item in this account rendered from the committee on reconstruction.

Mr. STEVENS. I have not spoken of that bill because I believe it comes up to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state if this bill be postponed the other bill will come up immediately.

Mr. STEVENS. I am only speaking of the one now before the House. I agree to the suggestion of the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary that this bill shall be postponed until after the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. That will put it behind House bill No. 450, to reduce and establish the pay of officers, and to regulate the pay of soldiers of the Army of the United States.

Mr. STEVENS. Then I will let it stand as it is.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs that, by unanimous consent, that bill shall follow after the morning hour. It will lose nothing by it.

Mr. SCHENCK. Although we are prepared and disposed to go on with that bill, I am willing it shall come in after the bills on reconstruction, unless it shall come up in regular order before. This I do with the understanding it will induce the gentleman to save the morning hour to the current business.

Mr. BINGHAM. I move that the bill be postponed for one week, to come up after the morning hour; and on that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and it was decided in the negative—yeas 55, nays 73, not voting 55; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ames, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Bidwell, Bingham, Brandegee, Bromwell, Broomall, Reader W. Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Culom, Dawes, DeForest, Delano, Deming, Donnelly, Driggs, Eckley, Eggleston, Ferry, Griswold, Hayes, Henderson, Higby, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, James R. Hubbard, Hulburd, Jenckes, Kasson, Ketcham, Kuykendall, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Marston, McKee, Moorhead, Newell, Perham, Plants, Price, William H. Randall, Schenck, Spaulding, Stillwell, Van Aernam, Henry D. Washburn, Welker, Whaley, and Windom—55.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Baxter, Benjamin, Bergen, Blaine, Blow, Boutwell, Boyer, Chanler, Sidney Clarke, Conkling, Darling, Davis, Denison, Dumont, Eldridge, Finck, Garfield, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Grider, Aaron Harding, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Hogan, Holmes, Hotchkiss, Demas Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Ingersoll, Julian, Kelley, Kerr, Ladin, Latham, Le Blond, Loan, Longyear, McClure, McCullough, McRae, Mercer, Miller, Morrill, Niblack, Nicholson, Orth, Paine, Pike, Ritter, Rogers, Rollins, Ross, Sawyer, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Stevens, Strouse, Taber, Taylor, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Trimble, Bart Van Horn, Ward, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Woodbridge, and Wright—73.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Allen, Allison, Banks, Barker, Beaman, Buckland, Burd, Coffroth, Culver, Dawson, Dixon, Dodge, Eliot, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Grinnell, Hale, Harris, Hill, Hooper, James Humphrey, James M. Humphrey, Johnson, Jones, Kelso, Lynch, Marshall, Marvin, McAdoo, Morris, Moulton, Myers, Nocli, O'Neill, Patterson, Phelps, Pomeroy, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rousseau, Scofield, Shellabarger, Sloan, Smith, Starr, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trowbridge, Upson, Robert T. Van Horn, Wentworth, and Winfield—55.

So the motion was disagreed to.

The question then recurred on the motion to postpone for two weeks, after the morning hour.

The motion was agreed to.

INELIGIBILITY OF REBELS.

The SPEAKER stated the next business in order to be a bill (H. R. No. 544) declaring certain persons ineligible to office under the Government of the United States.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that be postponed to the day following the bill just disposed of.

Mr. PRICE. Is that debatable?

The SPEAKER. To a limited extent, but not as to the merits of the whole question.

Mr. PRICE. I cannot consent to let the vote be taken without saying a few words why the bill should not be postponed. The bill is looked on by all loyal men North and South as vital to the interests of this Government, and I am amazed that we do not pass it at once.

The people have been asking, and nobody has been able to answer the question, why the committee have failed for so long a time to give us something definite to act upon; and now after nearly six months have elapsed and the country has been advertised that the bill is before the House and the people have been demanding that something ought to be done in reference to the question, a motion is made very coolly to postpone it for two weeks longer. And I am informed by my friend on my right [Mr. BRANDEGEE] that the motion to postpone the previous bill received the united vote of the Democratic party. That, sir, ought to go on record. The last bill had it, and the fair presumption is that this bill will have it. I will not charge that, because I would fain hope even against hope that the Democratic party here will not vote to postpone this bill as they voted to postpone the last. They are not accountable, however, for our action, and I enter my solemn protest, for one, against the further postponement of this question, which is one of such vital interest to the country.

If rebels are to be disfranchised let us say so at once and not dodge the issue. We are as well prepared to act upon the question now as two weeks or two months or two years hence. We have considered the matter from every standpoint for six months, and if members of this House are not prepared to vote upon it, I think I am safe in saying that everybody out of Congress is prepared to do it if they have an opportunity. Go into any part of the country to-day and talk to your constituencies, and you will be met by this question, "Why do you not give us some platform of principles or indicate to us what you propose to do in reference to allowing these States to come back into the Union, and upon what terms you propose to readmit them?"

Hitherto we have said to the people, "The committee have had the matter under consideration and we expect a report soon." But now the bill is reported and is on our files, where it has lain for two weeks, and when the matter is brought up for consideration after so long a time, after such an intense anxiety has been exhibited by the people for the immediate consideration of the question, the motion is very coolly made to postpone it for two weeks longer.

Sir, no man can tell what even a day may bring forth, much less two weeks; and I undertake to say, without fear of successful contradiction, that if this Congress is not prepared to vote on this bill to-day, it will not be prepared two weeks hence, nor at any future time. I do hope, for the sake of consistency, that this Congress will not vote to postpone it, but will take it up and act upon it, and say to the people of the country what we propose to do in reference to the readmission of these men.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. Speaker, I agree, for one, entirely with what the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] has said, and with what was said by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BINGHAM]; and I think it would be a great mistake to suppose that on the part of the committee there is any intention or desire whatever to postpone the consideration of this question; that is, to postpone it in the sense which has been suggested.

Now, I understand that it is a mere practical question of wisdom in conducting legislation, whether we had better take up these bills before the Senate has acted, blind as we must be, of course, as to the particular action the Senate will take, and act upon them finally, or whether we shall wait and see whether the action of the Senate upon the proposed constitutional amendment renders it desirable for us to amend or in any way change these bills.

That is the whole question as I understand it. The purpose of the chairman of the committee is to bring about at the earliest possible day final action upon this bill; that is to say, at the earliest day when it can be safely and understandingly taken.

Undoubtedly, sir, we ought to have a policy. Undoubtedly we ought to show what we all feel, a willingness to act at once upon this question; and I beg to assure the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. PRICE]—and I am certain I can speak for the whole committee—that they have every wish to carry this bill through at once, without delay; and the only difference between the gentleman from Iowa and the chairman of the committee is as to the best mode of reaching one and the same result.

Mr. HIGBY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question, and that is, whether the action of Congress upon this bill as proposed will depend upon the results of the action upon the proposed constitutional amendment in the Senate, or whether we cannot act upon this as an independent question, without reference to the joint resolution to amend the Constitution?

Mr. CONKLING. I answer the gentleman from California [Mr. HIGBY] that whether we can or cannot is entirely accidental. Suppose the Senate should make some amendment to the joint resolution we have sent them, which amendment would render it necessary to modify one or both of these bills, even the bill of which he now speaks, the bill declaring certain persons ineligible to office under the Government of the United States. Suppose, for example, that the Senate should strike out the third section of the proposed amendment of the Constitution, or should so modify it as to embrace only certain limited clauses, and the gentleman from California or any other member of this House should want to enlarge somewhat the scope of this bill, he will see at once that it will be very necessary to have it before us still subject to modification.

Mr. HIGBY. Suppose the proposed amendment to the Constitution does not pass the Senate; would there be any objection to both branches of Congress acting upon this bill and passing it?

Mr. CONKLING. If the gentleman from California [Mr. HIGBY] wishes to inquire of me, for I have no right to speak for anybody else, whether with or without the proposed constitutional amendment I should be in favor of this disability bill, I will answer him that I should. I say that, constitutional amendment or no constitutional amendment, I am opposed to the ring leaders of this revolt ever being allowed again to hold any offices of emolument or trust under the Government of the United States. I agree with the gentleman from California that that measure is just as strong if the constitutional amendment shall fail in the Senate or before the Legislatures of the several States as it would be if the amendment should pass.

But I submit to him, and I am sure he will agree with me, that it is far safer for this House to have before it both of those measures, so as to adapt them as perfectly as they may be adapted to the action of the Senate, than it would be to go on blindly now and pass either of them before we know certainly what will be the result of the action of the Senate upon the proposed amendment.

And now, unless it will cut off some gentleman who desires to speak, I will demand the previous question upon the motion to postpone.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the gentleman withdraw for a moment his demand for the previous question?

Mr. CONKLING. Certainly.

Mr. BINGHAM. I have felt desirous, because I supposed it was the wish of the House, that we might be permitted to proceed with the consideration of the revenue bill until they shall have completed it, which I suppose would be by Tuesday next. And therefore I have been disposed, with the consent of my friend from Iowa, [Mr. PRICE], to move to postpone the further consideration of this bill, No. 544, until after the reading of the Journal on Tuesday next; believing that the House in the interim can dispose of the pending revenue bill.

Mr. CONKLING. I will suggest to my friend from Ohio [Mr. BINGHAM] that the result of his motion, if agreed to, would be to reverse the order in which this bill was reported to the House by the committee.

Mr. BINGHAM. I understand that. But these bills are in no manner dependent upon or connected with each other. The one now under consideration contains no recital of any portion of either of the other measures, and has no connection with either of them.

Mr. CONKLING. As the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] made the motion to postpone the further consideration of this bill I prefer that he take the floor upon it.

Mr. STEVENS. The House can postpone it or consider it now.

Mr. BINGHAM. I have no objection to considering it now.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope it will not be considered now. I presume that the members of the House would prefer to go on and finish the internal revenue bill. I am anxious that the morning hour shall commence, that we may have some work done upon the special order, the revenue bill.

Mr. STEVENS. I now call the previous question on my motion to postpone the further consideration of this bill till two weeks from to-morrow after the morning hour. If the House prefers to go on with the bill now they can vote down the motion to postpone.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The motion of Mr. STEVENS to postpone was agreed to; there being—ayes 62, noes 37.

Mr. PRICE called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. PRICE called for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered.

Mr. PRICE. I see that gentlemen are afraid to go on the record.

PURCHASES OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to reconsider the vote by which Senate bill No. 203, entitled "An act to enable the New York and Montana Iron Mining and Manufacturing Company to purchase a certain amount of the public lands not now in the market," was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The SPEAKER. That motion will be entered.

AMERICAN COTTON COMPANY.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill introduced by me this morning, to incorporate the American Cotton Company of the District of Columbia, was referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The motion will be entered.

AMENDMENT OF TERRITORIAL ACTS.

The SPEAKER announced, as the unfinished business of the morning hour, House bill 508, to amend the organic acts of the Territories of Nebraska, Colorado, Dakota, Montana, Washington, Idaho, Arizona, Utah, and New Mexico.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I move to amend the bill by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the following:

That the several acts establishing territorial governments for the Territories of Nebraska, Colorado, Dakota, Montana, Washington, Idaho, Arizona, Utah, and New Mexico, and all acts amendatory thereof, be, and the same are hereby, amended as follows, to wit: The Legislative Assemblies of each of the Territories named shall pass no special acts conferring corporate powers, but they may authorize the formation of corporations (except for banking purposes) under general laws, which may be altered or repealed at any time; and the property of all corporations which may hereafter be organized, or which now exist, shall be subject to the same taxation as the property of individuals.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the Legislative Assemblies of the Territories aforesaid, respectively, shall, at their first session after the passage of this act, provide by general laws for the organization of associations for commercial, manufacturing, and mining purposes, for ferries, bridges, turnpikes, and toll-roads, for churches, colleges, and literary and other associations, and for the incorporation of cities and villages, restricting their power of taxation, assessment, borrowing money, contracting debts, and loaning their credit, so as to prevent the abuse of such power.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the Legislative Assemblies of each of the Territories aforesaid shall, at their first session after the passage of this act, prescribe by law the manner in which all corporations heretofore authorized by acts of said Territorial Legislatures shall reorganize under general laws: Provided, That all corporations or associations now duly organized in pursuance of law, and engaged in legitimate business, shall have precedence of any proposed new association, in reorganizing under such general acts of incorporation as may be passed: And provided further, That such reorganization shall be within one year from the date of the adjournment of the first Legislative Assembly in each of the aforesaid Territories after the passage of this act.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That all special charters granted by any of the Legislative Assemblies of either of the Territories herein named to associations which have not been organized are hereby declared void, and all persons who may have secured special grants for forges, bridges, turnpikes, toll-roads, or special grants for any purpose, shall be subject to such general laws as the Legislative Assemblies of the Territories aforesaid are authorized and required to pass.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That all acts and parts of acts of any of the Legislative Assemblies of the Territories aforesaid, granting to associations or to individuals the exclusive right to go upon and occupy any part of the public domain or to the exclusive use of the timber or water-powers thereon, or the right to the exclusive use of water to be taken from lakes, rivers, or streams be, and the same are hereby, declared null and void: Provided, That nothing in this act contained shall be construed in anywise to invalidate any vested rights of persons acquired under the existing laws of either of said Territories in any mines, nor to invalidate any corporation or mining company within any of said Territories organized under and in pursuance of any State law or law of Congress.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That no person now appointed, or who may hereafter be appointed, by the President to any office in either of the aforesaid Territories shall receive any compensation out of the Treasury of the United States, or out of any contingent fund for services or as compensation for his salary until he shall have entered upon the discharge of his official duties within the Territory; nor shall any officer thus appointed be paid for the time he may be absent from the Territory if absent without authority of the President of the United States.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That in case of the death, absence, or inability of any judge of the United States superior courts for any Territory, at the time when the courts for his judicial district are appointed by law to be held, a judge of either of the districts in such Territory, not then occupied, is hereby authorized and may hold court in such district during the absence or inability of any judge, and all judgments, decrees, and orders of said court shall be as binding as if the same were held by the judge appointed therefor.

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That the Legislative Assemblies of the Territories aforesaid shall hereafter have no power or authority to grant divorces, but divorces may be granted by the courts of the United States in each of said Territories for such cause as may appear to them good and sufficient: Provided, That both parties shall reside in the Territory where the application for divorce is made: And provided further, That public notices shall be given by advertisement in at least two newspapers published in said Territory, stating the court before which the application will be heard and the causes for which the divorce is demanded.

Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That within the Territories aforesaid there shall be no denial of the elective franchise to citizens of the United States because of race or color, and all persons shall be equal before the law. And all acts or parts of acts, either of Congress or of the Legislative Assemblies of the Territories aforesaid, inconsistent with the provisions of this act, are hereby declared null and void.

Sec. 10. And be it further enacted, That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. KASSON. I desire to suggest an amendment to the chairman of the committee.

The last proviso of the third section reads as follows:

And provided further, That such reorganization shall be within one year from the date of the adjournment of the first Legislative Assembly in each of the aforesaid Territories after the passage of this act.

In order that this may not nullify existing corporations, the words "of this act" should be stricken out, and the words "by such Assembly of the act herein required" should be inserted. We cannot, of course, compel the Legislative Assembly to pass those general laws; and if it should neglect to pass them, this section, as now worded, would actually terminate the legal existence of those corporations, not by their fault, but by the fault of the Legislature.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I accept the amendment which the gentleman suggests.

Mr. KASSON. Let me suggest further that at the end of the fourth section the words "are authorized and required to pass" should be stricken out, and the words "shall enact as required by this act" should be substituted.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I accept the amendment which the gentleman suggests.

Mr. LEBLOND. I desire to move an amendment to strike out the ninth section.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. After the bill is perfected I will yield to the gentleman that he may make that motion. I now yield to the gentleman from Washington Territory, [Mr. DENNY.]

Mr. DENNY. I desire to move to amend the substitute by adding the following as a new section:

And be it further enacted, That where the secretary of any Territory has heretofore performed, or hereafter shall be required to perform, the duties of acting Governor by reason of the absence from the Territory of the Governor, or during a vacancy in said office, said secretary shall be entitled to receive, for the actual time during which the said duties of Governor devolve upon him by law and are actually performed by him, a sum sufficient to make his salary equal to the salary of the Governor.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I accept that. I will yield to my colleague to move his amendment, and then I will demand the previous question.

Mr. LE BLOND. I move to strike out the ninth section, as follows:

Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That within the Territories aforesaid there shall be no denial of the elective franchise to citizens of the United States because of race or color, and all persons shall be equal before the law. And all acts or parts of acts, either of Congress or of the Legislative Assemblies of the Territories aforesaid, inconsistent with the provisions of this act, are hereby declared null and void.

Perhaps the last sentence should be left in, for it may have reference to other laws.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. No, there is a general repealing clause.

Mr. LE BLOND. Then I embrace the whole section.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I demand the previous question.

Mr. WRIGHT. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. SPALDING. If that be stricken out I will vote against the bill.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Territories to the language of the third section. I think he will find it is more general than desirable. It provides as follows:

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the Legislative Assemblies of each of the Territories aforesaid shall, at their first session after the passage of this act, prescribe by law the manner in which all corporations heretofore authorized by acts of said Territorial Legislatures shall reorganize under general laws: Provided, That all corporations and associations now duly organized in pursuance of law, and engaged in legitimate business, shall have precedence of any proposed new association, in reorganizing under such general acts of incorporation as may be passed: And provided further, That such reorganization shall be within one year from the date of the adjournment of the first Legislative Assembly in each of the aforesaid Territories after the passage of this act.

There may be special corporations for religious and benevolent purposes. These are not usually the subject of general laws. I move to insert after the word "corporation" where it first occurs these words, "except for benevolent purposes."

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. In my State, literary, religious, and benevolent corporations are organized under general law. But I am willing to accept the amendment.

Mr. SPALDING. Does the bill provide there shall be no more corporations granted other than those now in existence?

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. The bill allows the Legislative Assemblies to pass general laws like those of Ohio and New York in reference to corporations.

Mr. STROUSE. Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the committee will allow me to say a word. I never saw this substitute in the committee-room, and I am quite sure several members of the committee have not seen it. A proposition to change the organic acts of all the Territories is a new thing to me. Yet I have failed but once to attend the meetings of the committee. I know nothing of the substitute except what I have heard here. I ask, therefore, that the chairman will not press through so hurriedly a bill to change the fundamental laws of all the Territories.

I do not know what has been stricken out from the original bill or what remains. There are objectionable features in the bill which ought to be understood before they are adopted.

We ought not to ask the House thus hastily to consider them. I say this in no unkindness to the chairman. It is a matter of duty to the House.

Now, sir, I do not know that a single Delegate from the Territories has asked for this. We have no memorial from the people for any such purpose. Yet, sir, we are asked to change their organic acts, and to impose laws upon the Territories which we cannot impose upon the States. We propose to impose upon the people of the Territories what they do not ask for, so far as I know. Why is this? We are here to say there shall be no distinction on account of race or color in reference to the elective franchise in the Territories. Why not make it general throughout the United States, in the States as well as the Territories? Why confine it to the brave men who have gone out to explore and open up the wilderness, when they do not ask for it?

Mr. Speaker, it ought to be thoroughly investigated, and not passed hurriedly as though it were only for the construction of a bridge across the Potomac.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. HOOPER, of Utah. Will the gentleman yield for an amendment?

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I cannot yield for the gentleman to offer an amendment of the character he indicates.

Mr. HOOPER, of Utah. I want to offer it and to give my reason for it.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I was somewhat surprised to hear my colleague say that he was not present when this bill, No. 508, was ordered to be reported. The substitute I did not claim to be authorized to report by the committee. Most of the members were absent, and after consultation with some gentlemen, I offered on my own responsibility the substitute, which consists simply in striking out one section and five lines of another. I found in my journey over the Territories last year that a bill of this kind was necessary. The majority of the legislation in the new Territories consists simply in shingling them over with special corporations in which, in the main, the officers of the Territories are personally interested.

Mr. WRIGHT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask whether this special legislation of which he speaks is in character like the gift enterprises we have been carrying out here?

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Some of it is. I desire to have the same laws applied to those Territories which we have in some of the old States, such as New York, Ohio, and Illinois, where, after experience, a system of incorporation has been introduced compelling all associations to carry on business under a general law.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I would ask the gentleman whether he proposes to depart from the precedents of legislation in reference to the Territories that have prevailed in the past.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Yes, sir.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. You propose to legislate in reference to their Delegates, their bridges, their canals, their mills, their corporations, their schools, their churches, and everything else. You propose to legislate in reference to their domestic matters. Now, why not leave them to the control of the laws of the United States, as administered by the Supreme Court, and let them manage their own affairs, subordinate to the general laws of the land, as they have done heretofore? If they burn their fingers, let them cure them. Why undertake to apply this new system?

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I want this bill to pass so as to secure the people against combinations in their Legislatures, the majority of whom being transient persons grant special privileges to the few which obstruct the settlement of the country, hinder its prosperity, and are of no special interest to any persons except those who get the charters. If men want to organize for legitimate purposes they can do so under a general law quite as effectively and certainly more honestly than a majority of them do under special acts of incorporation.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. You deny to the Legislature the power to give an exclusive right to the enjoyment, for instance, of water flowing across public lands in any case, I believe. Now, we had in the Territory of Illinois a law which authorized a party to enter upon the public land adjoining a dam, he owning one side of a stream. Why not allow a man the right to build a dam across a stream and rest one end of it on Government land?

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. There is nothing in this bill to prevent parties from organizing under the general law for every conceivable business purpose.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. The third section, it seems to me, provides for additional benefits and privileges to those corporations existing at the time of the passage of this act. It gives them preference to others. It seems to me, therefore, that the purpose of the bill is to give additional value to such corporations as have already organized or have procured acts of incorporation.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Not at all.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Is there not something lying back of this bill of that sort?

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. Not at all. My friend from Wisconsin [Mr. ELDRIDGE] is too good a lawyer not to know that a special act of incorporation is more valuable than an organization under a general law. Under a general act of incorporation the existing associations have a right to reorganize.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. The gentleman's answer is quite satisfactory, excepting in this particular: the gentleman says that an organization is no more valuable under a special act than under a general law—

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I say that, as a rule, it is more valuable under a special act than under a general law.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Whether that is so or not depends upon the powers granted. But here certainly is a provision that all corporations or associations now duly organized in pursuance of law shall have precedence of any proposed new associations.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. That corresponds precisely with the law we passed in regard to banks. When the national banking system was established, we provided that an existing banking association located in any city or village might organize and have precedence over a new association. The object is, in the first place, to guard existing vested rights; and in the next place, to encourage the organization of associations under the general law.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. But does the bill limit the number of corporations that shall organize under the general law?

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. That matter is left to the discretion of the Legislature. I suppose that the Legislature would not limit the number.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. What advantage, then, can the existing corporations have over other corporations which may hereafter be organized, if the latter may be created without restriction as to number?

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. It is to be left to the discretion of the Legislature whether the number shall be unrestricted.

I now yield to my colleague, [Mr. LE BLOND.] Mr. LE BLOND. Mr. Speaker, I propose to occupy the attention of the House but a moment; and I should not do so but for the fact that the ninth section of this bill applies to these Territories a principle which I believe has never before been adopted in the organization of any Territory of the United States. By this bill Congress assumes in reference to suffrage in the Territories a power which I believe it has never before exercised in the history of this Government. Now, sir, speaking for myself alone, I say that I do not believe Congress has any power to say to the people of the Territories, "You shall extend the right of suffrage to all your citizens irrespective of color." This bill inaugurates a new system. It is the carrying out, in my judgment, of a political scheme. And in saying this, I ought to be exceedingly careful lest my distinguished colleague [Mr. SCHENCK] should charge me with uttering sentiments reflecting upon the judgment and action of this Congress; for he seems to be peculiar in his notions as to the propriety of language to be used in this House.

But, sir, I conceive that this provision of the bill before us has and can have no other purpose than to carry out this cherished idea that all men should be made equal before the law.

I am aware that my colleague from the Cleveland district [Mr. SPALDING] will vote against this bill if the ninth section be stricken out, and if left in of course I shall vote against it. I have made the motion to strike out this section because it raises directly the issue whether we in this Congress are in favor of granting the right of suffrage to all classes irrespective of color. Gentlemen can now upon this proposition place themselves right before their constituents by declaring whether they are in favor of it; for let me say to gentlemen that those who vote against striking out this section place themselves on record as favoring equal suffrage throughout the whole country.

Sir, if this Congress has the constitutional right to pass a provision of this kind, and if it is proper to bestow the right of suffrage upon the colored people of the Territories, the principle applies equally to the States. Gentlemen cannot escape this conclusion.

Mr. SPALDING. I desire to ask my colleague whether the majority of this House has not already made its record of this question by the vote on the bill regulating suffrage in the District of Columbia.

Mr. LE BLOND. That is very true. I thank my friend for a suggestion. But what follows? A number of gentlemen on the other side of the House turn round and say that a handful of men on this side have forced them to vote against their real sentiments—that they were in favor of a property or educational qualification for voters in this District. A large number of gentlemen claiming to constitute the conservative element upon the other side of the House say to-day that they were opposed to the suffrage bill in the shape in which it passed.

Mr. SPALDING. What was the action of the Democratic side of the House on that question?

Mr. LE BLOND. We were opposed to the whole thing. We voted against it. Our record is against granting suffrage to the colored race under any circumstances whatever by the Congress of the United States. The power is with the States.

Mr. SPALDING. If I recollect aright, the gentleman and his political associates voted with me to sustain the previous question.

Mr. LE BLOND. Because we wanted that those who claim to be conservative men, but who blow both hot and cold, should be put on the record before their constituents. We determined that they should "face the music," as became men, and if they were sincere in the speeches they made in opposition to that bill they would vote against its passage and defeat it by our help.

Let me say one word in reference to the constitutional amendment which passed this House last week. Gentlemen upon that side of the House spoke in opposition to the bill. We again believed them sincere. We hoped and expected to defeat the bill, as we had a right to do, giving full faith and credit to what honorable gentlemen said in their speeches. We had no right to expect anything else than that they would vote against it if brought to a vote upon the bill as it came from the committee on reconstruction. Such being our views, what was our duty? We were opposed to the bill. For one I am opposed to any change in the Constitution as long as there are States unrepresented here.

Our duty was to force a vote upon the bill as reported, and we succeeded. But again we were doomed to disappointment; for the very gentlemen who spoke so forcibly against the bill, when it came to a vote voted in its favor. Now they attempt to throw the responsibility of its passage upon the few Democrats on this side of the House. If, sir, they can go back to their constituents and convince them that thirty Democrats passed that measure, they possess more convincing powers than I think they do, and have a more pliable constituency than I believe they have.

I am aware that such members as have a press under their control are using it for that purpose, but the sequel this fall will determine how far they have or can succeed in deceiving the people. I shall call for the yeas and nays on my motion to strike out, and will then see how many conservatives will write home charging that thirty Democrats are responsible for negro suffrage in all the Territories of the United States.

I thank my colleague for his courtesy in yielding to me.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio, demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. WRIGHT demanded the yeas and nays on Mr. LE BLOND's motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 36, nays 76, not voting 72; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Delos R. Ashley, Bergen, Boyer, Chanler, Dawson, Denison, Eldridge, Finck, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Grider, Aaron Harding, Chester D. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbard, Kerr, Kuykendall, Latham, Le Blond, Marshall, Niblack, Nicholson, Phelps, William H. Randall, Ritter, Rogers, Ross, Rousseau, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Strouse, Taber, Taylor, Trimble, Whaley, and Wright—36.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Anderson, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Baxter, Blaine, Blow, Boutwell, Brandegee, Broomall, Sidney Clarke, Cook, Cullom, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Deming, Donnelly, Dumont, Eggleston, Farnsworth, Ferry, Garfield, Griswold, Hart, Hayes, Higby, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Julian, Kelley, Kelso, William Lawrence, Loan, Longyear, Lynch, Marston, McClurg, McRuer, Mercer, Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Orth, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Plants, Price, Rollins, Sawyer, Spaulding, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Ward, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Welker, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, and Windom—76.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Alley, Barker, Beaman, Benjamin, Bidwell, Bingham, Bromwell, Buckland, Bundy, Reader W. Clarke, Cobb, Coffroth, Conkling, Culver, Deftrees, Delano, Dixon, Dodge, Driggs, Eckley, Eliot, Farquhar, Grinnell, Hale, Abner C. Harding, Harris, Henderson, Hill, Hogan, James R. Hubbard, James Humphrey, James M. Humphrey, Johnson, Jones, Kasson, Ketcham, Laffin, George V. Lawrence, Marvin, McCullough, McIndoe, McKee, Morris, Moulton, Myers, Newell, Neill, O'Neill, Pomeroy, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Schenck, Seofield, Shellabarger, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Stevens, Stillwell, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trowbridge, Upson, Robert T. Van Horn, Henry D. Washburn, Wentworth, Winfield, and Woodbridge—72.

So the House refused to strike out the ninth section.

The substitute was then agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. LE BLOND demanded the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 79, nays 43, not voting 51; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Banks, Baxter, Bidwell, Bingham, Blaine, Boutwell, Broomall, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Cullom, Dawes, Deftrees, Deming, Donnelly, Dumont, Eggleston, Farnsworth, Ferry, Garfield, Griswold, Abner C. Harding, Hart, Hayes, Higby, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Julian, Kelley, Kelso, William Lawrence, Loan, Longyear, Lynch, Marston, McClurg, Mercer, Miller, Moorhead, Morrill, Orth, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Plants, Price, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Spaulding, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Ward, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Welker, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—79.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Benjamin, Bergen, Boyer, Chanler, Darling, Davis, Dawson, Denison, Eldridge, Finck, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Grider, Aaron Harding, Hogan, Chester D. Hubbard, Edwin H. Hubbell, Kerr, Kuykendall, Latham, Le Blond, Marshall, Niblack, Nicholson, Phelps, William H. Randall, Ritter, Rogers, Ross, Rousseau, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Stevens, Strouse, Taber, Taylor, Trimble, Henry D. Washburn, Whaley, and Wright—43.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Barker, Beaman, Blow, Brandegee, Bromwell, Buckland, Bundy, Coffroth, Conkling, Culver, Delano, Dixon, Dodge, Driggs, Eckley, Eliot, Farquhar, Grinnell, Hale, Harris, Henderson, Hill, James R. Hubbell, James Humphrey, James M. Humphrey, Johnson, Jones, Kasson, Ketcham, Laffin, George V. Lawrence, Marvin, McCullough, McIndoe, McKee, McNair, Morris, Moulton, Myers, Newell, Noell, O'Neill, Pomeroy, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Scoville, Shellabarger, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Stillwell, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trowbridge, Upson, Robert T. Van Horn, Wentworth, and Winfield—61.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MEMPHIS RIOTS.

Mr. LE BLOND. I find it impossible for me to serve on the committee appointed to investigate the Memphis riot. I ask, therefore, to be excused from service on the same.

The gentleman was accordingly excused.

The SPEAKER subsequently announced that he had appointed Messrs. BROOMALL and SHANKLIN to fill the vacancies upon the select committee to investigate the late Memphis riot, which vacancies had been caused by the resignation of Messrs. BOUTWELL and LE BLOND.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

Several messages in writing from the President of the United States were delivered to the House, by Mr. EDWARD COOPER, his Private Secretary; who also informed the House that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 238) to amend an act entitled "An act relating to habeas corpus, and regulating judicial proceedings in certain cases," approved March 3, 1863; and

An act (H. R. No. 352) to incorporate the National Theological Institution.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed House bill No. 563, to regulate the time and fix the place for holding the district court of the United States in the district of Virginia, and for other purposes, with an amendment; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

Also, Senate bill No. 318, to authorize the appointment of an additional Assistant Secretary of the Navy; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill and joint resolutions of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 397) to authorize the coinage of five-cent pieces;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 66) relative to the courts and post office of New York city; and Joint resolution (S. R. No. 88) authorizing the Secretary of War to grant the use of certain lumber for the fair for the Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphans' Home.

TAX BILL.

Mr. MORRILL moved that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. DAVIS in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being a bill of the House (No. 513) to amend an act entitled

"An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof.

The pending question was on the motion of Mr. CHANLER to insert before the last proviso, on page 29, the following:

And that the assessor of each district shall at stated periods make a full and accurate report over his own signature, duly sworn to before a notary public, of all articles seized and held by him as forfeited for violations of this act by any person or persons, that such report shall specify the names of the owners of the articles so seized, together with the value of the same, and the particular section or sections of this act violated by such person or persons, whereby the said articles were forfeited to the Government; and such reports shall be addressed to the chief of the Bureau of Internal Revenue on the 1st of every month.

Mr. MORRILL. I believe this proposition was voted down yesterday, only there was not quite a quorum present.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I offer the following amendment to be inserted in line four hundred and eighteen, after the word "days":

And any collector or assistant collector who, having postponed, or agreed, or consented, in writing, with the debtor or any creditor of the debtor, to postpone to a day certain any sale authorized by this act to be made, shall, in fraud of such agreement or consent, proceed to sell the property so advertised before the time fixed therefor by such agreement or consent, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by fine not less than $1,000 nor more than $10,000, in the discretion of the court; shall forfeit his office, and shall, moreover, be liable to any party aggrieved by such act to all damages which may be sustained or suffered by reason thereof.

I offer this amendment for the purpose of correcting an evil which I presume has not often been experienced under the provisions of the existing law, but which has been experienced in some cases. A collector seizes the property of a party who has made himself amenable to the penalty of the law, and advertises it for sale. That property may be valuable, and upon it the creditors of the party may look for their security.

In a case to which I have reference a collector seizes the property of the party thus amenable to law, worth perhaps fifty or sixty thousand dollars, while the penalty amounts to $20,000. He advertises the property for sale. The owner of it is in debt nearly the value of the entire estate. A creditor having a claim to the amount of $20,000 sends an agent to ascertain the condition of the property and see whether it is worth while to attend the sale and make arrangements for the purchase of it in case it shall be sold. He applies to the collector, who, after explaining the nature of the property to him, says if it is any accommodation to him to be present on the day of the sale and bid, he will be happy to have him do so, and he will postpone the sale with that understanding, to suit his convenience, to a certain day in order that he may go home to raise the money and come again and attend the sale. The sale is accordingly postponed for ten days upon the written agreement with the collector. And yet on the day on which that property was originally advertised to be sold it is put up and sold, and bid in for $20,000 by the collector or some friend, and when the creditor returns to attend the sale and purchase the property he is met with the declaration that the title is already gone.

Now, such cases may exist under this bill, and there is no provision for the punishment of a party who shall be guilty of such a fraud. Therefore it seems to me due to the American people that they shall have their rights protected by some provision which shall prevent the perpetration of such frauds.

I know it may be said, and will be said, perhaps, by the chairman of the committee, that such a case will not occur; but such a case has occurred; and we all know the liability of human nature to err. We know the tendency which exists in human nature to yield to corrupt influences. I think, therefore, we should impose penalties for any malfeasances by a public officer under the provisions of this act. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. BOUTWELL. It seems to me this is an effort to provide by a general law a remedy for an evil which probably has never arisen but in a single instance, and is not likely to arise again. Here are provisions for the adjournment of sale from day to day, at the discretion of the officer, not to exceed thirty days in all. Now, I understand the proposition of the gentleman is that if the collector shall give information of any sort that he intends to postpone the sale, and he does not do it, he is to be held guilty of a misdemeanor.

Mr. DAVIS. It does not mean that. It means that where the collector shall agree in writing with the creditor that the sale shall be postponed for any time within thirty days, and shall not postpone it in accordance with the agreement, but shall sell the property before the time agreed upon, the collector shall be held responsible for the damage which the party suffers.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I object to holding out any inducement to a public officer to make private agreements. As the law will stand if this bill passes, collectors are obliged to give public notice of the time and place of sale. When the time arrives and the collector chooses to postpone the sale for considerations which shall be satisfactory to him, he may do so for a period not exceeding thirty days. I object to the proposition because it implies that a public officer may give private pledges to parties interested that such a proceeding shall not take place, he already having given public notice that the sale is to take place. It seems to me the proposed amendment implies an arrangement which it is not proper for a public officer to make. As it now stands whatever he does he is bound by and must do in the face and before the eyes of the public, and any subarrangement which he makes ought not to be tolerated by the law.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. I move, pro forma, to strike out the last word, "thereof."

The very object I had in view in proposing this amendment is to prevent any agreement by way of collusion between the officers and anybody else. And let me say to the gentleman that the notice which is spoken of as being required to be published in the papers is a notice published in the district where the officer resides or where the property is located. The case to which I referred was one where it was advertised in Pennsylvania, and the creditor residing in New York heard by accident of the advertisement of the sale of the property and sought to protect himself. On going to the collector the collector agreed to a postponement, as he had a right to do under the law and as he was bound to do in consideration of the position of the creditor. And if he had given public notice of the sale as the law required him to do, stating the day to which the postponement was made, all would have been right. But as a public officer, bound to protect as far as his duty would prompt him the interest of the creditor, he proceeds to make the sale on the day originally advertised, and thus by fraud and collusion with somebody violates the agreement upon which the creditor had relied.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Connecticut. I would ask the gentleman whether a public officer who has acted thus fraudulently or wrongfully is not liable by an action at common law.

Mr. DAVIS. There is no provision in this act for it.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Connecticut. But would he not be liable under the common law?

Mr. DAVIS. I do not wish to see a man who is liable to conviction or indictment under the common law holding the responsible office of collector under the Government of the United States. I can see no objection whatever to this amendment.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I propose to amend in line four hundred and ninety by inserting after the word "distrain" the words "and sale, if belonging to the head of a family;" so that it shall read:

That there shall be exempt from distraint and sale, if belonging to the head of a family, the school-books and apparel necessary for a family.

Mr. MORRILL. I have no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I move to amend the exemption clause by inserting after the word "cow," in line four hundred and ninety-two, the words "two hogs."

I think that, in providing for this exemption of certain things, the pig should go with the cow. This corresponds with the law of almost all the States in reference to exemption from execution.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend as follows:

On page 25, before the word "demand," in line three hundred and eighty-four, insert the words "give notice and."

On the same page, before the word "demand," in line three hundred and ninety, insert the words "notice and."

In the same line strike out the word "therefor."

Strike out the word "chattels" in lines three hundred and ninety-eight and four hundred.

So that the clause will read:

And with respect to all such duties or taxes as are not included in the annual lists aforesaid, and all taxes and duties the collection of which is not otherwise provided for in this act, it shall be the duty of each collector, in person or by deputy, to give notice and demand payment thereof, in the manner last mentioned, within ten days from and after receiving the list thereof from the assessor, or within twenty days from and after the expiration of the time within which such duty or tax should have been paid; and if the annual or other duties shall not be paid within ten days from and after such notice and demand, it shall be lawful for such collector, or his deputies, to proceed to collect the said duties or taxes, with ten per cent. additional thereto, as aforesaid, by distraint and sale of the goods, chattels, or effects, including stocks, securities, and evidences of debt, of the persons delinquent as aforesaid. And in case of distraint, it shall be the duty of the officer charged with the collection to make, or cause to be made, an account of the goods or effects distrained, a copy of which, signed by the officer making such distraint, shall be left with the owner or possessor of such goods or effects, or at his or her dwelling or usual place of business, with some person of suitable age and discretion, if any such can be found, with a note of the sum demanded, and the time and place of sale.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMES. It will be seen that while this section provides for serving notice of the sale, there is no provision for any fixed time intervening between the service of the notice and the day of sale. It will be found that there is a provision for the publication and posting of the notice not less than ten nor more than twenty days. It appears to me that the same provision should be extended to the personal service of the notice. I move, therefore, to amend by inserting after the word "notification" in line four hundred and fourteen, on page 26, the following words:

To the owner or possessor of the property, and the publication and posting of such notice as herein provided.

So that the clause will read as follows:

Which notice shall specify the articles distrained, and the time and place for the sale thereof, which time shall not be less than ten nor more than twenty days from the date of such notification to the owner or possessor of the property, and the publication and posting of such notice as herein provided, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I move to amend by inserting after the word "hogs," in line four hundred and ninety-two, the words "ten sheep and the wool thereof."

Mr. MORRILL. I would like to inquire of my colleague how much ten sheep, such as he is in the habit of keeping, would probably be worth.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I do not know precisely. I suppose something over three or four dollars a head. It seems to me that this is a very proper amendment.

Mr. MILLER. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "ten" and inserting "five."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move further to amend the amendment by adding the following proviso:

Provided, That the aggregate market value of the sheep so exempted shall not exceed fifty dollars.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I have no objection to that.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NIBLACK. I move to amend the amendment so as to provide, in reference to these sheep, that there shall be "no distinction of race or color." [Laughter.]

The amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend by striking out in the four hundred and thirty-ninth line the word "interests" and inserting "interest."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPALDING. I move in line four hundred and ninety-one to insert before the word "apparel" the word "wearing;" so that it will read "wearing apparel."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMES. I move to amend by inserting after the words "one cow, two hogs, and five sheep" these words: "and the necessary food for such animals for a period not exceeding thirty days."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That section twenty-nine be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that in all cases where the property liable to distraint for duties or taxes under this act may not be divisible, so as to enable the collector by a sale of part thereof to raise the whole amount of the tax, with all costs, charges, and commissions, the whole of such property shall be sold, and the surplus of the proceeds of the sale, after satisfying the duty or tax, costs, and charges, shall be paid to the owner of the property, or his, her, or their legal representatives; or if he, she, or they cannot be found, or refuse to receive the same, then such surplus shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States, to be there held for the use of the owner, or his, her, or their legal representatives, until he, she, or they shall make application therefor to the Secretary of the Treasury, who, upon such application, shall, by warrant on the Treasury, cause the same to be paid to the applicant. And if any of the property advertised for sale as aforesaid is of a kind subject to tax or duty under the provisions of this act, and such tax or duty has not been paid, and the amount bid for such property is not equal to the amount of such tax or duty, the collector shall purchase the same in behalf of the United States for an amount not exceeding the said tax or duty. And in all cases arising under this act where property subject to tax, but upon which the tax has not been paid, shall be seized upon distraint, or otherwise, and sold, the amount of such tax shall, after deducting the expenses of such sale, be first appropriated out of the proceeds thereof, to the payment of said tax. And if no assessment of tax or duty has been made upon such property, the same shall be made in like manner as elsewhere provided for the assessment of taxes upon property of like nature. And all property so purchased may be sold by said collector, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. And the collector shall render a distinct account of all charges incurred in the sale of such property to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who shall, by regulation, determine the fees and costs to be allowed in cases of distraint and other seizures; and the said collector shall pay into the Treasury, the surplus, if any there be, after defraying the charges.

Mr. MORRILL. I move the following amendments:

In line five hundred and seven strike out the words "her or their;" in line five hundred and eight strike out the words "she or they;" and in line five hundred and eleven "her or their."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move in line five hundred and thirty-five to strike out the word "costs" and to insert the word "charges;" in line five hundred and thirty-six, before the word "cases," insert the word "all;" in line five hundred and thirty-eight strike out the word "the" and insert the words "fees and;" and in line five hundred and thirty-six strike out the word "and" where it last occurs, and insert these words: "or where necessary expenses for making such necessary distraint or seizure have been incurred, and in case of sale."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to insert in line five hundred and thirteen, after the word "application," these words: "and satisfactory proofs in support thereof."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THAYER. I wish to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the provision in line five hundred and nineteen makes it mandatory on the revenue officers to buy the property in all cases where the amount bid is not equal to the taxes in arrear. I think that should be left discretionary with the officers. The Government might be compelled to buy an elephant.

Mr. MORRILL. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. THAYER. I move to strike out "shall" and insert "may."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next paragraph, as follows:

That section thirty be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that in any case where goods, chattels, or effects, sufficient to satisfy the taxes or duties imposed by this act upon any person liable to pay the same, shall not be found by the collector or deputy collector, whose duty it may be to collect the same, he is hereby authorized to collect the same by seizure and sale of real estate; and the officer making such seizure and sale shall give notice to the person whose estate is proposed to be sold, by giving him in hand, or leaving at his last or usual place of abode, if he has any such within the collection district where said estate is situated, a notice, in writing, stating what particular estate is proposed to be sold, describing the same with reasonable certainty, and the time when and place where said officer proposes to sell the same; which time shall not be less than twenty nor more than forty days from the time of giving said notice. And the said officer shall also cause a notification to the same effect to be published in some newspaper within the county where such seizure is made, if any such there be, and shall also cause a like notice to be posted up at the post office nearest to the estate to be seized, and in two other public places within the county; and the place of said sale shall not be more than five miles distant from the estate seized, except by special order of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. At the time and place appointed, the officer making such seizure shall proceed to sell the said estate at public auction, offering the same at the minimum price, including the expense of making such levy, and all charges for advertising, and an officer's fee of ten dollars. And in case the real estate so seized, as aforesaid, shall consist of several distinct tracts or parcels, the officer making sale thereof shall offer each tract or parcel for sale separately, and shall, if he deem it advisable, apportion the expenses, charges, and fees, aforesaid, to such several tracts or parcels, or to any of them, in estimating the minimum price aforesaid. And if no person offers for said estate the amount of said minimum price, the officer shall declare the same to be purchased by him for the United States, and shall deposit with the district attorney of the United States a deed thereof, as hereinafter specified and provided; otherwise the same shall be declared to be sold to the highest bidder. And said sale may be adjourned from time to time by said officer for a period not exceeding thirty days in all, if he shall think it advisable so to do. If the amount bid shall not be then and there paid, the officer shall forthwith proceed to again sell said estate in the same manner. If the amount bid shall be then and there paid, the officer shall give his receipt therefor, if requested, and within five days thereafter he shall make out a deed of the estate so sold to the purchaser thereof, and execute the same in his official capacity, in the manner prescribed by the laws of the State in which said estate may be situated, in which said deed shall be recited the fact of said seizure and sale, with the cause thereof, the amount of tax or duty for which said sale was made, and of all charges and fees, and the amount paid by the purchaser, and all his acts and doings in relation to said seizure and sale, and shall have the same ready for delivery to said purchaser, and shall deliver the same accordingly, upon request therefor. And said deed shall be prima facie evidence of the truth of the facts stated therein, and if the proceedings of the officer as set forth have been substantially in pursuance of the provisions of this act, shall be considered and operate as a conveyance to the purchaser of all the rights in law or equity which the delinquent tax-payer had in the premises at the time the lien of the United States attached to said estate. The surplus, if any, arising from such sale shall be disposed of as provided in this act for like cases arising upon sales of personal property. And any person whose estate may be seized for taxes, as aforesaid, shall have the same right to pay or tender the amount due, with all proper charges thereon, prior to the sale thereof, and thereupon to relieve his said estate from sale as aforesaid, as is provided in this act for personal property similarly situated. And any collector or deputy collector may, for the collection of taxes or duties imposed upon any person or for which any person may be liable by this act, and committed to him for collection, seize and sell the lands of such person situated in any other collection district within the State in which said officer resides; and his proceedings in relation thereto shall have the same effect as if the same were had in his proper collection district. And the owners, their heirs, executors, or administrators, or any person having an interest therein or a lien thereon, or any person on their behalf, shall have liberty to redeem the land sold as aforesaid, within one year from and after recording the said deed, upon payment to the purchaser, or, in case he cannot be found in the county where the lands are situated, to the collector, for the use of the purchaser, his heirs, or assigns, of the amount paid by the purchaser, with interest on the same at the rate of twenty percent. per annum. And it shall be the duty of every collector to keep a record of all sales of land made in his collection district, whether by himself or his deputies, in which shall be set forth the tax for which any such sale was made, the dates of seizure and sale, the name of the party assessed, and all proceedings in making said sale, the amount of fees and expenses, the name of the purchaser, and the date of the deed; which record shall be certified by the officer making the sale. And it shall be the duty of any deputy making sale, as aforesaid, to return a statement of all his proceedings to the collector, and to certify the record thereof. And in case of the death or removal of the collector, or the expiration of his term of office from any other cause, said record shall be delivered to his successor in office; and a copy of every such record, certified by the collector, shall be evidence in any court of the truth of the facts therein stated. And when any lands sold, as aforesaid, shall be redeemed as hereinafter provided, the collector shall make an entry of the fact upon the record aforesaid, and the said entry shall be evidence of such redemption. And when any property, personal or real, seized and sold by virtue of the foregoing provisions shall not be sufficient to satisfy the claim of the United States for which distraint or seizure may be made against any person whose property may be so seized and sold, the collector may, thereupon, and as often as the same may be necessary, proceed to seize and sell, in like manner, any other property liable to seizure of such person, until the amount due from him, together with all expenses, shall be fully paid.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I propose to offer a substitute for this entire paragraph. And as it is an important and lengthy substitute, in order that the Committee of Ways and Means may have time to consider it, I would propose that this section be passed over for the present, by unanimous consent; and when the committee rises, I will ask leave to have my substitute printed.

Mr. MORRILL. I have no objection to passing from this paragraph before it is finally acted upon. But I have some amendments I desire to offer to it, in order to perfect it, before the question shall be taken upon the substitute of which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BENJAMIN] gives notice.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Very well.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out the word "chattels," near the beginning of the paragraph.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. In the sentence which now reads, "at the time and place appointed, the officer making such seizure shall proceed to sell the said estate at public auction, offering the same at the minimum price, including the expense of making such levy, and all charges for advertising, and an officer's fee of ten dollars," I move to change the word "the" to the word "a," before the words "minimum price."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. After the words "with interest thereon at the rate of twenty per cent. per annum" I move to insert the following:

And said collector shall forthwith deposit the same separately in the Treasury of the United States, to be thereafter subject to like provision as provided in the preceding section of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WRIGHT. I move to amend this portion of the paragraph by striking out the word "twenty," and inserting the word "ten," before the words "per cent. per annum."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. I move to amend the clause which now reads, "shall have the liberty to redeem the land sold as aforesaid, within one year from and after recording the said deed," by striking out the words "one year" and inserting the words "two years," so as to make this provision accord with our tax laws in the West, which permit redemption within two years, instead of within one year only.

Mr. MORRILL. The House has just adopted an amendment to this sentence reducing the rate of interest to be paid when this property is redeemed from twenty to ten per cent. That amendment, I think, will of itself go far to prevent any property from being sold under this act, for nobody will want to purchase property under circumstances when it will very likely turn out no purchase at all, and the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WASHBURN] is going still further in the same direction. One year is certainly long enough, as long as is generally allowed by States, for the redemption of such property. And therefore I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana will not be adopted.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana. My experience goes to show that in all States where land becomes liable to sale for taxes, two years is little enough time to allow for its redemption. A tax sale is a very oppressive sale at the best; whether ten per cent. interest upon redemption is enough or not is another question. But the deed being given within five days of the sale, the allowing but one year for redemption cuts off almost all chance for redemption. I think two years is little enough time, and I hope my amendment will be adopted.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 25, noes 33; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WASHBURN of Indiana, and Mr. GARFIELD were appointed. The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 47, noes 48.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. THAYER. In the clause which now reads, "if the amount bid shall be then and there paid, the officer shall give his receipt therefor, if requested, and within five days thereafter he shall make out a deed of the estate so sold to the purchaser thereof and execute the same in his official capacity," &c., after the word "execute" I move to insert the words "and acknowledge." In a subsequent portion of this paragraph it is taken for granted that the deed is to be recorded. Of course, in order to be recorded it must be acknowledged or proved in some manner. The effect of my amendment is to require the officer to acknowledge the deed as well as to execute it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMES. I move to amend this sentence, near the commencement of this paragraph, "and the said officer shall also cause a notification to the same effect to be published in some newspaper," &c., by inserting before the word "cause" the words, "at least twenty days prior to such sale." As the paragraph now stands, no time is fixed within which this notification is to be published.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMES. I move to strike out the words "shall also cause a like notice," in another portion of the same sentence which now reads "and shall cause a like notice to be posted up at the post office nearest to the estate to be seized."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I move to insert, near the commencement of the paragraph, after the words "authorized to collect the same by seizure and sale of real estate," the words "belonging to the person owing the tax."

Mr. MORRILL. That amendment would interfere with the enforcement of the law in regard to distilleries, which may now be seized and sold, whether the real estate belongs to the person owing the tax or not, if it is allowed to be used for illegal purposes.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Then I will withdraw that amendment.

I move to insert the words "in which the real estate to be sold is situated" after the sentence "and the said officer shall also, at least twenty days prior to such sale, cause a notification to the same effect to be published in some newspaper within the county where such seizure is made, if any such there be, and to be posted up at the post office nearest to the estate to be seized, and in two other public places within the county."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I move to insert after the words "shall proceed to sell the real estate" the words "or so much thereof as may be necessary."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMES. I move to amend by inserting the words "including affidavits showing the due service, publication, and posting of the notice of sale, as herein provided," before the words "the amount of fees and expenses," in the sentence which now reads, "and it shall be the duty of every collector to keep a record of all sales of land made in his collection district, whether by himself or his deputies, in which shall be set forth the tax for which any such sale was made, the dates of seizure and sale, the name of the party assessed, and all proceedings in making said sale, the amount of fees and expenses, the name of the purchaser, and the date of the deed; which record shall be certified by the officer making the sale."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to move an amendment to the following sentence: "and in case the real estate so seized, as aforesaid, shall consist of several distinct tracts or parcels the officer making sale thereof shall offer each tract or parcel for sale separately, and shall, if he deem it advisable, apportion the expenses, charges, and fees aforesaid to such several tracts or parcels, or to any of them, in estimating the minimum price aforesaid." I move to insert after the words "distinct tracts or parcels" the words "or can be divided with benefit to the debtor or his creditors without detriment to the United States."

I offer this amendment for the reason that according to the general terms of this bill it might be held that a farm conveyed to its present occupant under one title, although capable of subdivision, must all be sold by the officer; that the whole farm must be sold unless it came from different parties, or was in distinctly marked tracts or parcels. The amendment I propose will give the officer the discretionary power to sell only a portion of the farm, to be subdivided in such manner as might not injure the Government, and yet benefit the other parties interested in the estate.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. An amendment has already been adopted which I think accomplishes what the gentleman from New York [Mr. DAVIS] desires. The words, "or so much thereof as may be necessary," have been inserted after the words "shall proceed to sell the real estate."

Mr. DAVIS. I offered my amendment to carry out the idea of the gentleman who offered that amendment. The bill now says that this real estate shall be sold, each tract or parcel separately, if it shall consist of several distinct tracts or parcels. But the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BENJAMIN] would not authorize the officer making the sale to go on and subdivide any tract or parcel, and for that reason I have offered my amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. If the gentleman deems his amendment important, I would suggest to him to insert after the words "shall offer each tract or parcel for sale separately," the words "or any portion thereof."

Mr. DAVIS. I accept that in lieu of the amendment I have offered.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LOAN. I move the amendment I send up to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out the following: If the amount bid shall be then and there paid, the officer shall give his receipt therefor, if requested, and within five days thereafter he shall make out a deed of the estate so sold to the purchaser thereof, and execute the same in his official capacity, in the manner prescribed by the laws of the State in which said estate may be situated, in which said deed shall be recited the fact of said seizure and sale, with the cause thereof, the amount of tax or duty for which said sale was made, and of all charges and fees, and the amount paid by the purchaser, and all his acts and doings in relation to said seizure and sale, and shall have the same ready for delivery to said purchaser, and shall deliver the same accordingly, upon request therefor. And said deed shall be prima facie evidence of the truth of the facts stated therein, and, if the proceedings of the officer as set forth have been substantially in pursuance of the provisions of this act, shall be considered and operate as a conveyance to the purchaser of all the rights in law or equity which the delinquent tax-payer had in the premises at the time the lien of the United States attached to said estate. The surplus, if any, arising from such sale shall be disposed of as provided in this act for like cases arising upon sales of personal property. And any person whose estate may be seized for taxes, as aforesaid, shall have the same right to pay or tender the amount due, with all proper charges thereon, prior to the sale thereof, and thereupon to relieve his said estate from sale as aforesaid, as is provided in this act for personal property similarly situated. And any collector or deputy collector may, for the collection of taxes or duties imposed upon any person or for which any person may be liable by this act, and committed to him for collection, seize and sell the lands of such person situated in any other collection district within the State in which said officer resides; and his proceedings in relation thereto shall have the same effect as if the same were had in his proper collection district. And the owners, their heirs, executors, or administrators, or any person having an interest therein or a lien thereon, or any person on their behalf, shall have liberty to redeem the land sold as aforesaid, within one year from and after recording the said deed, upon payment to the purchaser, or, in case he cannot be found in the county where the lands are situate, to the collector, for the use of the purchaser, his heirs or assigns, of the amount paid by the purchaser, with interest on the same at the rate of ten per cent. per annum.

And insert in lieu thereof the following:

If the amount bid shall be then and there paid, the officer shall give his receipt therefor, if requested, and within five days thereafter he shall make out, execute, acknowledge, and deliver to the purchaser on request a certificate reciting the seizure and sale of said property, the cause thereof, the amount of the tax or duty and all costs for which said sale was made, and of all his acts and doings in relation thereto, and the amount paid by the purchaser. The acknowledgment shall be made before an officer of and in the form required by the laws of the State or Territory in which the real estate sold is situate, and when said certificate is filed in the office of the recorder of land titles in the county in which the real estate sold is situate, it shall impart notice to all parties in anywise interested in said real estate from and after the seizure of the same by said officer. Any person having any interest in or any lien on said real estate or any part thereof, or any person in their behalf, may redeem said real estate within one year from the date of the filing of the certificate of the sale thereof as aforesaid upon the payment to the collector of the district in which said real estate is situate for the use of said purchaser, his heirs or assigns, of the amount paid by the purchaser, with interest on the same at the rate of ten per cent. per annum, and on the payment of the same to the collector he shall give to the person making the payment a certificate referring to the sale of said real estate by said collector, and of the certificate thereof delivered by him to the purchaser, giving the date thereof and describing the real estate sold and certifying that said real estate had been redeemed by the payment of the amount of said sale, the penalty thereon, and all costs and charges on account thereof, and by whom and on whose behalf the same was made. If said real estate is not redeemed as aforesaid before the expiration of one year from the time of the filing for record of said certificate of sale as hereinbefore provided, the collector of the district in which the real estate is situate, on the production of the certificate of sale with the certificate of the recorder of land titles for the county in which the land is situate indorsed thereon or annexed thereto, shall, if it appear that one year has elapsed since the filing for record of said certificate of sale, make, execute, acknowledge, and deliver to the purchaser, his heirs or assigns, a deed for said real estate, reciting the seizure and sale of said real estate, the cause thereof, the amount of the tax or duty and all costs for which the sale was made, and all his acts and doings in relation thereto, the amount paid by the purchaser, the execution of a certificate of sale, and the time the same was filed for record with the recorder of land titles of the county in which the real estate is situate as appears by the recorder's certificate indorsed thereon and conveying to the grantee said real estate, and said deed shall operate as a conveyance to the grantee therein all the right, title, estate, and interest in law or equity which the delinquent had in the premises at the time the lien of the United States attached to said estate, and said deed and all recitals therein shall be prima facie evidence of the facts therein contained. Any surplus money arising from such sale shall be disposed of as provided in this act for like cases arising upon sales of personal property.

Mr. LOAN. Mr. Chairman, as this section now stands no proper provision is made for giving due notice of proceedings by recording these papers. The section does not provide in any way for securing the rights of third parties. It seems to me judicious that the devisable title should depend upon the certificate duly recorded with the land titles of the proper county, and that if the party interested should fail to redeem the property sold within the time limited in the act, then the collector shall proceed to make a deed and convey the absolute title. That is the object which I think will be obtained by the amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. Practically this section is perhaps of less importance than any other in the whole law. I am not aware that it has been required in a single instance thus far in the execution of the law throughout the whole United States. I do not suppose that this section will be called into operation for five years to come. The committee have, therefore, proposed but few amendments and those chiefly verbal.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I perceive there is a disposition to make this section entirely ineffectual. If many more amendments should be ingrafted upon it, I should be quite willing that the whole section should be stricken out. I hope, however, that no further amendment will be adopted unless the Committee of Ways and Means on consideration should conclude to offer the substitute presented by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BENJAMIN,] which seems to have been carefully prepared, and which will be printed, so that we may compare it with the section as it stands.

Mr. LOAN. I would suggest that the paragraph be passed over until that proposed substitute be printed, and then let this be acted on at the same time.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I think that my colleague will find that the substitute I propose covers the point embraced in his amendment.

Mr. LOAN. Then I have no objection to a vote being taken on this proposition now.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. WRIGHT. I move to amend by inserting after the word "again," in line five hundred and eighty-four, the words "advise and," and inserting after the word "manner" in the next line the words "as hereinbefore provided;" so that the clause will read as follows:

If the amount bid shall not be then and there paid, the officer shall forthwith proceed to again advertise and sell said estate in the same manner as hereinbefore provided.

Mr. MORRILL. I see no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next paragraph, as follows:

That section forty-one be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause, and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that it shall be the duty of the collectors aforesaid, or their deputies, in their respective districts, and they are hereby authorized to collect all the duties and taxes imposed by this act, however the same may be designated, and to prosecute for the recovery of any sum or sums which may be forfeited by virtue of this act; and all fines, penalties, and forfeitures which may be incurred or imposed by virtue of this act, shall be sued for and recovered, in the name of the United States, in any proper form or action, or by any appropriate form of proceeding, que tam, or otherwise, before any circuit or district court of the United States for the district within which said fine, penalty, or forfeiture may have been incurred, or before any other court of competent jurisdiction. And taxes or duties may be sued for and recovered in any proper form of action before any circuit or district court of the United States for the district within which the liability to such tax may have been or shall be incurred, or where the party from whom such tax is due may reside at the time of the commencement of said action. But no such suit shall be commenced unless the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall authorize or sanction the proceedings: Provided, That in case of any suit for penalties or forfeitures brought upon information received from any person, other than a collector, deputy collector, assessor, assistant assessor, or inspector of internal revenue, the United States shall not be subject to any costs of suit, nor shall the fees of any attorney or counsel employed by any such officer be allowed in the settlement of his account, unless the employment of such attorney or counsel shall be authorized by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, either express or by general regulations.

Mr. HOLMES. I move, on page 37, to strike out the following words:

Provided, That in case of any suit for penalties or forfeitures brought upon information received from any person other than a collector, deputy collector, assessor, assistant assessor, or inspector of internal revenue, the United States shall not be subject to any costs of suits.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope that motion will not prevail. The gentleman will see that it is provided the fees of any attorney or counsel employed by any such officer shall not be allowed in the settlement of his account unless the employment of such attorney or counsel shall be authorized by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, either express or by general regulations.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to amend in line six hundred and ninety, so that it will read "expressly or."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move the following amendment:

Page 37, after line six hundred and eighty-nine, insert:

That section forty-four be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, subject to regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall be, and is hereby, authorized, on appeal to him made, to remit, refund, and pay back all duties erroneously or illegally assessed or collected, and all duties that shall appear to be unjustly assessed or excessive in amount, or in any manner wrongfully collected, and also repay to collectors or deputy collectors the full amount of such sums of money as shall or may be recovered against them or any of them in any court, for any internal duties or licenses collected by them, with the costs and expenses of suit, and all damages and costs recovered against assessors, assistant assessors, collectors, deputy collectors, and inspectors, in any suit which shall be brought against them or any of them by reason of anything that shall or may be done in the due performance of their official duties; and all judgments and moneys recovered or received for taxes, costs, forfeitures, and penalties shall be paid to the collector as internal duties are required to be paid: Provided, That where a second assessment may have been made in case of a list, statement, or return which in the opinion of the assessor or assistant assessor was false or fraudulent, or contained any understatement or undervaluation, such assessment shall not be remitted, nor shall taxes or duties collected under such assessment be recovered, refunded, or paid back unless said list, statement, or return was not false or fraudulent, and did not contain any understatement or undervaluation.

Mr. Speaker, the forty-fourth section of the law as it now stands provides for refunding all the taxes in cases where there have been wrong assessments. That is perfectly proper, but there has been a ruling in the northern district of New York that in cases of fraudulent lists returned under the exact terms of the law the money may be refunded. This amendment has been moved at the request of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. It provides that the section which relates to refunding shall not apply to persons who have had additional assessments in consequence of fraudulent returns. It is to correct that now case which seems to have arisen in the administration of the law. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WRIGHT. Provision is made as to the method in which suits shall be brought in the district and circuit courts. I move to insert these words:

And in all such cases the defendant shall be entitled to a trial by jury.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know that I fully comprehend what the gentleman from New Jersey proposes. If these cases are to be tried by the courts undoubtedly either party may be entitled to a jury. If they are not to be tried by a court there is no tribunal to summon a jury. I do not think this amendment ought to be adopted.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read the next paragraph, as follows:

That section forty-eight be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the following: that all goods, wares, merchandise, articles, or objects on which taxes are imposed by the provisions of law, which shall be found in the possession, or custody, or within the control of any person or persons, for the purpose of being sold or removed by such person or persons in fraud of the internal revenue laws, or with design to avoid payment of said taxes, may be seized by any collector or deputy collector who shall have reason to believe that the same are possessed, had, or held for the purpose or design aforesaid, and the same shall be forfeited to the United States; and also all articles of raw materials found in the possession of any person or persons intending to manufacture the same into articles of a kind subject to tax or duty under this act, for the purpose of selling such manufactured articles in fraud of said laws, or with design to evade the payment of said tax or duty; and also all tools, implements, instruments, and personal property whatsoever, in the place or building, or within any yard or inclosure where such articles on which taxes are imposed, as aforesaid, and intended to be used by them in the fraudulent manufacture of such raw materials, shall be found, may also be seized by any collector or deputy collector, as aforesaid, and the same shall be forfeited as aforesaid; and the proceedings to enforce said forfeiture shall be in the nature of a proceeding in rem in the circuit or district court of the United States for the district where such seizure is made, or in any other court of competent jurisdiction. And any person who shall have in his custody or possession any such goods, wares, merchandise, articles, or objects subject to tax as aforesaid, for the purpose of selling the same with the design of avoiding payment of the taxes imposed thereon, shall be liable to a penalty of $500, or not less than double the amount of taxes fraudulently attempted to be evaded, to be recovered in any court of competent jurisdiction; and the goods, wares, merchandise, articles, or objects which shall be so seized by any collector or deputy collector may, at the option of the collector, be delivered to the marshal of said district, and remain in the care and custody of said marshal, and under his control until he shall obtain possession by process of law, and the cost of seizure made before process issues shall be taxable by the court: Provided, however, That when the property so seized may be liable to perish or become greatly reduced in price or value by keeping, or when it cannot be kept without great expense, the owner thereof, the collector, or the marshal of the district, may apply to the assessor of the district to examine said property; and if, in the opinion of said assessor, it shall be necessary that the said property should be sold to prevent such waste or expense, he shall appraise the same; and the owner thereupon shall have said property returned to him upon giving bond in such form as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and in an amount equal to the appraised value, with such sureties as the said assessor shall deem good and sufficient, to abide the final order, decree, or judgment of the court having cognizance of the case, and to pay the amount of said appraised value to the collector, marshal, or otherwise, as he may be ordered and directed by the court, which bond shall be filed by said assessor with the United States district attorney for the district in which said proceedings in rem may be commenced: Provided, That in case the aforesaid bond shall be executed before the process is served upon the property, the marshal shall serve notice upon the bondsmen, and the court shall have jurisdiction of the matter the same as if process had been served upon the property so appraised and returned as aforesaid; but if said owner shall neglect or refuse to give said bond the assessor shall issue to the collector or marshal aforesaid an order to sell the same; and the said collector or marshal shall thereupon advertise and sell the said property at public auction in the same manner as goods may be sold on final execution in said district; and the proceeds of the sale, after deducting the reasonable costs of the seizure and sale, shall be paid to the court aforesaid, to abide its final order, decree, or judgment.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out lines six hundred and ninety-nine and seven hundred, as follows:

Who shall have reason to believe that the same are possessed, had, or held for the purpose or design aforesaid.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out the words "articles of" in line seven hundred and two.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out the following words in lines seven hundred and nine, seven hundred and ten, and seven hundred and eleven:

On which taxes are imposed, as aforesaid, and intended to be used by them in the fraudulent manufacture of.

And to insert in lieu thereof the word "or;" so that it shall read:

And also all tools, implements, instruments, and personal property whatsoever, in the place or building, or within any yard or inclosure where such articles or such raw materials shall be found, may also be seized by any collector or deputy collector, as aforesaid.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out in line seven hundred and thirty-two, after the word "provided," the word "however."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out after the word "commenced," in line seven hundred and fifty-one, the following:

Provided, That in case the aforesaid bond shall be executed before process is served upon the property, the marshal shall serve notice upon the bondsmen, and the court shall have jurisdiction of the matter the same as if process had been served upon the property so appraised and returned as aforesaid.

And to insert in lieu thereof, the following:

Provided further, That in case said bond shall be executed and the property returned before seizure thereof by virtue of the process aforesaid, the marshal shall give notice of the pendency of proceedings in court to the parties executing said bond by personal service or publication, and in manner and form as the court may direct, and the court shall thereupon have jurisdiction of said matter and parties in the same manner as if such property had been seized by virtue of the process aforesaid.

Mr. WRIGHT. I have a word to say on that amendment. The proceeding under this section is similar in all respects to proceedings in rem in what we term cases of attachment, and I cannot conceive that this House will, upon a little reflection, undertake in this way to adopt a proposition of this kind, which I deem unfair and unjust to those whom I may term defendants in such cases.

There is a provision in the law by which an assessor may advise, and his advice seems to have the authority of law. It is well known that in all cases of proceedings by attachment, and in fact in all other cases, it is necessary for the court to have jurisdiction of the person and of the subject-matter; and in proceedings in rem it is necessary for the court to have jurisdiction over the property as well. But in no case, as I understand the law, in any State of this Union, can any man's property be taken, advertised, and sold upon the mere ipse dixit of an assessor or assistant assessor or collector. In all cases of attachment the defendant, by coming in and giving up all, may have a right of trial by jury. This right is denied to him if this section is to be adopted. I appeal to gentlemen if I am not correct in my understanding of it. There can be no trial by jury, no opportunity for the defendant to appear before the court, because the notice is not to be given to him, but to his bondsman. Can that be called justice?

I desire to have a provision inserted in this section that when notice is given to the bondsmen only, who are not owners of the property, the court fails of its jurisdiction. We are not doing justice to these men by undertaking to declare that that which according to law does not give them jurisdiction shall authorize these officers to proceed and divest a man of his property without the intervention of the court or without authority of law.

I am willing to go for any proceeding that will secure to the United States Government whatever amount may be due to it, but justice demands, inasmuch as there may be mistakes on the part of assessors and collectors, that notice should be given to the parties in interest, and that they shall be allowed to go before a court. If a question of fact is made, a party has in ordinary proceedings in a court of justice the right of a trial by jury. If it is a question of law he can go before a court and have justice done him equally well.

I trust the chairman of the committee will look at this matter in the light I have presented it, and with his known intelligence will suggest a better section than the one that is now under consideration.

Mr. GARFIELD. Almost every point the gentleman has made is against what is now the law. All the committee have done is to repeat it at great length with some limitations and restrictions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next two paragraphs, as follows:

That sections fifty-three, fifty-four, fifty-five, fifty-six, fifty-seven, fifty-nine, sixty-two, sixty-three, sixty-four, sixty-five, sixty-six, sixty-seven, sixty-eight, sixty-nine, and seventy be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

That section seventy-one be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting, in lieu thereof, the following: that no person, firm, company, or corporation shall be engaged in, prosecute, or carry on any trade, business, or profession, hereinafter mentioned and described, until he or they shall have paid a special tax therefor in the manner hereinafter provided.

Mr. LE BLOND. I move that the committee now rise.

Mr. MORRILL. Wait until half past four o'clock.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. There is hardly a quorum present now.

Mr. LE BLOND. I must insist on my motion.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 29, noes 54.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The next paragraph was then read, as follows:

That section seventy-two be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting, in lieu thereof, the following: that every person, firm, company, or corporation engaged in any trade, business, or profession on which a special tax is imposed by law, shall register with the assistant assessor of the assessment district, first, his or their name or style, and in case of a firm or company, the names of the several persons constituting such firm or company, and their places of residence; second, the trade, business, or profession, and the place where such trade, business, or profession is to be carried on; third, if a rectifier, the number of barrels he designs to rectify; if a peddler, whether he designs to travel on foot, or with one, two, or more horses; if an innkeeper, the yearly rental value of the house and property to be occupied for said purpose; if not rented, the assistant assessor shall value the same. All of which facts shall be returned duly certified by such assistant assessor, both to the assessor and collector of the district; and the special tax shall be paid to the collector or deputy collector of the district as hereinafter provided for such trade, business, or profession.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to insert the words "or mules" after the words "or with one, two, or more horses."

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out the words "if not rented, the assistant assessor shall value the same."

The motion was agreed to.

The next paragraph was read, as follows:

That section seventy-three be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting, in lieu thereof, the following: that any one who shall exercise or carry on any trade, business, or profession, or do any act hereinafter mentioned, for the exercising, carrying on, or doing of which a special tax is imposed by this act, without payment thereof as in that behalf required, shall, for every such offense, besides being liable to the payment of the tax, be subject to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years, or a fine not exceeding $500, or both, one moiety of such fine to the use of the United States, the other moiety to the use of the person who shall first give information of the fact whereby said forfeiture was incurred.

Mr. WRIGHT. I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means [Mr. MORRILL] in what courts these persons are to be tried, and what courts are to inflict the penalty.

Mr. MORRILL. The courts of the United States, of course.

I move to amend by striking out the words "one moiety of such fine to the use of the United States, the other moiety to the use of the person who shall first give information of the fact whereby said forfeiture was incurred;" and insert in lieu thereof the words, "and such fine shall be distributed between the United States and the informer, if there be any, as provided by law."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PRICE. I move to amend this paragraph by striking out the word "without," before the words "payment thereof as in that behalf provided," and inserting the words "and shall refuse," so that it will read, "and who shall refuse payment thereof," &c. It is a possible case that an innocent party may be taken up under this law and imprisoned. Now, what I wish is, that if he shall refuse to pay after the demand is made he shall then be punished, and not without.

Mr. MORRILL. It is made the duty of persons engaged or about to engage in any business, for which a special tax is required, and which takes the place of a license, to go and obtain a license. The proposition of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] would make it necessary for the assessor to go around and find out all such cases. It might be very inconvenient for him to travel over a whole district or enough of it to find out what parties are engaged in all sorts of business.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The next paragraph was read, as follows:

That section seventy-four be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause, and inserting, in lieu thereof, the following: that the receipt for the payment of any special tax shall contain and set forth the purpose, trade, business, or profession for which such tax is paid, and the name and place of abode of the person or persons paying the same; if by a rectifier, the quantity of spirits intended to be rectified; if by a peddler, whether for traveling on foot, or with one or two or more horses or mules, the time for which and the date or time of payment, and (except in the case of auctioneers, produce brokers, commercial brokers, patent-right dealers, photographers, builders, insurance agents, insurance brokers, and peddlers) the place at which the trade, business, or profession for which the tax is paid shall be carried on: Provided, That the payment of the special tax imposed shall not exonerate from taxation the person or persons, (except lawyers, physicians, surgeons, dentists, cattle brokers, horse dealers, peddlers, produce brokers, commercial brokers, patent-right dealers, photographers, builders, insurance agents, insurance brokers, and auctioneers,) or firm, company, or corporation in any other place than that stated; but nothing herein contained shall prohibit the storage of goods, wares, or merchandise in other places than the place of business, nor the sale by manufacturers or producers of their own goods, wares, and merchandise, at the place of production or manufacture, and at their principal office or place of business, provided no goods, wares, or merchandise shall be kept for sale at said office. And every person exercising or carrying on any trade, business, or profession, or doing any act for which a special tax is imposed, shall, on demand of any officer of internal revenue, produce and exhibit the receipt for payment of the tax, and unless he shall do so may be taken and deemed not to have paid such tax. And in case any peddler shall refuse to exhibit his or her receipt, as aforesaid, when demanded by any officer of internal revenue, said officer may seize the horse, wagon, and contents, or pack, bundle, or basket of any person so refusing, and the assessor of the district in which the seizure has occurred may, on ten days' notice, published in any newspaper in the district, or served personally on the peddler, or at his dwelling-house, require such peddler to show cause, if any he has, why the horses, wagon, and contents, pack, bundle, or basket so seized shall not be forfeited; and in case no sufficient cause is shown, the assessor may direct a forfeiture, and issue an order to the collector or to any deputy collector of the district for the sale of the property so forfeited; and one half of the same, after payment of the expenses of the proceedings, shall be paid to the officer making the seizure, and the other half thereof to the collector for the use of the United States. And all special taxes imposed after the 1st day of May in any year shall be paid for and until the 1st day of May next succeeding, and shall be the ratable proportion of the whole amount of tax imposed for one year, and estimated from the first day of the month in which such tax is imposed.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out the word "and" before the words "date or time of payment," and insert the words "payment is made," in the commencement of the paragraph.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. At the commencement of the proviso I move to amend by inserting after the word "tax" the word "herein;" and also to strike out the words "exonerate from taxation" and insert the words "exempt from an additional special tax;" so that the sentence will read:

Provided, That the payment of the special tax herein imposed shall not exempt from an additional special tax, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to insert the words "doing business" after the word "corporation" and before the words "in any other place than that stated."

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out the word "prohibit" and insert the words "require a special tax for" after the words "but nothing herein contained shall," and before the words "the storage of goods, wares, or merchandise," &c.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to insert the words "or mule" after the words "said officer may seize the horse," and also insert the words "or mules" before the words "wagon and contents, pack, bundle, or basket so seized shall not be forfeited."

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend by striking out lines eight hundred and sixty to eight hundred and sixty-four, as follows:

And all special taxes imposed after the 1st day of May in any year shall be paid for and until the 1st day of May next succeeding, and shall be the ratable proportion of the whole amount of tax imposed for one year, and estimated from the first day of the month in which such tax is imposed.

And inserting in lieu thereof the following:

And all such special taxes shall become due on the 1st day of May in each year, or on commencing any trade, business, or profession upon which such tax is by law imposed. In the former case the tax shall be reckoned for one year, and in the latter case proportionately for that part of the year from the first day of the month in which the liability to a special tax commenced to the 1st day of May following.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMES. One portion of the pending paragraph provides for seizing the horse, wagon, and any other property of any peddler who shall not exhibit a license; and it further provides that notice of such seizure and of the time for his appearance before the assessor may be published in any newspaper of the district or may be served personally or may be left with his family. I can see that this provision may be liable to great abuse. The publication may be made in a newspaper many miles from the place of seizure, so that the party will know nothing about it.

I move, therefore, to amend by striking out the following:

And the assessor of the district in which the seizure has occurred may, on ten days' notice published in any newspaper in the district, or served personally on the peddler or at his dwelling-house, require such peddler to show cause if any he has.

And inserting in lieu thereof the following:

And shall immediately serve upon such peddler a notice in writing requiring him to show cause before the assessor of the district in which such seizure shall be made, at a time and place therein stated, which shall not be less than six days nor more than fifteen days from the day of such service.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Chairman, I hope that this amendment will not be adopted, for the reason that it will be impossible in a great many instances to reach these peddlers unless the process is exceedingly summary. I have not so much sympathy for the peddlers as my friend from New York has. I know that in a great many instances these persons, who flock to all public gatherings, such as musters and agricultural fairs, appear in a place one day and disappear the next; so that it will be impossible to reach them by the process proposed by the gentleman. I know that heretofore a large amount of fraud has been committed by these peddlers, and that they—the smaller sort, such as peddle jewelry and other gimcracks—require the unceasing vigilance of the revenue officers.

Mr. HOLMES. This section provides that the property of these peddlers may be seized. Now, the party who makes the seizure has certainly an opportunity to serve notice upon the peddler. I cannot see the force of the objection, urged by the chairman of the committee.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk began the reading of the next paragraph, commencing on line eight hundred and sixty-five, when—

Mr. LE BLOND moved that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DAWES reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the special order, being bill of the House No. 513, to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof, and had come to no resolution thereon.

EMPLOYÉS IN STATE DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

I transmit a report of the Secretary of State in answer to that part of the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 7th instant which calls for information in regard to the Clerks employed in the Department of State.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

WASHINGTON, May 15, 1866.

The message, with the accompanying documents, was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

MEXICO.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a message from the President, transmitting, in answer to a resolution of the House, information concerning discriminations made by the so-called Maximilian Government in Mexico against American commerce, or commerce from particular American ports; which was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

ECUADOR.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a message from the President, transmitting correspondence in reference to the non-payment by Ecuador of the first installment under the convention of 1862; which was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

THOMAS FOSTER.

On motion of Mr. HUBBARD, of West Virginia, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of Thomas Foster.

HARRISON HEERMANCE.

On motion of Mr. KETCHAM, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of Harrison Heermance.

E. C. WILLETT.

On motion of Mr. BIDWELL, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of E. C. Willett.

SOLDIERS' AND SAILORS' UNION.

Mr. McKEE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to incorporate the Soldiers' and Sailors' Union of Washington city; which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying memorial, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

On motion of Mr. SCHENCK, leave of absence was granted to Mr. BINGHAM for two weeks.

And then, on motion of Mr. ALLISON, (at four o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. CULLOM: The petition of numerous citizens of Sangamon county, in the State of Illinois, in favor of Congress imposing a national tax of two dollars per head on dogs.

Also, the petition of a large number of citizens of Sangamon county, Illinois, asking that Congress shall levy a specific duty upon wool.

By Mr. CLARKE, of Ohio: The petition of J. W. Pomprey, of Brown county, Ohio, asking pay for services rendered the United States as a detective.

By Mr. DAVIS: The petition of the trustees of New York Central College, for recognition and confirmation of title to certain tracts of land in Oregon and in Washington Territory.

By Mr. JULIAN: The petition of Eleanor C. Ransom, asking an appropriation to reimburse her for losses sustained in the service of the United States during the late rebellion.

By Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio: The memorial of Miss H. H. Webber, and 26 others, clerks in the Post Office Department, asking for equal pay to those employed in the Treasury Department, and for proportional amount of the $244 provided for clerks of small salaries.

By Mr. PHELPS: The petition of James Hooper, of Baltimore, Maryland, claiming compensation for loss of bark General Berry, destroyed by rebel privateer Florida.

By Mr. RANDALL, of Kentucky: The petition of P. P. Ballard for the establishment of a post route over the new turnpike from Richmond via the mouth of Tate's creek to Lexington, Kentucky.

By Mr. WELKER: The petition of William Botimer, and others, late officers in the thirteenth United States colored heavy artillery, asking pay for recruiting men for that regiment in the State of Ohio.

By Mr. WOODBRIDGE: The petition of Doctors G. J. Lock, E. A. Whipple, and H. M. Hall, of Danby, Vermont, praying that medicines used by physicians may be exempted from taxation.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, May 16, 1866.

Prayer by Rev. Dr. PHILLIPS, of London, England.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ADMISSION OF COLORADO—VETO.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States:

To the Senate of the United States:

I return to the Senate, in which it originated, the bill which has passed both Houses of Congress, entitled "An act for the admission of the State of Colorado into the Union," with my objections to it becoming a law at this time.

1. From the best information which I have been able to obtain, I do not consider the establishment of a State government at present necessary for the welfare of the people of Colorado. Under the existing territorial government all the rights, privileges, and interests of the citizens are protected and secured. The qualified voters choose their own legislators and their own local officers, and are represented in Congress by a Delegate of their own selection. They make and execute their own municipal laws, subject only to revision of Congress—an authority not likely to be exercised, unless in extreme or extraordinary cases. The population is small, some estimating it so low as twenty-five thousand, while advocates of the bill reckon the number at from thirty-five thousand to forty thousand souls. The people are principally recent settlers, many of whom are understood to be ready for removal to other mining districts beyond the limits of the Territory if circumstances shall render them more inviting. Such a population cannot but find relief from excessive taxation if the Territorial system, which devolves the expense of the executive, legislative, and judicial departments upon the United States, is for the present continued. They cannot but find the security of person and property increased by their reliance upon the national executive power for the maintenance of law and order against the disturbances necessarily incident to all newly organized communities.

2. It is not satisfactorily established that a majority of the citizens of Colorado desire or are prepared for an exchange of a territorial for a State government. In September, 1864, under the authority of Congress, an election was lawfully appointed and held for the purpose of ascertaining the views of the people upon that particular question. Six thousand one hundred and ninety-two votes were cast, and of this number a majority of 3,152 was given against the proposed change. In September, 1865, without any legal authority, the question was again presented to the people of the Territory with the view of obtaining a reconsideration of the result of the election held in compliance with the act of Congress, approved March 21, 1864. At this second election 5,905 votes were polled, and a majority of 155 was given in favor of State organization. It does not seem to me entirely safe to receive this last mentioned result, so irregularly obtained, as sufficient to outweigh the one which had been legally obtained in the first election. Regularity and conformity to law are essential to the preservation of order and stable government, and should, as far as practicable, always be observed in the formation of new States.

3. The admission of Colorado at this time as a State into the Federal Union appears to me to be incompatible with the public interests of the country. While it is desired that Territories sufficiently matured should be organized as States, yet the spirit of the Constitution seems to require that there should be an approximation toward equality among the several States comprising the Union. No State can have more than two Senators in Congress; the largest State has a population of four millions, several of the States have a population exceeding two millions, and many others have a population exceeding one million.

A population of one hundred and twenty-seven thousand is the ratio of apportionment of Representatives among the several States. If this bill should become a law, the people of Colorado, thirty thousand in number, would have in the House of Representatives one member, while New York, with a population of four millions, has but thirty-one. Colorado would have in the Electoral College three votes, while New York has only thirty-three. Colorado would have in the Senate two votes, while New York has no more.

Inequalities of this character have already occurred, but it is believed that none have happened where the inequality was so great. When such inequality has been allowed, Congress is supposed to have permitted it on the ground of some high public necessity, and under circumstances which promised that it would rapidly disappear through the growth and development of the newly admitted State. Thus, in regard to the several States in what was formerly called the "Northwest Territory," lying east of the Mississippi, their rapid advancement in population rendered it certain that States admitted with only one or two Representatives in Congress would in a very short period be entitled to a great increase of representation. So when California was admitted on the ground of commercial and political exigencies, it was well foreseen that that State was destined rapidly to become a great, prosperous, mining, and commercial community. In the case of Colorado, I am not aware that any rational expediency, either of a political or commercial nature, requires a departure from the law of equality which has been so generally adhered to in our history.

If information submitted in connection with this bill is reliable, Colorado, instead of increasing, has declined in population. At an election for members of a Territorial Legislature held in 1861, 10,580 votes were cast. At the election before mentioned, in 1864, the number of votes cast was 6,192; while at the irregular election held in 1865, which is assumed as a basis for legislative action at this time, the aggregate of votes was 5,905. Sincerely anxious for the welfare and prosperity of every Territory and State, as well as for the prosperity and welfare of the whole Union, I regret this apparent decline of population in Colorado, but it is manifest that it is due to emigration, which is going out from that Territory into other regions within the United States, which either are in fact, or are believed by the inhabitants of Colorado to be, richer in mineral wealth and agricultural resources. If, however, Colorado has not really declined in population, another census or another election under the authority of Congress would place the question beyond doubt, and cause but little delay in the ultimate admission of the Territory as a State, if desired by the people. The tenor of these objections furnishes the reply which may be expected to an argument in favor of the measure derived from the enabling act which was passed by Congress on the 21st day of March, 1864. Although Congress then supposed that the condition of the Territory was such as to warrant its admission as a State, the result of two years' experience shows that every reason which existed for the institution of a territorial instead of a State government in Colorado at its first organization still continues in force.

The condition of the Union at the present moment is calculated to inspire caution in regard to the admission of new States. Eleven of the old States have been for some time, and still remain, unrepresented in Congress. It is a common interest of all the States, as well those represented as those unrepresented, that the integrity and harmony of the Union should be restored as completely as possible, so that all those who are expected to bear the burdens of the Federal Government shall be consulted concerning the admission of new States, and that in the mean time no new State shall be prematurely and unnecessarily admitted to a participation in the political power which the Federal Government wields—not for the benefit of any individual State or section, but for the common safety, welfare, and happiness of the whole country.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 15, 1866.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the reconsideration of the bill. Shall the bill pass, the objections of the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding?

Mr. WADE. I move that the message be printed and referred to the Committee on Territories, together with the bill.

Mr. SUMNER. I ask, is that the proper way?

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not think it is usual to refer a bill in this stage. It cannot be amended.

Mr. JOHNSON, and others. Let the message be printed and laid on the table.

Mr. WADE. If the course which is proposed is unusual, and I do not know but that it is, I will move simply that the message be printed and laid on the table.

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. SUMNER. The question of printing is debatable.

Mr. CLARK. You can call for a division of the question.

Mr. SUMNER. I merely wish to ask why we should not proceed to vote at once and dispose of the matter.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I desire to modify the motion of the Senator from Ohio, so that the bill shall be made the order of business for some particular hour; I am not choice about the hour.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to lay on the table, in the opinion of the Chair, supersedes that motion; and it is not amendable in that form. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio, that the message and bill be laid on the table and printed.

The motion was agreed to—ayes 17, noes not counted.

RELATIONS WITH ECUADOR.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit to Congress a copy of a correspondence between the Secretary of State and the acting chargé d'affaires of the United States at Guayaquil, in the republic of Ecuador, from which it appears that the Government of that republic has failed to pay the first installment of the award of the commissioners under the convention between the United States and Ecuador of the 25th November, 1862, which installment was due on the 17th of February last. All debts of this character from one Government to another are justly regarded as of a peculiarly sacred character, and as further diplomatic measures are not in this instance likely to be successful, the expediency of authorizing other proceedings, in case they should ultimately prove to be indispensable, is submitted to your consideration.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

WASHINGTON, May 9, 1866.

Mr. SUMNER. I move that that message of the President, with the accompanying papers, be printed, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana, presented a memorial of the board of trustees of the Indiana Agricultural College, praying for a modification of the act of July 2, 1862, granting to the several States a quantity of land equal to thirty thousand acres for each Senator and Representative in Congress for agricultural col-loges; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. YATES presented a memorial of assistant assessors under the internal revenue law in the ninth district of Illinois, praying for increased compensation; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HARRIS. I have received a memorial the disposition of which has been a matter of doubt with me. It is numerous signed by citizens of Cortland county, New York. It speaks of grievances that have long existed, and very earnestly; but what those are I am unable to discover; and, on the whole, as the meaning and construction of a written instrument is a question of law, I propose to refer it to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

FRESH-WATER BASIN FOR IRON-CLADS.

Mr. GRIMES. I am instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred a resolution of the city council of the city of Portland, in the State of Maine, in relation to the preservation of iron-clads, to report the same back, accompanied with a joint resolution.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to have that resolution taken up and passed now. It is only for the appointment of a commission.

Mr. JOHNSON. I should like to have it read.

The joint resolution (S. R. No. 92) authorizing the appointment of examiners to examine a site for a fresh-water basin for iron-clad vessels of the United States Navy was read a first time by its title.

Mr. JOHNSON. Are they to examine sites anywhere?

Mr. GRIMES. No, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maryland ask for the reading of the joint resolution at length?

Mr. JOHNSON. If what has been read states the substance of it I do not.

Mr. GRIMES and Mr. FESSENDEN. That is the title merely.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then I ask for the reading of the resolution.

The Secretary read the resolution, which proposes to direct the Secretary of the Navy to appoint a board of examiners to examine a site at or near the city of Portland, State of Maine, for a fresh-water basin for iron-clad vessels of the United States Navy, and to ascertain the advantages and cost of the site, and report to Congress during the present session.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have not the slightest objection to that; but why should it be confined to the city of Portland? Why not authorize them to examine sites anywhere?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution is not before the Senate at present for consideration.

Mr. JOHNSON. I beg pardon. I thought it was under consideration.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to have it taken up if there is no objection, because the time named in it for a report is so short.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not object to it of course.

Mr. CLARK. The clause directing a report during the present session of Congress had better be stricken out.

Mr. JOHNSON. It cannot be done in the time mentioned. What I suggested was, that it was limiting the authority of the board. Is the resolution now before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to have it taken up and considered now.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. JOHNSON. I was about saying before that I did not exactly understand why the board to be appointed under the authority of this resolution was to be limited to the examination of a site at Portland.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will explain it, if the Senator will allow me. There is an important public work going on in Portland by which the Presumpscot river, which is near Portland, is brought by a canal directly into the harbor of Portland, a little outside of the city. The engineer in charge of the work says it is perfectly practicable, at a very small expense, to give the Government all the room it needs for the purpose of laying up in fresh water—not in fresh and salt water, but in absolutely fresh water—these iron-clads; that it may be done at the expense of some two or three hundred thousand dollars, and any number of acres of land may be covered by a little wall across the mouth, and it will furnish all facilities of that description. I have been very anxious not to urge the matter upon Congress, and have brought in no bill on the subject, or anything of the kind; but at the very beginning of the session I endeavored to prevail on the Secretary of the Navy to have this site examined and reported upon. I could get no encouragement from him that he would allow anybody to examine it and make a report. He brought up certain objections, all of which, I thought, were entirely untenable. He was urged strongly to just get the facts, by a commission appointed by himself, who could say whether it was fit for this purpose or not, and how much it would cost, &c.

Mr. JOHNSON. He could have done that, if he pleased.

Mr. GRIMES. He had not the authority.

Mr. FESSENDEN. He could send down any man to do it, if he had chosen to do so. He did not say he had not the authority; he did not make that a point. He could have sent, not a commission, but an engineer—there are engineers in the employ of the Navy Department—or any one of his officers to look at it, and there would be no difficulty about it. I could not prevail upon him to do it. Finally a letter was handed to him by a gentleman, and he made the reply, substantially, that until the question of League Island was disposed of he would not have it examined.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator will permit me to ask him whether this site in Maine has ever been examined by anybody.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It has been examined by the engineer engaged upon the work of which I have spoken; and he says that this can be done.

Mr. JOHNSON. That I understand; but has anybody examined it for the Government?

Mr. FESSENDEN. No, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON. So that they have had no opportunity of comparing the two sites, the one proposed at Portland and the one at League Island?

Mr. FESSENDEN. No, sir; and I cannot get an examination. I stated to the Secretary distinctly, "Sir, I have no opinion about it; I urge nothing in regard to it; I ask nothing in regard to it except simply that you will ascertain the facts for yourself by one of your own officers;" and up to this time I have not been able to get him even to move to let the facts be known to Congress or to anybody else. Therefore it is that I want this resolution passed to direct him to send a commission there to examine and report. That is all.

Mr. FOSTER. [Mr. POMEROY in the chair.] Mr. President, I move to amend the resolution by adding after the words "Portland, Maine," the words "and also New London, Connecticut."

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope the Senate will not do that. New London, Connecticut, has already been examined by a commission. There has been an examination and a report upon New London. The Senator will not, I take it, contradict that fact. I do not want so much put upon this commission that they cannot make a return at this session of Congress. The examination at Portland can be made in the course of a week; but if others are put on, it nullifies the whole thing. Connecticut has already had its commission to examine New London and to report upon it; and the report is here. Now, I do not intend or desire to push this matter of Portland; I have no opinion on the subject even, except that I do not see why it might not be done there; but there are a great many considerations that I am not able to understand, probably, or to explain; still I want a report on that as well as upon New London; but I do not want another for New London put on to this resolution.

Mr. FOSTER. It is far from my purpose to interfere with or thwart the object which the honorable Senator from Maine has in view. The proposed amendment is not offered with any such design. The Senator is not quite correct in saying that New London has had an examination and report already on this subject. There has been, it is true, an examination by a board appointed by the Secretary of the Navy as it regards the fitness and the desirableness of New London as a site for a navy-yard. But this is a distinct question.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It was put precisely upon this ground, as a place for iron-clads.

Mr. FOSTER. Of course I will not contradict what the Senator states.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It was brought up in opposition to League Island.

Mr. FOSTER. It is true that League Island and New London came in competition; but the principal cause for the examination of both places was to ascertain the best site for a navy-yard. That was the general purpose of the board; and the matter of iron-clads came in as an incident, and was by no means the principal cause for the appointment of the board; nor was their examination directed to that end only. The question of iron-clads, as I admit, came in; but the examination for a fresh-water basin specially for the protection of iron-clads has not yet been intrusted to any commission. There has been no committee for such a purpose; there has been no examination of New London for such a purpose, nor of League Island for such a purpose, but for the establishment of a navy-yard. The very reason that the honorable Senator gives, so far as it goes, is a reason why this resolution should be amended in this manner, because it will not consume much of the time of the officer or officers who may be detailed for this purpose; for so far as the examination has already progressed at New London, it may be taken and will serve as an aid to the board who are making the examination, and will not be an impediment.

I repeat, again, that I am by no means inclined to thwart the purpose of the Senator from Maine; but I am desirous that New London shall not be lost sight of in this examination, and that the peculiar advantages of that harbor, both as a naval station and a navy-yard generally, and particularly as a site for the object which this resolution has in view, should attract the attention of Congress. It is not by any means either to delay or impede the honorable Senator's object that I move the amendment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not know what the motive may be; but the effect is to prevent my getting the report that I want to get; and I do not think it is quite just or reasonable, because there has already been a thorough examination of New London; we know all about it. There is no danger of its being lost sight of, for I—and I presume all other Senators—have been perfectly overwhelmed with communications and newspapers from New London with regard to it ever since the matter was started originally. I have no objection to the Senator's having a commission if he wants one; but I do not think this resolution should be embarrassed with it, because I have been trying all the session to get a report on this site during the present session of Congress. I simply want an examination and report; and I really hope the object I have in view will not be embarrassed by piling on another site and another and another, and thus defeating all. I should like to have this resolution stand by itself and get the report of a commission on this site. If there had been no examination and report in regard to New London, I should not object to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut; but it is a little hard, I think, to crowd upon an original proposition an old one which has already excited so much attention and been examined on its own merits. This is a single matter, not with reference to a navy-yard, but to find what merit there is in this place for the purpose named; I do not know that there will turn out to be any.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. RIDDLE. Is the amendment open to amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. RIDDLE. I move to amend the amendment by adding, after the word "Connecticut," the words "and New Castle, Delaware," a place which has been examined thoroughly by men outside of the committee, and it is deemed very appropriate for this purpose.

Mr. JOHNSON. I shall vote for the original resolution with great pleasure, and shall vote against both the amendments, the one proposed by the Senator from Connecticut and the other proposed by the Senator from Delaware. But there is a position, as I understand, the examination of which perhaps will not interfere in any way with a report by the commission within a very limited time. At the head of Severn river, near Annapolis, there is an extraordinary sheet of fresh water, such as is not to be found, I understand, even in the State of Maine; it is called the Round bay. The water is perfectly fresh; it has a depth of some thirty and forty feet, and has capacity to float an immense navy. What I desire—and I shall not offer an amendment if the honorable member from Maine thinks it will interfere in any way with his object—what I should like to have would be to have a board examine into that site and say whether that would not answer the purpose. In relation to the proposed site at Portland, as far as I know anything about it, and that is only from reading a letter that I have received from the engineer who is now employed on some works connected with the harbor there, which it is supposed may be used, I am very favorably impressed with it. I have received a long private letter explaining the exact situation of the river proposed to be used. Without, of course, knowing a great deal upon such matters, I have come to the conclusion that what he proposed was very practicable, and that the site itself would be an admirable one for the purpose for which it is supposed to be adapted by the resolution proposed by the Senator from Maine; but I am not sure that this site would not be as good. If the honorable member thinks it will interfere in any way with his object, I shall not offer the amendment, but shall propose it as a separate resolution at some other time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first question is on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. FOSTER. I cannot believe that this amendment will occasion any such delay as the Senator from Maine suggests. The officers who go to Portland will of course pass New London on their way if they go from this section of country, and if they come from the other section, and come this way, they must pass New London. It is certainly perfectly feasible and practicable for the officers who may be charged with this duty at Portland to make an examination at New London with very little delay. The report in regard to both harbors may be had instead of only one, and that without any such delay as to embarrass the measure at all. If it shall turn out on the examination that the officers cannot examine both places, and that Portland will thereby be prejudiced, I shall be perfectly willing, after that shall be ascertained, to abandon my amendment, and have the report made leaving out New London. If it shall be ascertained by the Senator that the officers in charge of this work cannot make an examination of both harbors so that we can have the comparison I shall then consent to change the resolution, and have the harbor of Portland examined and a report made on that alone; but I repeat I have no idea that this examination will occasion a delay of three days. It will be wholly unimportant so far as the delay to Portland is concerned, and I do think that there can be no injury to the Senate, to the country, to anybody if we have this examination so that we can compare the two harbors of Portland and New London together, and so decide on their relative and absolute merits.

The previous examination which has been alluded to, so far from being a reason why this should not be done, is a reason why it should, and is a conclusive reason against what is now urged by way of delay. That examination will probably aid the officers so far in making the present one that in a very short period of time the examination can be made so as to be satisfactory. I do hope that this amendment will be adopted.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move to strike out that portion of the resolution which fixes any particular place of examination, so that a board appointed by the Navy Department shall make an examination generally. I suppose Senators are aware of the fact that this is a new necessity growing out of the construction of an iron navy. It is desirable to have fresh water in which to float these vessels to avoid the destruction which is incident to their being kept continually in salt water. This subject has never been investigated, I presume, because there has never been a necessity for the investigation before. I cannot, however, see the propriety of going to any one point and that only. Is it not better to say to the Department, "Examine generally and ascertain where is the best point for the floating of the iron-clads in fresh water?" If the best point be at Annapolis certainly that point ought to be selected. If the best place is at Philadelphia that ought to be selected. If, on the other hand, Portland, in Maine, be the best point we ought to select that. Certainly a very satisfactory examination, and such an examination as would enable Congress to legislate upon the subject, would be secured by a resolution authorizing a general examination. Suppose a commission go to Portland, Maine, and report that that is a very suitable place. That report will not inform Congress whether it is the best location, because that commission would not have examined the other points. It seems to me that it is far better just to say that a commission shall be appointed to examine generally, and surely the Senator from Maine is not afraid of that investigation, for if his place be the best, then, of course, the board will select it; if it be not the best I know that he is too patriotic to desire its selection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Indiana will be in order when the present amendment shall have been disposed of. Not being an amendment to the pending amendment, it is not in order.

Mr. McDUGALL. In confirmation of the same view which the Senator from Indiana has presented, I desire to say a word. This subject is one that has attracted the attention of Senators and members of Congress for some years past, and it is one on which there has been great difference of opinion. I have an opinion of my own, which has been obtained with some carefulness. There is a large sheet of fresh water that enters into Tappan bay within sixteen or twenty miles of New York city; and that, with a dam and locks, can be made to float, in fresh water, a navy, convenient to business, convenient to the service. It is my impression, not altogether my conviction, but my impression, that that is the true point in which to locate the place where iron-clads are to be taken care of in fresh water when not needed on the ocean.

I think, however, the matter should be carefully inquired into by competent officers, who will regard the public service and not local interests. Of course, in this I have no local interest, but my attention was called to all these points long since, and I made it somewhat a matter of study; and my impression is that Tappan bay, above New York city, on the Hudson, is the most convenient, and would be the best point for this particular service. I am told by engineers that with a dam and locks, at small expense to the Government, fresh water enough to float a navy can be had, right there, convenient to all the machine-shops and to all the works of the first city of the Union. My impression is that that would be the best place; but I should like to have it inquired into by men who profess to understand this business as a science. I think it should be done. It is customary, in careful legislation, to have commissions appointed about questions of this kind, commissions of men of particular skill in their particular department; and I think a commission should be sent out to examine, and their report should be received as authority on the subject. It would govern me. I would not like to be governed entirely by my own particular opinions, for my information is not so extended as I should desire to have it in order to feel that I am perfectly informed.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I have no doubt many Senators have places in their eye, and are very learned on this subject. I do not profess to know anything about it. It is not a matter upon which I have an opinion with reference to what should be the place. I only say that at present there is a large public work going on at Portland, which is to go on whether this basin shall be made there or not—a work undertaken by a private company. The engineer of that work, a man of great experience and skill, known, I believe, to the honorable Senators from Michigan, has given the opinion that at a very small expense this thing can be accomplished there. Whether it can or not, I do not profess to know. As I stated before, I have made every effort to get some information on the subject, to let somebody look at it who was capable of judging, and who was an officer of the Government—just to that extent, no more—and make a report. I have utterly failed, because the Secretary of the Navy will not look at any place except League Island. That is the fact about it. He will not even permit the Department or himself or anybody else to have any information on the subject. This work is going on there day after day, and the facts can be ascertained. I do not know, even if this basin could be made at Portland and made at a slight expense, that it would be the proper place; I do not pretend to say that it would be. I merely want an examination made and the evidence with regard to it placed before the Department and before Congress that we may have the use of it.

With that view, as it is very late in the session, and I want the report to come in at this session, I ask simply for the appointment of this commission. My friend from Connecticut, who has had New London examined and treated of, wishes to put New London on here. Anybody can see what the result must be. It will probably take a week to make a thorough examination of this place, and then the report is to be made; but if they are to go from that to New London, it will take just double the time, and if then to some other place the time is just so much increased. We are now getting toward the close of the session, and we can get the testimony with regard to Portland at this session. I do not wish the resolution to be embarrassed by these other places which gentlemen have had ample opportunity to investigate for themselves, and to offer their own resolutions and accomplish their own purposes; but they have not chosen to do that, and instead of taking that course they wait until a proposition is made with regard to one place and then try to load it down with theirs. I do not like that kind of practice. I do not think it is exactly the way we ought to treat each other.

Now, as to the suggestion which the honorable Senator from Indiana makes, that will defeat the resolution altogether; and I suppose that is what he is driving at. It just makes a general roving commission to go all over the country and examine all the territory of the United States and see where a place can be found. The result is perfectly manifest. The proposition is very plausible and very smooth, like everything else that my honorable friend from Indiana does; but if you look through it, you see what the result is. We shall get no information, probably for years, on the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.) The morning hour having expired, it becomes the duty of the Chair to call up the unfinished business of yesterday.

Mr. SHERMAN. What is the unfinished business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the bill (H. R. No. 261) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Let that bill come up. I should oppose anybody else going on with any business that would interfere with that; and therefore I shall not ask that the appropriation bill be laid aside for the purpose of disposing of this resolution.

Mr. GRIMES. I wish to say one word; not on the subject of this resolution, but in justice to the Secretary of the Navy. According to my construction of the law and the duties of the Secretary of the Navy, he had no more authority to comply with the request of the Senator from Maine than I have. Suppose I had gone to the Senator from Maine, when he was Secretary of the Treasury, and asked him to send an engineer to the town where I live, for the purpose of selecting a proper site to establish a custom-house. We have got a surveyor of customs there, but no appropriation has ever been made for the establishment of a custom-house, and Congress has never contemplated any such thing. If I had made such a proposition he would have laughed at me. But the gravamen of the charge, I believe, is that the Secretary of the Navy will not interfere with anything or listen to anything as long as League Island is under consideration. What evidence is there of that? Did the Secretary tell the Senator from Maine so?

Mr. FESSENDEN. He told another gentleman so. I have it in a letter that he so stated.

Mr. GRIMES. He told another gentleman, who told another gentleman so, who wrote the Senator from Maine so. That is the kind of information we have. As I said when I rose, I have nothing to say in regard to this proposition, but simply to say, in justice to the Secretary of the Navy, that I think he had no more authority to detail an engineer—he had not any engineer, in the first place—

Mr. FESSENDEN. Then you do not agree with him on that point.

Mr. GRIMES. He had not any engineer for any such purpose as this. There is an engineer stationed in the Bureau of Yards and Docks, an engineer who superintends the construction of buildings, but no engineer who is capable, so far as I know, and judging from what I know, I doubt whether he is capable even to perform the duties he is assigned to perform, no one capable of entering upon the investigation of any such grave subject as is proposed by this resolution.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I wish to say one word in reply to that. The Secretary of the Navy made no such point to me. He did not state that he had no authority to do this, nor did he even suggest it.

Mr. CONNESS. As this resolution is now before the Senate, I hope we shall get a vote upon it before the appropriation bill is taken up.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I would rather not take the vote upon it. I want to go on with the appropriation bill. I should object to any body else proceeding, and therefore I shall not ask that this resolution be proceeded with now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. House bill No. 261 is before the Senate.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I merely wish to suggest that the amendment I proposed to the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That question is not before the Senate at this time.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I only wish to present it, that by the courtesy of the Senate it may be considered as before the body.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It may be received by unanimous consent.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I ask the Secretary to read it as an amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from California will be received and will be read when the joint resolution is again before the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. Before the appropriation bill is proceeded with, I desire to make a report from a committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The consular and diplomatic appropriation bill is before the Senate, but by unanimous consent the Chair will receive reports and other morning business.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the memorial of William Syphax, praying to be confirmed in his title to a tract of land in the Arlington estate, (so-called,) Virginia, granted to his mother by the late G. W. P. Custis in the year 1862, reported a bill (S. No. 321) for the relief of Maria Syphax; which was read and passed to a second reading.

Mr. CLARK. The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of D. D. Sublett, praying for compensation for services rendered in taking the eighth census in the county of Morgan, State of Kentucky, have directed me to make an adverse report thereon, there being power to pay the claim at the Department. I move that the report be printed. The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 462) granting pension to Mrs. Sally Andrews, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Mrs. Sarah E. Brewer, praying for an extra pension in consequence of the loss of her husband and two sons in the Army, reported adversely thereon, there being no proof to sustain the prayer of the petitioner, and asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred a bill (S. No. 296) to incorporate the America Fire and Marine Insurance Company of Washington, District of Columbia, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill (S. No. 178) to incorporate the Metropolitan Mining and Manufacturing Company, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 558) to amend the charter of the Washington Gas-Light Company, reported it without amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Joseph W. J. Holmes, sr., praying for compensation for property destroyed in Columbia, South Carolina, by the United States forces under General Sherman, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. SPRAGUE, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred the petition of James S. Fish, and others, of the home guard of Rockcastle and Lincoln counties, in Kentucky, praying for compensation for services rendered during the threatened raid of the rebel John Morgan in 1862, submitted a report accompanied by a joint resolution (S. R. No. 94) providing for the payment of certain Kentucky militia forces. The joint resolution was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. YATES, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred a bill (S. No. 290) to incorporate the National Life and Accident Insurance Company of the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment.

PASSPORTS.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 568) to repeal section twenty-three of chapter seventy-nine of the acts of the third session of the Thirty-Seventh Congress, relating to passports, have had it under consideration, and have directed me to report it back with an amendment; and as it is a short bill, I ask that it be put on its passage. It will take but a moment.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which repeals section twenty-three of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1864, and for the year ending the 30th of June, 1863, and for other purposes."

The Committee on the Judiciary reported the bill with an amendment, to add at the end of the bill, "and hereafter passports shall be issued only to citizens of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read the third time. It was read the third time and passed.

DIRECT TAX IN WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 90) to suspend temporarily the collection of the direct tax within the State of West Virginia, to report it back without amendment and recommend its passage; and as the mischief intended to be cured is now going on, I should be glad if the Senate would indulge me with the present consideration of the resolution; it can occupy but a moment or two at most.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. The circumstances which have led me to introduce this resolution are briefly these: at the time this direct tax was imposed, the State of West Virginia was not in existence; nevertheless we admitted the obligation of the tax to be laid upon our lands. Commissioners were appointed to collect the tax in the State of Virginia, and they have been operating for some time. We have had no notice of any intention to collect that tax within our limits, and as late as the 4th of this month the commissioners appointed by the State of Virginia have issued a notice requiring the people in a certain district of West Virginia to pay their taxes at once. Several of the counties within that district are those that have been most devastated by the war; and the Legislature of West Virginia at its late session remitted and released the State tax for four years on that very district. But, sir, we have a claim, as the Senate will remember, against the United States amounting to twice as much as our share of the direct tax, and in the bill which has already passed the Senate for the payment of that claim, it is provided that our share of the direct tax of the old State of Virginia is to be deducted from the amount found due us. This collection is producing a great deal of distress in those counties. As I have already said, they are the counties in the State which are perhaps least able to bear it, although I presume the process will go on.

This resolution proposes simply to suspend the collection of this tax until the 1st of March next, which will enable the Legislature to hold its annual session, or until the accounts of the State with the General Government are adjusted, which will probably be done and the money paid in the course of two or three months. We are able to pay this tax, if we had any permission to do it. We do not ask the abatement which was allowed to other States who were allowed to pay it, and we are not included in the relief bill that has been proposed in the House of Representatives, which refers only to the rebel States. As this cannot be of any injury to the Government, and as a balance of money on any fair adjustment of accounts is actually due to the State of West Virginia, I trust this relief will be granted by the Senate.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I notice in reading over the resolution that it provides for a suspension of the collection of this tax until the 1st of March next, or until an adjustment shall be made with the State. That would put it in the power of the Secretary of the Treasury to suspend it forever, or of the State, if they did not make an adjustment. I apprehend the Senator does not mean that it should have that construction. I suggest to him whether the phraseology should not be altered so as to provide that it shall be suspended until March, unless the accounts are sooner adjusted.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. Very well.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I suppose that was the intention.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I accept that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution has not been read at length to the Senate. It will now be read.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, which directs the Secretary of the Treasury to suspend the further collection within the State of West Virginia of any part of the direct tax imposed by the act of August 5, 1861, until the 1st day of March next, or until the adjustment of the claims of the State against the United States.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move to amend the resolution by striking out the words "or until" and inserting "unless the claims of the said State against the United States are sooner adjusted." A bill has already passed the Senate appointing a commissioner to adjust those claims.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia moves to amend the resolution in the seventh line by striking out the words "or until" and inserting "unless;" and in the eighth line by striking out the words "adjustment of the;" and at the end of the resolution by inserting the words "are sooner adjusted;" so that it will read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to suspend the further collection within the State of West Virginia of any part of the direct tax imposed by the act of August 5, 1861, until the 1st day of March next, unless the claims of the said State against the United States are sooner adjusted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. STEWART asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 322) to transfer the Bureau of Indian Affairs from the Department of the Interior to the War Department; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DOOLITTLE subsequently said: The Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] introduced a few moments since a bill to transfer the Bureau of Indian Affairs from the Department of the Interior to the War Department; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

I think that bill should be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator make that motion?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEWART. I do not see the necessity for that change. As the proposition is to transfer the Indian Bureau to the War Department I do not know why it might not go to the Committee on Military Affairs, and I think it quite important that it should go to that committee.

Mr. CLARK. It seems to me it certainly ought to go to the Committee on Indian Affairs, the committee who naturally consider such subjects, and not the Committee on Military Affairs. They know the condition of affairs in the Indian Bureau, and it is not supposed that the Military Committee do. It should go to the committee that is conversant with the matter proposed to be changed.

Mr. STEWART. I beg the Senator's pardon. I doubt whether anybody is familiar with Indian affairs. We hear constantly that it is the most mixed and discordant branch of the public service. Any one traveling through the Indian country will see that the whole system is a very defective one. The general knowledge of the system is defective; every one knows that it is defective; and certainly what little knowledge a party here may have of the details, will not be very important in considering the propriety of this change.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Extended debate on the question of reference is not in order.

Mr. STEWART. I hope the bill will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin moves that this bill be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. NESMITH. Is the question debatable?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate has usually allowed a limited debate on the question of reference, but extended debate is not in order. It is not in order to give extended reasons why it should be referred to one committee or the other.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Has the bill not been already sent to the Committee on Military Affairs?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has not been referred to any committee.

Mr. NESMITH. I desire to state that the Committee on Indian Affairs had this whole subject under consideration, and a sub-committee, consisting of some members of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House and some of the Senate, gave their attention to the subject during the last summer, made very extensive investigations, and have collected a great many facts in a report bearing on the subject. It is a subject upon which the Committee on Military Affairs, as a committee, I apprehend, have no particular knowledge. I know that a great deal of information on this subject, which it is necessary to have in order to act understandingly upon it, has been collected by the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I believe every principle of propriety would send the bill to that committee.

Mr. STEWART. On that statement I withdraw my objection to its reference to the Indian Committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill, then, will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. WILSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 323) to fix the military peace establishment of the United States; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 324) for the relief of John Hastings, late surveyor and depository of public moneys at Pittsburgh; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CLARK subsequently said: The Senator from New York, who is not now in his seat, [Mr. MORGAN,] introduced a bill for the relief of John Hastings, and an order was made referring it to the Committee on Commerce. The Committee on Claims has had that matter under consideration for quite a number of years, and last year there was a bill passed for his relief, and I wish the order referring this bill to the Committee on Commerce to be suspended until the Senator from New York comes in, when I will move to refer it to the Committee on Claims, where it ought to go.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That course will be taken if there be no objection. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. MORRILL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 325) to give certain powers to the levy court of the county of Washington, in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. KIRKWOOD asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 93) for the appointment of a commission to examine and report upon certain claims of the State of Iowa; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I move that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, and printed.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I suggest that it should go to the Committee on Claims, and not to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CLARK. What is the nature of it?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. It is in relation to certain claims of the State of Iowa.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I think it had better go to the Committee on Military Affairs. The claims grow out of military affairs.

Mr. JOHNSON. For moneys expended during the war?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Yes, sir.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. For raising troops?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Yes, sir; for raising troops.

The joint resolution was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. K. MEHAFFEY, one of its Clerks, announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 477) further to provide for the safety of the lives of passengers on board of vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, to regulate the salaries of steamboat inspectors, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 591) for the relief of Thomas D. Burrall;

A bill (H. R. No. 589) for the relief of Delia A. Jacobs, late Delia A. Fitzgerald;

A bill (H. R. No. 508) to amend the organic acts of the Territories of Nebraska, Colorado, Dakota, Montana, Washington, Idaho, Arizona, Utah, and New Mexico; and

A bill (H. R. No. 590) for the relief of William Mann and Jacob Senneff.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed an enrolled bill (H. R. No. 280) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. NESMITH. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution No. 103.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I must object to it. I have now given way for half an hour, and cannot consent to the taking up of any other bill.

Mr. NESMITH. This is a very brief resolution, which will not probably occupy two minutes. It merely proposes to refer a case to the Court of Claims.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The appropriation bill is really before the Senate, and any objection will prevent the taking up of the joint resolution.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator can take it up to-morrow just as well.

Mr. NESMITH. I should be very much obliged to the Senator if he would allow me to take it up now.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If I did not have to oblige anybody else, I would do it with all my heart.

Mr. NESMITH. I presume there will be nobody else.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Well, I will not object.

Mr. SPRAGUE. Mr. President—

Mr. FESSENDEN. I cannot give way any further. I objected to my friend from Oregon taking up a resolution, but I said I would give way to him if I did not have to oblige anybody else. Now I see the whole business of the Senate is coming in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the appropriation bill is before the Senate.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I have been trying all the morning to present a petition.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It can be presented just as well to-morrow as this morning.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I desire that it may go to the Committee on Commerce to-day, in order that it may be acted on to-morrow.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is exceedingly disagreeable to me to object in any case, but I have given way for thing after thing for half an hour after the regular time. I did say to the Senator from Oregon that I would give way to his resolution, but he has lost the floor. If, however, Senators will agree to stop there, I will give way so far as to allow the Senator's petition to be presented and my friend from Oregon to call up his resolution, which will give rise to no debate, as I understand.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I will agree to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The petition will be received, if there be no objection.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SPRAGUE presented a memorial of citizens of Rhode Island interested in the navigation of Narragansett bay, praying that the light now kept at Nayatt Point may be removed to the beacon at Cononicut Point, proposed to be constructed; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Union of Washington, District of Columbia, praying for the passage of a law creating them a body politic and corporate; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Now my friend from Oregon can get up his resolution.

Mr. NESMITH. I will give way for fear of disturbing the equanimity of my friend from Maine. I prefer to let the matter go over and take the risk.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I am very much obliged to the Senator.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

A bill (H. R. No. 477) further to provide for the safety of the lives of passengers on board of vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, to regulate the salaries of steamboat inspectors, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Commerce.

A bill (H. R. No. 508) to amend the organic acts of the Territories of Nebraska, Colorado, Dakota, Montana, Washington, Idaho, Arizona, Utah, and New Mexico—to the Committee on Territories.

A bill (H. R. No. 589) for the relief of Delia A. Jacobs, late Delia A. Fitzgerald—to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

A bill (H. R. No. 590) for the relief of William Mann and Jacob Senneff—to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

A bill (H. R. No. 591) for the relief of Thomas D. Burrall—to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 261) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th June, 1867, and for other purposes.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Finance was in line fifty-two of section one, to insert "including loss by exchange thereon;" so as to make the clause read:

For salaries of consuls general, consuls, commercial agents, and thirteen consular clerks, including loss by exchange thereon, namely.

Mr. FESSENDEN. With regard to that, I should like to ask my friend from Ohio, as I was not present in the committee when the bill was considered, why those words "including loss by exchange thereon" are to be inserted here when they occur on page 5, line ninety-eight, before the appropriation. I do not see why you want the words in both places.

Mr. SHERMAN. The last one ought to be stricken out.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Very well, one or the other should be stricken out. The amendment may be adopted and the words stricken out in line ninety-eight afterward.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to amend as we go along, to strike out the words "including loss by exchange thereon" in line ninety-eight of section one.

Mr. SHERMAN. That was the purpose of the committee, undoubtedly.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment reported by the Committee on Finance was in line sixty-two of section one to insert "Barcelona" after "Boulogne;" in line sixty-seven to insert "Hankow" after "Hong Kong;" and in line seventy-two to insert "Nantes" after "Nice," among the consulates provided for in schedule B.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the proviso in schedule C, section one, line ninety-eight, "Provided, that the compensation of the consuls at Malta, St. John, (Canada East,) Nice, Lisbon, Santa Cruz, and Tampico, is established at $1,500 each, annually, and the salary of the consul at Nassau (New Providence) is established at $3,000," before the gross appropriation of $420,000 for salaries of consuls general, consuls, commercial agents, and consular clerks, and to insert the following proviso after the appropriation:

Provided, That the compensation of the consuls at Malta, St. John, (Canada East,) Nice, Lisbon, Santa Cruz, Tampico, Prince Edward Island, Barcelona, and Nantes, is established at $1,500 each, annually, and the compensation of the consuls at Nassau, (New Providence,) and Hankow is established at $3,000 each, annually.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Finance what the compensation of the consul at Nassau was prior to the war. I know that in the Committee on Commerce the compensation was proposed to be increased, and I should like to know what the compensation was before the war, as it is proposed now to make it $3,000. My impression is that it was then $1,500; and if it was $1,500 before, why is it necessary that it should be $3,000 now?

Mr. FESSENDEN. I was not present when this bill was considered in the Finance Committee, and I cannot very well answer.

Mr. SHERMAN. This is really a reduction. The Secretary of State thought it ought to be $3,000. I think the present salary is $4,000.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is $2,000 now, and the increase is to $3,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. Four thousand dollars is the present salary.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is $2,000 in the list I have here.

Mr. SHERMAN. But it was raised during the war to $4,000.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Then the increase ceased with the war; and it is $2,000 now, and this amendment increases it to $3,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. If so, it can be stricken out.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I move that "Nassau, (New Providence,)" be stricken out of this amendment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I am told that it is a very expensive place, and probably $3,000 is not too large a salary.

Mr. GRIMES. It is not more expensive than other places where you pay only $1,500.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is a very important point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Rhode Island insist on his amendment?

Mr. SPRAGUE. Yes, sir; I move that "Nassau, (New Providence,)" be stricken out of the amendment of the committee. I also move to insert "Nassau, (New Providence,)" after "Nantes," in line seventy-two of section one, in order that it may be established at $1,500; otherwise it may be continued at $4,000 as at present.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is $2,000 according to the recently published list. It was raised temporarily during the war, and is now $2,000. There are a great many cases where an increase was temporarily made during the war; but the recently published list of diplomatic and consular officers of the United States, dated March, 1866, states the salary at Nassau at $2,000.

Mr. SPRAGUE. Then I am willing to leave it at $2,000, and my amendment is simply to strike out of the amendment of the committee the words "Nassau, (New Providence,)"

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. I propose to amend the amendment of the committee by inserting after the word "annually" where it first occurs the words "that at Nice to commence December 14, 1865." The consulate at Nice had a salary of $1,500, the same as is provided by the amendment of the committee, which was to continue according to the terms of the law until the close of the war. That salary actually ceased on the 14th of December last. During this period a gentleman from my State, one who was many years associated with me upon the bench, has filled the place as consul. He was obliged, in consequence of the health of his family, to resign his place upon the bench and go abroad. The salary is very meager, $1,500 a year, not half enough to support himself and family. It is a very expensive place to live, and one where the consuls of other nations have very much larger salaries than we provide for our consul, and a place where the duties of the consul are constantly increasing, and largely increasing. Our European squadrons winter at Nice, or some portion of them, so that the duties of the place have been altogether larger than ever before. Judge Aldis, the consul, has been performing the duties during the whole of this time without any salary. The fees are very small, I think less than $100 during the last year. It is a place that is very largely resorted to by persons from this country and from all countries for health. Most of the foreigners there are persons who are invalids, and those from this country need the attention and sometimes the assistance of an agent of this Government. It is only bare justice that the salary should commence when the former salary ceased, on the 14th of December.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I can only say with regard to this case that the facts are undoubtedly as stated by the honorable Senator from Vermont. When this gentleman went out he supposed the salary to be $1,500, because it was raised to $1,500 during the war. We now propose with regard to some half a dozen of these places, where we are satisfied that we must have consuls and that the fees will not pay them, to give them a salary of $1,500. That is right enough; but if we go back in one case to make up the deficiency between the period when the salary ceased and the beginning of the next fiscal year, I do not see why the same rule should not be applied to all the other places where we have paid a salary of $1,500 during the war. If we begin this system with regard to Nice there is the same propriety in going through with it in regard to all these other consulates. As the policy has been as a general rule not to go backward and pay arrears of salary, the committee do not recommend anything of that kind. It is a matter for the Senate to decide whether it is worth while to make up to this gentleman who is consul at Nice what he would have received had the salary been $1,500, from December until the present time. It strikes me that the difference is not very great, and if it really costs no more to live there than the salary amounts to, this little addition will not give him much.

Mr. POLAND. It is very true, as the honorable Senator from Maine says, that the amount of half a year's salary of $1,500 is not a very large sum; but when the salary is not more than half enough to support the gentleman and his family at the place, it becomes a matter of some importance. I will say, in reference to the gentleman who holds this small consular position, that he is a gentleman who is amply qualified to represent us at any of the courts of Europe. He is in the place, and I know that when he went there, although as the law then stood the salary was only to last during the war, he was informed by Mr. Seward, Secretary of State, that the position of that place and the wants of the Government were such that undoubtedly the salary would be continued. He was told that although as the law then stood it was only a temporary position, the salary undoubtedly would be made permanent, and that he might rely on that when he received the appointment. In reference to many of the other cases which the Senator named, where the salary ceased at the same time, the consuls' fees are larger than the salary provided. One object of the Government in providing a salary instead of fees was, that the fees in some cases would be a much larger compensation than the salary of $1,500 which the bill provides, so that the Government really makes a saving by taking away the fees and reducing the officer to a salary of $1,500; but that reason does not apply to this case. I trust that the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. SUMNER. I know Mr. Aldis very well, and have known him for many years. I need add nothing to what the Senator from Vermont has said with regard to his eminent merits. He was one of the Senator's associates upon the bench of the supreme court of Vermont, and I have regarded it as a substantial benefit to our country that he was willing to accept this post. He conferred with me before he did accept it, and I most earnestly counseled him to accept it, if he could make up his mind under the circumstances to leave the country; for I desired to secure his services there. I shall, therefore, vote for this amendment; and I make this distinction between this case and the others, that in this case we actually have evidence with regard to the character of the incumbent and to the necessity of this increase. I have conferred with my friend, the Senator from Vermont; I know the evidence that he has, and I also have some evidence myself direct from Nice, all showing the necessity of this increase; and since I am informed of that necessity, and am familiar with the merits of the incumbent, and as the amendment is now moved, and I am to vote upon it, I shall vote in favor of it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In addition to the objection which I before stated, there is another difficulty in the way, and that is that in the mean time, from the time the salary ceased up to the 1st of July next, this officer will have been receiving his fees; and this amendment gives him a proportion of $1,500 from last December, so that he would be getting the salary for the same time that he was receiving the fees.

Mr. POLAND. I will modify that.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not see any reason applicable to this case which is not applicable to every other one that we have. This officer may be, and unquestionably is, a gentleman of high character and standing; but a consul is a consul, and if we do this in one case there is no reason why we should not do it in others where the salary has not been received.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think there is a special reason which applies to this case that has not yet been wholly stated; and it may apply to some others, or it may not. Until some others are suggested to which it does apply, I shall take it that it does not apply to any others. That reason is that Nice is the winter naval station for our Mediterranean fleet. They have been there most of the time, if I am correctly informed, this winter, or at least a considerable period of the time.

Mr. GRIMES. It is not the headquarters of the Mediterranean fleet; the headquarters is Lisbon.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I of course yield to the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs as to where the technical headquarters of the fleet is. I have not been there myself, and I cannot say; but if I am correctly informed by the newspapers, and from private information from Nice and from Florence, the Mediterranean fleet, or some considerable portion of it, has spent some time this winter at Nice; and I think the chairman of the Naval Committee will not dispute me on that. I have credible reason to believe that this gentleman who has been referred to, and who is a gentleman, has been obliged by those ordinary courtesies and duties belonging to consuls, where any American citizens or sailors are, to spend a sum of money which would equal the amount of this small salary for the short time during which it is proposed to allow it to him, in those necessary acts of hospitality and assistance which any man who represents his country in any position abroad feels bound to incur, and which, of course, ordinarily uses up a very large part of his salary. This gentleman, in this instance, if I am correctly informed, has done this, and therefore it appears to me that there is a special reason which applies to his case, and which may not apply to the others, for having the salary which he has really expended in the appropriate duties of his consulate, and in those hospitalities which, to be sure, the law does not oblige him to perform, but which a decent sense of respect for his countrymen requires him to perform, should, to this small degree, be made up.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected—ayes seven, noes not counted.

Mr. POLAND. One objection to the amendment I offered before was that it was not equal and exact justice to all. I now propose to amend the amendment of the committee by adding to it this proviso:

And provided, That in each of the consulates named in this schedule, where the salary has ceased, under the provisions of the act of August 2, 1861, the salary shall commence at the time the former salary ceased.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope that amendment will not be adopted. It is to make up arrears to all these consuls.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The amendment of the Committee on Finance, as amended, was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was in line one hundred and thirteen of section one, to increase the appropriation "for interpreters to the consulates in China, and to the consular court at Bangkok in Siam" from $6,800 to $8,300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was to add as an additional section the following.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That all fees collected by any consul or commercial agent not mentioned in schedule B or C, or by any vice consul or com- mercial agent appointed to perform their duties, or by any other person in their behalf, shall be accounted for to the Secretary of the Treasury in the same mode and manner as is provided for in section eighteen of the act approved August 18, 1856, entitled "An act to regulate the diplomatic and consular system of the United States." And when the fees so collected by any consul or commercial agent amount to more than $2,000 in any one year the excess for that year shall be paid to the Secretary of the Treasury in the mode provided for by said act.

Mr. FESSENDEN. This amendment was reported on the strength of statements made to the committee by various gentlemen, that some of the consularships which are paid by fees alone afforded to the consuls very large salaries, it is estimated as high as $10,000 in some instances, and in one case even as much as $20,000. They have vice consuls and commercial agents at different places under them, covering a large extent of territory, and receive all the fees. The places paid by fees in this way embrace some of the best positions in Europe. It was stated on very good authority, and I have no doubt is the fact, that many of them actually receive very large pay from their fees, much larger than any of the consuls at regular salaried posts. The difficulty, however, about it is, that it is rather troublesome to get at it. Our consular system now is working admirably well. The fees being accounted for to the Treasury, and the consuls generally being paid by salaries, the system has now got to be almost self-supporting; it costs very little. The fees very nearly pay the salaries provided for; I do not know exactly how nearly. In those consulates, however, where the consuls are paid by fees entirely, they do not account for the fees, and they amount in some cases, as we are informed, to a very considerable sum—much more than we pay to consuls who receive salaries. I find that after this amendment was drawn and reported, a communication was sent to the State Department requesting information with regard to it and the opinion of the Department in relation to it. In reply we received a communication from the Secretary of State, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Secretary read the following communication:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
WASHINGTON, April 25, 1866.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 23d instant, I have the honor to state that the proposed section was doubtless drawn up with the commendable and very desirable object of preventing any consular officer from receiving an undue amount of compensation from his fees.

Nevertheless, I am of opinion that laws already existing furnish ample safeguards against the apprehended inconveniences, while they are not liable to some of the objections which seem to me to lie against the proposition now presented.

Those objections are:

1. The proposed section requires a certain class of consular officers to report their fees to the Secretary of the Treasury, instead of, as at present, to the Secretary of State, by whom they are submitted to Congress and to the President. As the Department of State is charged with the appointment, direction, supervision, and removal of these officers, it would seem to be essential to a proper discharge of its functions that they should report to it.

2. The proposed section appears to have been drawn up under the erroneous impression that all the fees received constitute a merely personal compensation to the consular agent receiving them. It is to be considered that out of these fees are also to be paid the office rent, clerk hire, and all other expenses incurred in the performance of the services for which the fees are exacted. It is also to be remembered that section fifteen of the act of August 18, 1856, already provides that "every consular agent shall be entitled, as compensation for his services, to such fees as he may collect in pursuance of the provisions of this act, or so much thereof as shall be determined by the President; and the principal officer of the consulate or commercial agency within the limits of which such consular agent shall be appointed, shall be entitled to the residue, if any, in addition to any other compensation allowed him by this act for his services therein." Inasmuch as the duties and labors of every such consul are proportionately increased by every such agency over which he has supervision and for whose acts he is responsible, to abrogate this portion of the act, as this proposition seems to contemplate, would be to require the consul in such cases to assume additional labors and responsibilities, attended probably by increased expenses, for which he is to receive no compensation, or else to discourage the appointment of agencies which the growth of American trade in his district really demands.

3. Values and prices, as well as the duties, responsibilities, and expenditures of consular officers, vary so greatly in different parts of the world that a uniform limit of $2,000 would be, in different localities, of very unequal value—in some too little, in others too great; and in others, (after the usual deductions above mentioned are made,) would leave to the consular agent no compensation whatever. A limitation of the compensation of consuls and commercial agents to a fixed and equal sum at all posts, is not in accordance with previous legislation upon the same subject, which seems to have been intended to graduate the compensation according to the amount of labor, the amount of responsibility, and the amount of expenditure, &c., required at each post.

4. The President has the power, and it has usually been the practice of the Department to recommend its exercise, to nominate and appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, full consuls responsible directly to this Department, (with such compensation as Congress may decide to be suitable for the particular place in question,) to all places where the increase of business seems to warrant it, instead of continuing subordinate consular agents, who are responsible only to the consuls by whom they were appointed.

It can hardly be deemed necessary to guard against any neglect on the part of the executive department to take such action, for the amount of the fees received at every port is, as before stated, duly submitted to Congress and printed every year, showing precisely where such changes are needed.

If under the present system any consular officer is likely to receive too much compensation for his services, the true remedy would seem to be either to diminish the amount of the fees exacted or else give him a fixed salary. Compensation of all public officers of the United States is expected to be graduated either according to work or according to time. The proposition in question does not seem to carry out either of these objects, since it does not guaranty a fixed salary, but pays for a certain amount of work, and then requires an additional amount to be performed without any pay at all.

5. It would also seem to make it the interest of consular agents to discourage consular business whenever it exceeds a certain amount, whereas it is for the advantage of revenue and of trade that all such business should be performed promptly, willingly, and effectually.

It is not deemed necessary or expedient, therefore, to recommend a change in the present system. That it works justly to the Government and the consular officers is best shown by the fact that, as at present administered, the consular service has been for the past three years, and for the first time in the national history, steadily and gradually reaching a point where it will soon become a self-supporting system, paying all its own expenses.

The amount paid for compensation of consuls and commercial agents during the last four fiscal years, and the amount of fees received during the same years, are as follows:

It is not doubted that the increase of fees at some points, and the reduction of salaries at others which have already taken place during the present fiscal year, will, at its termination, show that the consular system is now practically self-supporting. But it is doubtful whether the proposed change would not weaken its efficiency, and thus again make it a drain upon the Treasury.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

Hon. WILLIAM P. FESSENDEN, Chairman of Committee on Finance, United States Senate.

Mr. GRIMES. It ought to be known at the State Department how much salary is received by a good many of these consuls, because I understand there have been persons appointed from that Department to the most valuable consulships in Europe. They have an admirable opportunity there to select the best places, and I guess it will be discovered by an examination of the official list that they have generally selected places where the consuls are paid by fees. If any gentleman desires to be accurately informed on this subject, if he will go to the office of the Fifth Auditor of the Treasury, he will there get some authentic information. I am told by officers who have charge of the consular business there that there are consuls in the employment of the United States who receive salaries of from eight thousand to twenty-five thousand dollars.

Mr. JOHNSON. In fees?

Mr. GRIMES. In fees alone—at such places as Leeds and Bradford, and places of that kind in Yorkshire and Lancashire. It is in consequence of some law that was passed since the beginning of the rebellion requiring triple invoices.

Mr. SUMNER. That is the secret of the whole thing.

Mr. GRIMES. That requirement is really an imposition upon the importing merchant.

Mr. FESSENDEN. No, it is necessary to protect the revenue. It has been a very great protection.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think that this amendment is eminently necessary, and I hope it will prevail. It will be remembered by many of the older Senators that some years ago the consular system had become corrupt; very great corruptions had crept into it. For example, the consul at Liverpool received as much as forty or fifty or sixty thousand dollars per annum. Congress took up the entire consular system and reviewed it, and fixed the salaries, the intention being to fix a salary at every important point. Then there were some unimportant points which were not deemed of sufficient consequence to justify the payment of a fixed salary, and those we left open to be paid by fees. The intention was to fix a salary at every point where the business would really warrant the payment of a salary to the consul. Upon that principle the whole consular system was reorganized. This was, perhaps, ten or twelve years ago. Since that time some of the points that were not then deemed of sufficient importance to authorize a fixed salary have now become points of great business importance, and I am informed that now the same evils have crept into those places which existed prior to the reorganization of the system, that some of the consuls, as the Senator from Iowa says, receive, perhaps, eight or ten or fifteen thousand dollars a year, when if the places had been of sufficient importance to warrant the payment of $1,500 a year the salary would have been fixed at $1,500. As the Senator has suggested, I believe that these fat pickings are generally selected by those who are not particularly well known to Senators, and without any special reason being given for their obtaining such appointments.

I hope that this amendment will prevail, and that a limit of $2,000 will be fixed. If when the system was reorganized these places had been deemed of sufficient importance to justify the payment of a salary at all, $1,500 would have been fixed as the limit; they would have been placed in schedule C. If this amendment shall not prevail, I shall propose to put them in that lower schedule.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think that probably would be an error the other way. I notice that many of these consulates are at very important places, where a great deal of business is done. Take, for instance, Sheffield. The consul there is paid by fees. The consul at Manchester, which is about the same sort of place, has a salary of $3,000. Sheffield probably is equal in importance to Manchester.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is now; it was not then.

Mr. SUMNER. More important.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It is more important, perhaps. Then there are Falmouth, Plymouth, and Bradford. They are all said to be places of importance.

Mr. GRIMES. Bradford is very important.

Mr. SUMNER. Bradford is a great center.

Mr. FESSENDEN. They have commercial agents and vice consuls whom they have to pay out of their fees. I should think that $3,000 might safely be fixed as a limit. My only doubt about the amendment was whether $2,000 would be too small at some of these large places.

Mr. SUMNER. I think it would be.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If we amend the amendment by inserting $3,000 in place of $2,000 it will probably be right, and perhaps by the next session we can get the information we ought to have in reference to all these places, so that we may fix the proper salary at each.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not object to that.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I feel disposed, therefore, to move to amend the amendment by striking out $2,000 and inserting $3,000 in the eleventh line, and then to let it stand; and I make that motion.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire to amend the amendment further by inserting the word "such" after the word "any" in line ten, so as to read, "when the fees so collected by any such consul or commercial agent," so as to confine the operation of the section to these particular cases.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is right.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask the honorable chairman whether the act of August 18, 1856, referred to in the particular amendment, does not require the consuls to report to the State Department.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think not; but the amendment was not drawn by me but by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. JOHNSON. I understood the letter from the Secretary of State to the Senator from Maine to say that by the law as it now stands they make a report to the State Department.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is those who are paid by fees.

Mr. JOHNSON. And he objects to this particular amendment on the ground that so far as it is concerned you are taking the consuls away from the State Department.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think by that act they report to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. SHERMAN. The intention was to extend the provision of the old act which applied only to scheduled or salaried consuls to the consuls who receive compensation in fees.

Mr. JOHNSON. That I understand.

Mr. SHERMAN. The eighteenth section of the act of August, 1856, provides that—

"All fees collected at any of the legations, or by the consuls general, consuls, and commercial agents mentioned in schedules B and C, and by vice consuls and vice commercial agents appointed to perform their duties, or by any other persons in their behalf, shall be accounted for to the Secretary of the Treasury, and held subject to his draft."

Whoever drew the communication for the State Department, made a mistake, because the language of the law was followed in drawing this section.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments reported by the Committee on Finance are now completed.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to propose this amendment to come in at the close of the first session in the bill:

For repairs of cemetery, fences, and sexton's house belonging to the United States in the city of Mexico, $1,500, to be expended under the direction of the President of the United States.

I have a report of the Committee on Commerce on this subject which can be read if desired. The appropriation is for the repairs of the cemetery in the city of Mexico where our soldiers are buried.

Several SENATORS. State the substance of it.

Mr. CHANDLER. The cemetery is out of repair; the fences are down; and the consul at the city of Mexico and our late minister in Mexico united in recommending that this appropriation be made for the repairs of the cemetery. That is the substance of the report, but it can be read, if Senators desire to hear it.

Mr. SUMNER. I do not think it is necessary.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I suggest whether this item had better not be put on some other bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is a consular recommendation, and the Committee on Commerce proposed to put it on this bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. But it is not a consular matter.

Mr. CHANDLER. It may as well go on this bill as any other.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In that I differ from the Senator. It strikes me as singularly inappropriate to this bill. It may well go on the miscellaneous bill at the end of the session, where we insert various miscellaneous items. I think it ought not to go on this bill. I do not object to the appropriation, but I do not think this is the proper place for it. We never do put things of that sort in this bill. It has nothing to do with the consular and diplomatic service.

Mr. CHANDLER. It may just as well go on this bill as any other.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There is no propriety in putting on this bill something entirely inappropriate to it, when there are other bills to which it would be appropriate.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think it more appropriate to this bill than any other.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There are no consuls buried there.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is a matter brought to our notice by a recommendation of one of our consuls. I think it belongs quite as much to this bill as to any other.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not think it is to be put on the consular and diplomatic bill merely because a consul advised it, when there are other bills to which it would be appropriate.

Mr. CHANDLER. The committee thought it better to put it on this bill, and therefore instructed me to report it here.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Probably it did not occur to the committee that this was not the proper place for it.

Mr. CHANDLER. What place would be more proper?

Mr. FESSENDEN. The miscellaneous appropriation bill at the end of the session; it would be very proper there.

Mr. SUMNER. I am sure that more than once similar appropriations have been put on this bill. I remember that at least once I moved such an appropriation to the civil and diplomatic bill to repair the cemetery at Constantinople.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Is the money to be expended by the consul?

Mr. CHANDLER. Under his supervision. I think this is the place for it.

Mr. SUMNER. I think it may come in here.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If it is a proper appropriation I suppose there will be no harm done by putting it here; but I should like to hear the evidence.

Mr. CHANDLER. Let the report be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

The Committee on Commerce to whom was referred the letter of Hon. William H. Seward, Secretary of State, bearing date March 5, 1866, indorsing communications from Marcus Ottenberg, relative to the condition of the American cemetery at the city of Mexico, report:

That by the provisions of the act of Congress, approved September 28, 1850, $10,000 was appropriated for purchasing, walling, and ditching a piece of land near the city of Mexico for a cemetery or burial ground for such of the officers and soldiers of our Army as fell in battle or died in and around said city, and for the interment of American citizens who had died or may die in said city. The money thus appropriated was expended by direction of the President of the United States for the object specified in the act. Seven hundred and fifty American officers and soldiers who died in and about the city of Mexico during the war, were interred in the ground thus acquired, and since the war a large number of American citizens have also been interred there. The American consul now represents that the cemetery is in a neglected and dilapidated condition, and estimates that it will require $1,500 to repair the cemetery, the sexton's house, and for other necessary repairs in and about the premises. The committee recommend that $1,500 be appropriated for the purposes specified, to be expended under the direction of the President.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to move an amendment to come in on page 2, line sixteen, after the word "dollars," in the shape of a proviso:

Provided, That an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary appointed at any place where the United States are now represented by a minister resident shall receive the compensation fixed by law and appropriated for a minister resident and no more.

I should like to make a brief explanation of this amendment. It will be perceived from its place that it comes after the appropriation for salaries of envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary and ministers resident. The object in one word—that I will state precisely before proceeding into detail—is to authorize the Government to employ in its discretion persons with the title of envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary where it now employs ministers resident, but without any increase of salary. This subject has occupied the attention of the committee for several years; it has been more than once, I think, brought before the Senate. The committee in their recent consideration of it, I think, were unanimous that the good of the service, especially in Europe, required that this change should be made. From all the information that comes to us, it appears that our ministers at the courts where they have only the title of ministers resident play a second part to gentlemen with the title of envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary, though representing Governments which we certainly should not consider in point of rank in the world on an equality with ours. They are second to them; in short, to use a familiar illustration and simply in order to bring the difference home to the Senators, when they call upon business or appear anywhere they bear the same relation to the envoys extraordinary of those smaller Governments that, for instance, a member of the other House when he waits upon the President of the United States, as we know, bears to the Senators. The Senator is admitted to the President, when the member of the other House, as we know, waits. It is so now with the ministers resident of the United States as compared with persons of a higher title at the courts to which they are accredited, although those gentlemen with a higher title represent what I have already said we should regard as inferior Powers.

I hold in my hand, by way of illustration, the last Almanac of Gotha, for 1866, which is the diplomatic authority for the world, and has been now for about a century; and by way of example, I turn to the diplomatic list for the Netherlands, where it will be remembered we are represented by a patriotic citizen, well known to most of us, and who was connected with the press, Mr. Pike, with the title of minister resident. By looking at the list, I find at this same court that the Grand Duchy of Baden is represented by an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary, that Belgium, the adjoining country, and with a population much inferior to our own, is represented by an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary; that Denmark, a nation which now, since she has been shorn of the two provinces of Schleswig and Holstein, has not a million and a half of population, is represented by an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary. Spain, of course, is represented by an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary. Even the Grand Duchy of Hesse is so represented; so is the kingdom of Italy; so is the Duchy of Nassau; so is Portugal, so is Prussia, and so on. In transacting business the American minister resident at the court of the Hague is always treated as second to all these representatives. I have alluded to the relations which we bear to the head of the executive department here as compared with members of the other House. I doubt not that Senators know there is an advantage in that in the dispatch of business, in having access promptly and perhaps with a certain consideration which does not always attach to those of the inferior rank.

That, in brief, is an outline of the present condition of things. I think there are none of the courts where our representatives do not complain that they suffer personally and in the public interests which they represent through this inferior position, and the object of this proposition now moved is to relieve this evil. It is to secure to these representatives the advantages which we covet for our country to the end that their own respectability may be enhanced and that they may transact the public business with the most effect.

It is not proposed—and now I come to the suggestion which the Senator from Iowa has made in a whisper—it is not proposed that there shall be any increase of salary.

Mr. CONNESS. That will come next year.

Mr. SUMNER. I will come to that.

Mr. GRIMES. That is not the suggestion I made. The suggestion I made in a whisper, which the Senator seems to have heard, is that Mr. Pike, the gentleman to whom he alludes, in a letter to me ridiculed this whole proposition.

Mr. SUMNER. I think he must be the only one, then, that does it.

Mr. GRIMES. That may be. I have no correspondence with any but him.

Mr. SUMNER. I should like to see the letter.

Mr. GRIMES. I think the Senator from Maine has seen it.

Mr. SUMNER. Very well. I will finish what little I have to say. I can only say, that from my experience in this matter, with some opportunities of observation and reflection, and with no personal interest in it whatever, with no desire to advance the interest of any human being, and at this moment having no one of our functionaries in view, simply speaking for the interests of my country, as I understand them, abroad, I am satisfied that they would be promoted by this change. And now comes the remark of the Senator from California that next year will be the demand for an increase of salary.

Mr. CONNESS. Perhaps it may be a year further on.

Mr. SUMNER. Perhaps the year after, or ten years from now. I do not know that it may not come; but I bring this forward in good faith. I do not bring it forward merely by myself; I bring it forward now as the representative of the Committee on Foreign Relations on this floor, after having carefully considered it, and believing, as I do, that the public interests will be promoted by it.

Now, a question may arise as to the form in which it is presented. I should like to have the Secretary read the proposition before I comment on it.

The Secretary read the amendment.

Mr. SUMNER. It will be observed that the proposition does not undertake to empower the President, or to direct him, to make this change, but it assumes, according to a certain theory of the Constitution, that under the Constitution it is in the discretion of the President to send ambassadors, envoys extraordinary, or ministers resident, or any other diplomatic functionary in his discretion. Congress having only the discretion of supplying the means.

The Constitution says:

"He [the President] shall have power by and with the advice and consent of the Senate to make treaties, provided two thirds of the Senators present concur, and he shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate shall appoint, ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls."

It was in pursuance of this provision of the Constitution that in 1856, when our consular and diplomatic system was revised, the following provision was enacted; and here again you will observe that the provision does not undertake to empower the President to appoint ambassadors, envoys extraordinary, or other diplomatic functionaries, but it assumes that he may do it, and proceeds to supply the salary. The provision is as follows:

"That ambassadors, envoys extraordinary, and ministers plenipotentiary, ministers resident, commissioners, chargés d'affaires, and secretaries of legation, appointed to the countries hereinafter named in schedule A, shall be entitled to compensation for their services, respectively, at the rates per annum hereinafter specified; that is to say, ambassadors and envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary, the full amounts specified therefor in said schedule A; ministers resident and commissioners, seventy-five per cent.; chargés d'affaires, fifty per cent., and secretaries of legation, fifteen per cent. of the said amounts respectively.

Now, the proposition which I have moved proceeds, in harmony with this, simply to declare that where the President shall undertake to appoint an envoy extraordinary or minister plenipotentiary to any court where we are now represented by a minister resident there shall be only the salary of a minister resident. Proceeding with the theory of this act and a certain theory of the Constitution, the President has the power already to appoint to all these courts an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary if in his discretion he shall see fit, but there is no salary appropriated by law. If the amendment now offered should be adopted it would be in his discretion, at any of the courts where he shall see fit, to change our representative from a minister resident to an envoy extraordinary, but without any increase of salary; and the simple question remains whether it is not fit to give this discretion to the President. He is not called upon to exercise it. There are places where he may think it better to continue the minister resident.

Mr. FESSENDEN. He can do it now.

Mr. SUMNER. But there is no salary; the salary would not apply. The object of my amendment is to supply the salary in such cases. That is all. I have heard it observed that though the President may now, under the Constitution, appoint to any place an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary, he is, to a certain extent, restrained in the exercise of that power by the want of an appropriation to support an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary at such a court. This proposition meets that difficulty precisely. It empowers him, if he sees fit at any court, to raise the minister resident there to the rank of envoy extraordinary, to transfer the salary which he now has as minister resident to the other office. Legislation is required to enable him to do that.

I come again, then, to the simple question of expediency in the case. That is to be determined, I take it, by the testimony we receive from Europe. I should certainly be disposed to respect very much the testimony of the gentleman whom the Senator from Iowa quotes if it were given fairly on the facts. That is the reason why I said I should like to see his letter. I should respect it very much; but then I am free to say that I speak on this matter somewhat from my own individual observation for many years, almost for my whole life; and I have no hesitation in giving the opinion that the diplomatic interests of our country in Europe, at the courts where we are now represented by ministers resident, would be promoted by this change; and that was the opinion of the committee with which I have the honor to be associated, after the most careful consideration of it, not only this year, but during some years past.

Mr. WADE. Perhaps I ought to say a word on this subject, as I first moved it in committee. I did so upon information which I had received from some of our ministers abroad, gentlemen with whom I was formerly acquainted, who in letters to me mentioned that they were laboring under this disadvantage—not a disadvantage to themselves, but a disadvantage to the country. I suppose the object of sending a minister abroad at all is that he may have a position which will enable him to exercise as much influence as the Government that sends him can properly clothe him with.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to know the name of the Senator's correspondent.

Mr. WADE. The one to whom I refer particularly is Mr. Harvey, representing this country at the court of Portugal. Perhaps I ought not to state anything about this, but all he said on the subject is of a public character, and it is not derogatory to any gentleman to communicate it to the public. Mr. Harvey disclaims all desire for an increase of salary.

In this country we do not stand much upon the different grades or positions which diplomatic agents possess; they are altogether artificial; I think as little of them, perhaps, as anybody else; but in Europe it is different; they judge of men's importance frequently according to their name or grade or standing. Long custom there has made distinctions between the various grades of these officers. In the public law, the different order and dignity of the various grades of diplomatic agents is perfectly well understood and always has been. If a nation sees fit to be represented there by a minister of an inferior grade, it labors under an apparent disadvantage; he is not considered by his associates as being on an equal footing with those of them that are of the first rank. A minister of the first rank may, for instance, go into the presence of the emperor, or king, or highest officer of the State and communicate with him directly, where, by the etiquette of the nation, a minister of an inferior grade would not be permitted to do so, but would have to communicate with some subordinate officer.

Now, when we are entitled to consider ourselves among the first nations of the earth in point of population, of influence, of respectability, and in every point of view, I think it is a modesty that works to our disadvantage for us to refuse to send agents abroad with titles which will, in the estimation of those to whom we send them, place us upon a position as high as other nations. I am informed that by this course we detract from our influence abroad, and I should expect that would be the case, because foreign nations are not apt to rate a people much higher than they see fit to rate themselves. This amendment will cost us nothing. It is simply conferring a rank which is considered important abroad, although it is not deemed important among us, because we do not stand so much on this kind of etiquette as they do in Europe. As they do regard it of consequence, and as it is just as easy for us to give the highest title as the lowest, why should we not do it? It will give us an advantage abroad, and put us on a footing with other countries represented by the highest grades of diplomats. If we do not rate ourselves equal to them, we shall not be rated so by the customs of those nations. That is all there is about it. I do not think it needs an elaborate argument. I think it is a very cheap way of obtaining the influence we ought to have if we send diplomatic agents abroad at all.

Here let me say that if I could have my own way about it I never would have a resident minister abroad. I would abolish the whole of them. I do not think they are of any kind of importance to us. I do not think they do any good in our relations with Europe. There may be barbarous nations with which we have communication where a resident minister all the time may be of some service; but with those nations of Europe with whom we are in constant communication, having treaties well understood with each other, there is no more need for and no more importance to be attached to a resident minister than there is to have such agents sent by these States to each other. Now, if a difficulty springs up between this country and a European nation, we hardly ever settle that controversy by means of our minister there; we generally send a special agent to do that special business, and that is the way we ought to do the whole of it and rid ourselves of the entire incumbrance of this whole matter. But if we will have ministers abroad, let us have them of the first class; let us rate ourselves as we really are, on a standing and dignity with any nation of the earth. Let us do it unless we will abolish them, and if you will go that way with me I should like it much the best. That is all I have to say about it. It is a cheap way of rating ourselves as we ought to be rated and that to our advantage.

Mr. SUMNER called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. SHERMAN. Since the yeas and nays are to be called I feel bound to state, very briefly, the position I occupy in regard to this matter. I am perfectly willing, in order to meet the argument of my colleague and of the Senator from Massachusetts, to give the rank provided for, but I do not wish to do it in such a way that it will inevitably draw with it an increase of pay. The objection to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts is this: the law now confers upon an envoy extraordinary the salary of $10,000 a year; it is so fixed by law, and at the next session we shall undoubtedly have an application from every person appointed under this proviso for the legal salary, and we cannot refuse to grant it to him. The legal salary affixed to this title of envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary is by the law, first, $17,500 to a certain class named, then to another class $12,000, and to another class $10,000, and this compensation being fixed by law the persons appointed under this proviso will undoubtedly apply for the salary. I have submitted to the Senator from Massachusetts an additional section that will accomplish his object and the object of my colleague without involving this danger, and if that amendment is satisfactory to him—he now has it before him—I am perfectly willing to vote for it.

Mr. SUMNER. Very well. This would practically carry out the idea the committee had.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask that it be read, and I do not think any one will object to that.

Mr. SUMNER. Let it be read. I do not think it quite so precise and pertinent to the case as the proposition of the committee.

Mr. SHERMAN. It avoids the objection which I have suggested.

The Secretary read the amendment suggested by Mr. SHERMAN, as follows:

And be it further enacted, That the salary of envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to countries not specially named in schedule A, of the act approved August 18, 1856, entitled "An act to regulate the diplomatic and consular systems of the United States," and to be hereafter appointed, shall be $7,500.

Mr. SHERMAN. The language of the schedule already read by the Senator from Massachusetts is, that the salary of envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to "Great Britain and France" shall be "each $17,500;" to "Russia, Spain, Austria, Prussia, Brazil, Mexico, and China, each $12,000; all other countries, each $10,000."

We have no envoy extraordinary to any other country than those named specifically.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Your amendment will reduce them to $7,500.

Mr. SHERMAN. No, it only affects the third class and no other. It says "in countries not specifically named in schedule A" the salary of a minister plenipotentiary shall be $7,500.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Now the salary of those not named is $10,000. By this you reduce it to $7,500.

Mr. SUMNER. There are none now appointed under the third clause.

Mr. SHERMAN. There are none under the third clause of this schedule. There are ministers plenipotentiary at $17,500, and some at $12,000, but none at $10,000. None have been appointed under that third clause; so that the effect is to provide that the compensation of an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary and of a minister resident to all the countries not specifically named in this schedule shall be $7,500. That gives them the incidental advantages of getting in to see the king a little sooner than otherwise.

Mr. SUMNER. I am perfectly willing to accept that substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts can withdraw his amendment by unanimous consent, the yeas and nays having been ordered.

Mr. GRIMES. I trust this amendment will not be adopted, because it will do away, I apprehend, with the real spirit that instigated the original proposition, which was to follow up the honor with the purse. Some of these gentlemen have peculiar claims upon this Government for the consideration that it is proposed to bestow upon them. The gentleman from whom the Senator from Ohio [Mr. WADE] received his letter on this subject, urging that we should pass a law to this effect, has a peculiar claim upon the Government of the United States.

Mr. WADE. I did not say that he asked us to pass any such law. I said that I understood from him that he labored under this difficulty.

Mr. GRIMES. Yes, sir; that he labored under this difficulty, and the natural inference would be that he desired to have the difficulty removed; and the Senator from Ohio, in his capacity as one of the members of the Committee on Foreign Relations, has proposed to remove it by elevating him in rank. He is the gentleman known to the country as the man who telegraphed to Charleston, South Carolina, that Fort Sumter was about to be relieved, and the result was that fire was immediately opened by the rebels upon the vessel that went there to relieve the beleaguered men in that fortification.

Mr. WADE. You are wrong.

Mr. GRIMES. No, sir, I am not wrong. Mr. James E. Harvey was the man, and stands on the record as the man—and I am prepared to prove it—who telegraphed through to Charleston that Fort Sumter was about to be relieved, and in consequence of that the rebel fire was opened upon Fort Sumter. He is the man who has within a short time written a most infamous letter, written as it was by a minister representing this country abroad, to the Secretary of State, which he has seen fit to publish in the New York Times. I have only seen copious extracts from it and have not had an opportunity to read the whole of it, in which he denounced Congress in the most unmeasured terms, and if I understand the force of language he intimates that it would be well for the President of the United States to eject us from the Halls of Congress. This is one of the gentlemen whom it is proposed to elevate in rank from ministers resident to envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary.

Now, Mr. President, if we are going to give him the honor let us not cut ourselves off from the opportunity, at a future day during this session, or when the consular and diplomatic bill shall be under consideration at the next session of Congress of also conferring upon him a part of the Treasury of the United States in consideration not only of the services that he renders as foreign minister, but also in consideration of the services he rendered to the country while he was here, and the services he is rendering to us by the private communications which he keeps up with the Secretary of State and which the Secretary of State publishes as electioneering documents in his organ in New York.

Mr. WADE. I am very sorry that on a question of this sort, which is purely of a public character, having no reference that I know of to the conduct of any individual on earth, the character of a gentleman should be dragged in here to be stigmatized before the public when there is no occasion for it. If the Senator from Iowa has any particular grief against this minister I wish he had taken some other way and some other occasion to vent his feelings on the subject. I do not think that this is the place or the occasion or the issue for that kind of spleen. The gentleman has gone back to the time the rebels fired on Fort Sumter and the communication that he says Mr. Harvey made to them. I know something about that letter. It was investigated at the time, when Mr. Harvey was most ungenerously charged with about the same thing that he has been charged with here to-day. All that he did—all his communications with South Carolina, with everybody, and anybody—was done with the knowledge of the President and his Cabinet, and at their request.

Mr. GRIMES. That is not denying what I stated.

Mr. WADE. It is not denying it, but it is taking the sting out of it. If he was acting in conformity to the wishes of his Government he was not in communication with traitors, unless they were all traitors together, which the gentleman will not pretend.

Now, sir, what has the character of Mr. Harvey to do with the question that is before us? This proposition does not apply to any minister in particular. If one half what the Senator has said is true, and if the authorities that govern Mr. Harvey do their duty, he will not be minister very long. If he uses his position to assail Congress and to put up the President of the United States, as many have done, to drive Congress out, if the President ought not to be displaced, he will not leave this minister one hour in his position after such advice. I know nothing about that. I am not the advocate of any man or any man's conduct here, and least of all do I wish to discuss a gentleman's character here upon a question in which it is not involved and having nothing to do with it.

Sir, what is the question? It is no more nor less than this: have we given our ministers abroad that rank that enables them to be as useful to the country as they are capable of being if we bestow it upon them? That is all there is of it. I do not wish to confer rank upon any man in order to gratify any vanity he may have on the subject. I care nothing about that. That is the furthest thing in the world from my intention. But as I said before, if there are different grades and ranks of these diplomatic agents, and in Europe some are considered of more influence and respectability than others, it does not become a great nation like this, in my judgment, to put its diplomatic agents upon the lowest footing where they will be considered by European Governments as standing in an inferior position; and that applies to the whole of them—not to Mr. Harvey any more than the rest of them—but to all of them together. Why, then, discuss the character of a single one of our diplomatic agents in order to rebut this question or to explain it? It has no bearing upon the question, and ought not to have been introduced here.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Whatever we may do, if we should adopt the amendment proposed by my friend from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] the result, in my opinion, will be the same. We shall have, in a very short time, a statement that this rank of minister plenipotentiary cannot be supported on so small a salary with that dignity which the position requires. But I enter my entire dissent to the idea that the influence of our ministers abroad depends upon whether they are called by one title or another. The thing itself is preposterous so far as my own judgment is concerned. The influence which a man would have at a foreign court depends, in the first place, somewhat perhaps upon his own capacity, but more, unquestionably, upon the power of the Government that he represents. It is the rank of his Government and the power that it has among the nations of the earth that gives him power abroad. The idea that it is required for the protection of the interests of this country in foreign courts that we should change the title and the rank of our ministers is one that does not address itself with any sort of force to my mind. I have no doubt there may be some little matters of etiquette in which a higher rank would be convenient to the ministers themselves, and that is all there is of it.

Now, sir, I will venture to say—and the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. WADE] will contradict me if I am not right about it—that there are but two men among all our ministers resident who have ever said a word on this subject. One of them is the minister to Belgium and the other is the minister to Portugal. I have never heard of anybody else that made any disturbance about it. I know that an effort was made here two years ago to force the minister to Belgium into a higher position because, as it was said, Leopold was our great friend, although I believe it turned out afterward that he was not, and that his influence had really been turned against us, and because Belgium was such a very important country, having about five millions of people, although it is not so important in the way of trade to us as the Netherlands, having no foreign possessions. That was for his benefit. He is the last man abroad that I would attempt to dignify or to please by raising his rank, for reasons which I shall not give. I would have said, until this morning, that I felt differently toward Mr. Harvey, the minister to Portugal; but if the statement which I have read is true, which professes to be extracts from a letter of his published in the New York Times, he has been guilty of a grave indecorum; and instead of passing a bill by which he could be by any possibility raised in rank, he ought to be kicked out, because it was an interference with what, being a foreign minister, it was improper for him to interfere with, if the letter was actually written, and I suppose there is no doubt about it; and in the next place, it was a very unnecessarily impertinent letter with reference to some branches of the Government, he being a foreign minister.

Mr. JOHNSON. What letter does the honorable member refer to?

Mr. FESSENDEN. I refer to a letter which is said to be printed—I have not seen the letter itself—in the New York Times. It is reviewed in an article sent to me in Wilkes's Spirit.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have not seen it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The review I saw was in Wilkes's Spirit, in which it was stated that it was a letter published in the New York Times, and directed to the Secretary of State. I thought very well of Mr. Harvey when he was here. He was a very good correspondent, and very much of a gentleman in his manners, and a man of talent undoubtedly. Whether this is true or not, I do not know; I only say, if he has written such a letter, I do not know that he has expressed opinions with reference to Congress that would be at all disagreeable to the Secretary of State. I presume he knew to whom he was writing, and how his letter would be received.

Mr. JOHNSON. If the honorable member will permit me, I will say that I think there must be some mistake about it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not believe there is a particle. Wilkes publishes a part of the letter. I hope there is, for the credit of Mr. Harvey.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do not know that Wilkes is the highest authority in the world.

Mr. FESSENDEN. He gives extracts from the letter.

Mr. JOHNSON. There may be in the letter, taken in the whole, matters that explain away particular extracts.

Mr. FESSENDEN. They cannot possibly explain the language that was quoted from the letter.

Mr. JOHNSON. Do I understand it to be a letter to the Department?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON. Published by the Department?

Mr. FESSENDEN. So I understand. I cannot say that the letter exists, because I have not seen it, but I have seen what purported to be extracts from it published in Wilkes's Spirit.

Mr. JOHNSON. It would be an extraordinary thing, and the fault almost as much of the Secretary as of the correspondent, if he has received an official letter from a minister abroad censuring Congress and published it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It was not an official letter. Letters are marked "official," I believe, where they are particularly meant to be kept private; if not marked "official" they may be published. I suppose this was written for publication.

Mr. JOHNSON. That would make it no better so far as the Secretary is concerned.

Mr. FESSENDEN. With the opinion the honorable Senator may have of the Secretary I have nothing to do. I have never compared notes with him on that subject. I am not commenting on the Secretary's conduct in publishing the letter, if it has been published. I only say that if such a letter was written by Mr. Harvey to the Secretary, he understood perfectly well to whom he was writing, and how it would be received and appreciated.

Mr. JOHNSON. The honorable member from Maine does not seem to understand me in what I said just now.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. JOHNSON. What I meant to say was that I could hardly believe it possible that the Secretary of State would publish, or consent to have published, a letter written to him, whether official or private, censuring Congress. If he has done it, what I did say was, that I think he has offended just as much against good taste, to say nothing stronger, as the writer himself.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not remember the particular language; I only remember, generally, in casting my eye over it, that it was very offensive. I cannot say that he mentioned Congress specifically, according to my recollection, but it was easy to understand it.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think we ought to see it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. However, with that I have nothing to do further than this: I was merely saying that so far as I knew—and I beg the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Ohio to correct me, if I am in error—there is no man abroad who has written on this subject or said anything about it except these two gentlemen, the minister to Belgium and the minister to Portugal. If there are any others, I should like to know it. I can understand, with regard to those gentlemen, why they would like it very well indeed. The only question for us to consider is, in the first place, the danger that will arise hereafter with reference to salaries, which may be greater or may be less; and, in the next place, whether it is advisable to take it for granted, as is stated here, that the rank and influence and power of this country depend upon whether these gentlemen who represent us are called one thing or another. I do not believe it. If I thought the rank or influence or position of the country abroad depended upon the rank or title of its diplomatic representative, instead of depending upon what the country is and what it is known to be, I might vote for the amendment; but merely to gratify these gentlemen I do not think it is right.

Mr. SUMNER. I have no feeling on this question at all—not the least; nor do I approach it as a political question. I see no individual in it. I do not see Mr. Harvey or Mr. Sanford. I see nobody here to oppose and nobody to favor. I see nothing in it but my country and its service abroad. Sir, I think I am as sensitive as any other Senator with regard to that just influence that belongs to my country as a republic great and glorious in the history of mankind. I believe that I am duly proud of it, and conscious of the weight that it ought to carry wherever it appears. I know that the name of my country stands for something now in the world, and that whoever represents that country on the ocean or in the diplomatic service has, alone, a great and powerful recommendation. But I also know too much of human history and too much of human nature not to know that men everywhere are influenced more or less by the title of those who approach them.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Governments are not; men may be.

Mr. SUMNER. My friend says Governments are not so influenced, men may be; but let me remind my friend that Governments are composed of men. My friend knows perfectly well that if he sends a general on a particular service, he by his presence produces a more certain effect and a prompter result than if he sent a colonel or a major. My other friend, who represents the Naval Committee on this floor, [Mr. GIMES,] knows very well that if he sends an admiral on any service, if it be only of compliment, he produces at once a greater effect than if he sends a lieutenant.

My friend, the Senator from Iowa, has just induced us to send the Assistant Secretary of the Navy to Europe, because in that way he thought he should give more clat to a certain service. I united with him in that effort. Why did he do that? Why not allow one of the common clerks of the Department to carry that resolution? The Senator from Iowa on that occasion knew full well that if he sent the Assistant Secretary of the Navy he should do more than if he sent a simple clerk of the Department; and therefore I am brought, to the precise point, that whatever may be the rank of our country in the world, and how much soever we may be entitled at all courts where our representatives are, to the highest precedence, yet such is human nature that our position is impaired by the rank of the agent that we send. I wish to give to our agent all those artificial accessories and incidents which the law of nations allows. I follow the law of nations. Why does the law of nations authorize or sanction, and why do our Constitution and statutes, following the law of nations, authorize and sanction this difference of rank, except because it was supposed that if you sent a person of a higher rank you could obtain a corresponding degree of influence? That is the theory which underlies the whole question of rank. It runs into the Army; it runs into the Navy; it runs into Congress; it runs into all the business of life; and the simple question is, whether now, in the diplomatic service of your country, in dealing with your foreign agents, you will discard a principle of action which you follow in everything else.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.) Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. SUMNER. I think I should prefer to have the vote taken on the proposition as it came from the committee. On considering the other proposition I see that it requires some amplification in order to be perfectly clear and not to come in contact with one or two appointments that have already been made under the old statute. For instance, we have envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary at Chili and at Peru. They are not in the schedule. They come under the third clause of the statute. I think, therefore, if the Senate are disposed to adopt the conclusion of the committee, they had better follow the proposition which has been most carefully considered and digested and I think is in complete harmony with the existing statutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question then will be on the amendment reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 15, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Dixon, Doolittle, Harris, Henderson, Hendricks, Howe, Johnson, Morgan, Norton, Pomeroy, Sprague, Sumner, Wade, Wilson, and Yates—15.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Clark, Conness, Cragin, Davis, Edmunds, Fessenden, Foster, Grimes, Lane of Indiana, Nesmith, Riddle, Sherman, Stewart, Trumbull, Van Winkle, and Wiley—17.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Chandler, Cowan, Creswell, Guthrie, Howard, Kirkwood, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morrill, Nye, Poland, Ramsey, Saulsbury, Williams, and Wright—17.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SUMNER. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to move another amendment, on page 6, line one hundred and twenty-seven of section one, to insert at the end of the clause with reference to the salaries of our commissioners and consuls general at Hayti, Liberia, and Dominica:

And the title of these diplomatic representatives shall be hereafter minister resident and consul general.

The title now at those three places is commissioner and consul general. By the diplomatic statute of the United States a commissioner receives the same pay as a minister resident, and by our statute law he is of the same rank; but it seems that practically he is not so recognized at the court where he is accredited. At any rate, he is not so recognized in the island of Hayti. The Secretary of State has referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations a recent dispatch from the commissioner and consul general there on this subject, with a recommendation that the Senate should take it into consideration, and take such steps with regard to it as they should think best. The committee have considered it, and the result is the proposition now before you. I will read from this dispatch a brief extract. It is under date of "Port-au-Prince, Hayti, April 21, 1866:"

"Confirming a doubt whether I should add a single line to the already voluminous pages which I send you by this mail, I cannot help asking your attention to two suggestions which seem to me important and urgently called for at the present time.

"The first is that the functions and title of the office held by General Cazeneau and myself—

General Cazeneau has not yet been confirmed for any office—

"be changed to those of minister resident, so that we can have direct access to the heads of the Governments to which we are respectively accredited.

"Experience has made clear to my mind two facts: "1. That an active exercise of the influence of our Government upon the two republics on this island is essential not less to their welfare and progress than to the maintenance of proper relations between ourselves and the Antilles.

"2. That this influence cannot be exerted, if the representatives of our Government are kept at the official distance from the springs of political influence which they now occupy.

"To illustrate both these points: the relations between this and the sister republic are now in a crisis. The parties seem bent on quarreling. If anything saves them from such an event, it will be the influence of foreign Governments, particularly our own."

"I cannot but think that if at this moment I could go directly to his Excellency I could do service at once to my country and to these poor, distracted republics which would be of incalculable value. And it tries me, when the case is so urgent, to be compelled to stand aloof—a sort of lay figure.

"The change I ask would add nothing to the expenses of the Government, and would cost no material inconvenience in any way. It would be a proper compliment to a sister republic, and would withdraw an indignity which we seem to impose on this Government by denying to it the kind of representation we make near other Governments which are less important in themselves and which occupy much less close geographical and political relations with us."

This is the argument which is presented by this functionary accredited to Hayti. I can see no objection to the change.

Mr. GRIMES. Why not include the Sandwich Islands?

Mr. SUMNER. That has already been done. It was done last year. Our representative to the Sandwich Islands is now called a minister resident.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will ask the Senator if it will increase the salaries.

Mr. SUMNER. Not at all.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The one at Liberia now gets $4,500.

Mr. SUMNER. Yes, sir.

Mr. FESSENDEN. This will give them $7,500 each.

Mr. SUMNER. The salary at Hayti is $7,500.

Mr. FESSENDEN. What are the others?

Mr. SUMNER. Dominica $7,500 and Liberia $4,500. No increase of salary is intended, and I will add to the amendment the words "with no increase of salary."

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to hear the amendment as it now stands.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

And the title of these diplomatic representatives shall hereafter be minister resident and consul general, with no increase of salary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. I move to insert on page 5, line one hundred and eight, after the word "Nantes" the words "St. Catharine's, in Brazil." I am directed to make this motion by the committee which I represent.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to hear the reasons for it.

Mr. SUMNER. The explanation of this amendment is as follows: St. Catharine's, in Brazil, is a port where, in times past, the consul has been paid by fees only, until during the rebellion it was put on the $1,500 list. The object of my motion is now practically to continue it on that list. We are represented there by a gentleman of peculiar merit, who has gained the confidence of the Department, and of all who are familiar with his services there, by his fidelity and ability. I mean Mr. Lindsay, of New Bedford, Massachusetts. Of course, if his salary is stopped, and he is remitted to his fees, he will not be able to continue there. It is regarded as important by those familiar with the place, and who transact business there, that a person of Mr. Lindsay's character should be our consul there. It was only a few days ago that I presented to the Senate a petition, which was duly referred to the Committee on Commerce, from citizens of New Bedford on this subject. Perhaps I have never presented to the Senate a petition more respectfully signed; every signature representing the greatest respectability, and, I may add, the largest wealth. As it is very brief I will read it:

"The undersigned, citizens of New Bedford, in the State of Massachusetts, interested in the whale fisheries, respectfully represent: that St. Catharine's, in Brazil, is an important place of resort of our whaling fleet, and it is essential to our interests that the consulate at that place should be filled by an American competent to the performance of his duties; that the present incumbent, Benjamin Lindsay, Esq., we regret to learn, will be compelled to relinquish the post unless the salary of the office, which has ceased by the termination of the war, shall be restored; and as the fees of the office are very inconsiderable, the result will doubtless be the transfer of its duties to some foreign and incompetent person. We therefore respectfully pray that the salary of the consulate at St. Catharine's may be restored."

This is signed by John H. Clifford, and a large number of other citizens whom I have already described.

I have also here a letter from a gentleman well known, formerly a member of the House of Representatives, Hon. Charles B. Sedgwick, of Syracuse, earnestly recommending that this consulate should be placed in the $1,500 list. This is all I have to say about it. It seems to me from what I understand, and from my inquiries at the State Department—for I have made it the subject of conversation there—that it is important that we should be well represented at this place. Perhaps what I have said may serve to distinguish this case from other cases, and will induce the Senate to allow it to be restored to the $1,500 list. I hope it may.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I suggest to the Senator that he had better insert it after the word "Barcelona," in the one hundred and sixth line.

Mr. SUMNER. Very well; I will move to insert it after the word "Barcelona," in the one hundred and sixth line.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. I have another amendment to offer, to come in at the foot of page 6, which I send to the Chair:

For further compensation of the commissioner under the treaty between the United States and her Britannic Majesty for the final settlement of the claims of the Hudson's Bay and Puget Sound Agricultural Companies $3,000, in full for his services and personal expenses.

Mr. FESSENDEN. What is that for?

Mr. SUMNER. I will tell you. The commissioner mentioned is Hon. Alexander S. Johnson, late chief justice of the court of appeals of the State of New York. He was commissioner in 1864, under an act which I have in my hand, entitled "An act to carry into effect a treaty between the United States and her Britannic Majesty for the final settlement of the claims of the Hudson's Bay and Puget Sound Agricultural Companies."

By that act it is provided:

"That the compensation of the commissioner shall be $5,000, in full for his services and personal expenses."

The question in the committee at the time was very seriously considered whether he should be allowed a certain salary or given what we familiarly call a round sum for the whole business. It was understood that we should require the services of a thoroughly capable man, a man of high character, who could be placed in association with the commissioner appointed on the side of the British Government. The interests that were to go before them were very considerable; and it appears from a communication, which I shall have read in a minute, that they have already amounted to $5,000,000. At that time it was supposed that the services might be completed within five or six months, certainly within a year, and it was on that account that the compensation was placed, as it was, at $5,000. But instead of being completed within a year, the service is still going on, and I understand will not probably be completed before next January. Meanwhile, this distinguished gentleman whom we enlisted in this service is necessarily withdrawn from, I may say, the career in which the Senators from New York, I believe, will testify, he was so eminent, and he is left simply for this long service of more than two years with the sum of $5,000. On taking the case into consideration, the committee thought it advisable to recommend an addition of $3,000, by way of completing what I will again call the round sum for his services. I will send to the desk a letter which has been received from the commissioner himself in which he sets forth the case.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think it is a private claim.

Mr. SUMNER. Oh, no, it is not. It is for salary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The communication will be read if there be no objection.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

ALBANY, April 28, 1866.

DEAR SIR: When it was proposed to me to accept the place of United States commissioner under the treaty for the final settlement of the claims of the Hudson's Bay and Puget Sound Agricultural Companies it was understood that the matter would be finished in four or five months. I was appointed in July, 1864, but did not succeed in meeting the British commissioner until the succeeding January. We then found that looking to the nature and gravity of the claims amounting to $5,000,000, and involving very important questions of public law as well as a difficult inquiry of fact, we were not in the possession of the requisite evidence on which we could proceed to a decision. We therefore set on foot the procurement of testimony on the part of the claimants of the United States and it is now ascertained that the matter will not be ripe for hearing before January, 1867.

You will readily understand that this is a very different state of things from that contemplated when the compensation of this commissioner was fixed, and that an engagement of the sort interferes necessarily with other associations.

Under these circumstances I think it right to ask that Congress should make a further provision upon that subject.

Your obedient servant,

ALEXANDER S. JOHNSON.

Hon. IRA HARRIS, United States Senate.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should think this was a case where provision ought to be made; but the question in my mind is, whether it may not be considered in the nature of a private claim, and if so, improperly on this bill. It seems that the original law provided that $5,000 should be paid in full for these services. That $5,000 he has received, and he has gone on to perform services which were not anticipated at the time the law was passed and he accepted the office. Now, if he has a claim upon Congress on that account, it should be provided for in an act passed for that purpose, and I raise the point for the decision of the Senate. It strikes me it comes entirely within the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator make the point of order?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Yes, sir. I make the point that this is a private claim and cannot be put upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. HARRIS. It really seems to me there is but little in this point of order. This gentleman has been performing services for the Government for now nearly a year and a half for which he has received $5,000. He is still to go on and complete those services. I admit that when the provision was made for his compensation it was supposed that those services would be of much less value than they have proved to be. Under the circumstances, he asks for further compensation for services yet to be rendered. It cannot be regarded as a private claim. He is to go on for the best part a year yet in performing and completing the services for which he was appointed. It seems to me to come directly within the provision of a bill of this kind to provide for services yet to be rendered.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I suggest to the Senator that perhaps the difficulty may be avoided if the amendment is put in a different shape. If the Senator will offer an additional section to the bill providing that the services of Mr. Johnson may be continued until a specified time, making it a provision of law, and that for the additional services to be performed by him he shall receive the sum of $3,000, I suppose, if it is recommended by a committee, it would be in order. But simply to put in this bill an appropriation of $3,000 in this way I think is out of order. I make the point in this case reluctantly, but I make it because I feel obliged to make it. The law is exhausted. If he has rendered these services it is a claim against the Government. If you want to provide for a continuance of these services, and payment for them, that can be done in a separate section.

Mr. JOHNSON. It comes recommended from the committee, does it not?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Not in the shape that I suggest. It comes from them merely as a recommendation of $3,000 more to be appropriated.

Mr. JOHNSON. It does not come in the shape the Senator suggests, but the honorable chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations can put it in that shape.

Mr. SUMNER. I will put it in any form to suit the views of Senators. The vote of the committee was that the chairman be directed to move on this appropriation bill an additional $3,000 for Judge Johnson as further compensation for his services.

Mr. JOHNSON. I suggest to my friend from Massachusetts to let the amendment be passed over for a moment, and then he can redraw it so as to meet the suggestion of the chairman of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SUMNER. I am perfectly willing to accept any form. I will draw it to meet the suggestion of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. NESMITH. I have some familiarity with the proceedings of this commission, having been before it several times to testify, and know perhaps as much as almost any person of the facts to be brought before them for decision. The commission I do not think will be able to get through in a year. The amount of business before them is very great, and the testimony is scattered from the summit of the Rocky mountains to the Pacific ocean, and up and down the ocean for several degrees of latitude; and I do not apprehend that they will get through in a year. I think if any provision is to be made for extra compensation or increased compensation to Judge Johnson it should be made now. He has served very much beyond the time that the compensation provided for by law was adequate to; and I do not believe they will be able to complete the business in less than twelve or eighteen months. They have to take a great deal of testimony. I hope, therefore, that the amendment will be adopted to this bill.

Mr. HENDRICKS. It does not strike me that this amendment is a violation of the rule of the Senate. An existing law provides a compensation for this officer. This amendment simply changes that compensation. The existing law says his compensation shall be $5,000. This modification of the law is that it shall be $8,000. In view of the services rendered, the Senate can judge better now of what they are worth than before the services were rendered at all. If the services were entirely completed, I think the point made by the chairman of the Committee on Finance would be well made; but as this is, during the pendency of the service, a modification of the rule of compensation, I cannot see that it is a private claim.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I felt it my duty to raise the point. If the Senate overrule me, I cannot help it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Chair is to decide the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair prefers to take the sense of the Senate on the question whether the amendment shall be received in the form in which it is now offered.

The question being put, the amendment was received.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the adoption of the amendment. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. I offer this to come in as a new section after section two:

And be it further enacted, That there be paid to the several clerks of the Department of State, twenty per cent. of the compensation now allowed to each, to commence from the 30th of June, 1865, and to continue until repealed by Congress; and a sum sufficient for this purpose is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope that will not be adopted.

Mr. SUMNER. I send to the Chair a petition that has been pending for some time before the committee on this subject, which I ask to have read.

The Secretary read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The petition of the undersigned, clerks in the Department of State, humbly represent that their salaries which were fixed when gold was current and the prices of the necessities of life were comparatively low, are now entirely inadequate to their support with the most rigid economy. Indeed, some of them who have been more fortunate than others in the enjoyment of small incomes from private sources, have from time to time been obliged to sacrifice the principal from which those incomes were derived, to provide themselves and their families with shelter and the plainest clothing and food. Many of them might earn more by obtaining employment elsewhere, but some of these have been so long in office, that, in all humility, they deem it their duty to remain until it shall be otherwise decreed, at almost any sacrifice, believing that the knowledge and experience which they have gained is not their property, but a valuable one to the public, in whose service those qualifications have been acquired.

At the last session of Congress an appropriation was made for additional compensation to clerks in the Treasury Department. Your petitioners have no doubt of the wisdom of that measure, but regret that they may not have been deemed worthy of a similar boon.

Supposing, however, that the apparent partiality referred to may have been occasioned by an oversight your petitioners appeal to your sense of justice to place them on a similar footing with the clerks in that Department in respect to compensation.

And your petitioners, as in duty bound, will so ever pray.

Mr. SUMNER. I do not know that there is any necessity for me to add anything to that petition. It speaks for itself. It states the whole case. But perhaps I should add one word at least with regard to one of the public servants there, the gentleman who heads the petition, Mr. Hunter. He is one of the oldest public servants now connected with the Government. He has been in the Department of State for more than thirty years. He may be called the living index to that Department; and I believe I do not err if I say that in all the public service there is no person whose integrity is more absolutely above suspicion. Placed in a position of the greatest public trust, where all the foreign correspondence of this Government passes under his eye, that which comes to the Government and that which leaves the Government, I believe he has passed a life absolutely without blame. He has been in a position where, had his integrity been open to the least seduction, he might have been tempted. No human being imagines that he has ever for a moment yielded. He has discharged his very important trusts on a very humble salary. I think the Senator from Maine knows him well enough to know that he has brought to those functions an ability of a peculiar character. And now, in the decline of life, he finds himself with simply the smallest salary of a clerk, on which he can with difficulty subsist; and yet all the time rendering these important services and discharging these very considerable trusts, absorbed in the business of the office, so that he takes it home with him every night. It goes with him in the evening and it returns with him in the morning, and then it fills the whole day. I think that such a public servant does deserve recognition in some form. I have for a long time felt that his compensation was grossly inadequate. I have thought that his salary ought directly to be raised; but after consideration of the question in committee, and after consultation with others who were supposed to be good advisers in the matter, it was thought best to make a recommendation such as I have now moved, being the addition of twenty per cent. to the compensation of all the clerks in the Department. The argument for that, let me add, seems to me to be completely enforced in the petition from these gentlemen which has been read at the desk. I can see no objection to it, especially after what we have done for the clerks of the Treasury. Are not these public servants at the State Department as worthy as those public servants at the Treasury?

Mr. FESSENDEN. What the Senator has said shows that he has not investigated the subject about which he is speaking. In the first place, the salaries of the clerks of the Treasury Department generally have not been increased at all, in any way.

Mr. SUMNER. Some of them have.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We made a provision a year or two ago for the female employes who received $600 a year, and for the messengers, the mere laborers of the Department, giving them an additional percentage; but we refused utterly to raise the salary of the clerks generally. What we did was simply this, and it was the only way to reach it: in the Treasury Department there are several clerks whose services are absolutely indispensable; they are very able men, and men who could be heads of bureaus, who were absolutely necessary to the working of the Department. They were leaving us at the rate of eight or ten a week. Why? Because they got salaries of $1,800 and $2,000, when they could go out of the Department and receive $3,000, $3,500, and $4,000; and we were losing them fast, so that we could not carry on the business of some of the bureaus. You could not supply their places; that was out of the question; and for that reason an appropriation was made out of which the Secretary was empowered to increase the salaries of certain clerks where he thought the public interests required it. It was the only way in which the business of the Department could be kept on at all. But we utterly refused to apply any portion of that appropriation to raising the salaries generally of the clerks in the Department. Since then, the clerks who did not get any of it, and who are overpaid, or paid amply—the first-class clerks, for instance, who get $1,200, the most of whom do not earn any more than that, and of whom you could get five thousand at any time—made a howl about it, and said, "Here you have been raising the salaries of persons who receive the biggest compensation, and not given those who receive the least anything." That is true in point of fact; but the reasons are perfectly obvious. We were obliged to do it. There is a very great difference in the men. We could get plenty of boys at $1,200 a year, and it is all they earn, and probably amply pay for them; but you cannot get accomplished, able men, who are fit to be presidents and cashiers of banks, for anything like that sum. The new banks that were made in the country were taking these men out of the Treasury Department every day in the week, and the only way of meeting the difficulty was precisely in the mode I have suggested.

Now, these clerks of the State Department come in and ask for an increase of twenty per cent., when that twenty per cent. increase has not been given in any case to any of the clerks in any of the Departments. I will say to the Senator, if he proposes to make an increase of the pay of the clerks there, the proper way to do it is to ask the Secretary of State to recommend it in the first place. The difficulty with the Secretary of State is, that he will not recommend anything. He just sits there and says, "Go to Congress," and will not let us know his opinion. If he thinks that the salaries in his Department ought to be increased, let him take the responsibility of saying so under his hand, and saying what class of clerks ought to be paid an increase, and how much, and then we will consider it; but we cannot get a word, and do not get a word, from the State Department on the subject. They will recommend nothing; but they will let the clerks come here petitioning, without giving us the information as to how much they ought to receive and what classes ought to be made of them.

In the next place, this is not the proper place to put it. It should be put where we put all such provisions, on the executive and legislative appropriation bill, which covers all the expenses of all the Departments, and not on the diplomatic and consular bill.

Mr. MORGAN. That bill has not yet been passed.

Mr. FESSENDEN. No, sir. The Senator from Massachusetts will have abundance of time to get information on this subject, and prepare his amendment, and move it on that bill; but it should not be placed on this bill. In the first place, the amendment is improper. It raises the whole of these salaries twenty per cent., without any distinction, without our knowing anything about it; and then it is put in the wrong place. Therefore I object entirely and absolutely to this proposition.

But while doing that, I cannot close without saying that I concur fully in all that has been said by the honorable Senator from Massachusetts with reference to the merits and the claims of Mr. Hunter, the chief clerk of that Department. He has been there for years, and especially through the war, without saying a word, on a very inadequate salary—one of the most faithful and valuable men in the Government. He is absolutely poor and hardly able to scratch along. Much of the time he has been acting Secretary of State. He has received but a small salary without complaining, absolutely poor, with a family upon him. He is one of the most valuable men there is, or has been, connected with the Government for years. I coincide with what the Senator from Massachusetts said of him, and I think we ought to increase his salary. That is my opinion, and I should be glad to have an opportunity to do it.

Mr. SUMNER. Let us do it now.

Mr. FESSENDEN. This is not the place to put it on, and I object entirely to having it here. Why insist on having it here?

Mr. SUMNER. I will tell you. I have a reason.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will withdraw the amendment now pending and substitute for it a proposition to increase, and increase to a respectable extent, the salary of Mr. Hunter; and I beg to say to the honorable chairman who has this bill in charge, that although it may appear irregular to affix it here, the compliment well deserved will be the greater to Mr. Hunter if we embrace the earliest opportunity to render him a measure of simple justice. I will not undertake to add anything to the well-earned reputation of that distinguished gentleman and faithful public servant; but I am prepared to say that, notwithstanding the objections of the chairman of the Finance Committee, I will vote on this occasion or any other occasion to increase Mr. Hunter's salary; and I hope the honorable chairman will not object to it on this bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will very thoroughly throughout, because it is irregular. There is no occasion for putting on here what belongs to the other bill. There is no reason why it should be put in here. He will get his money just as soon if we increase his salary on the other bill as on this.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senate seems not disposed to accept the proposition in the form in which I have presented it. I had thought that the form which is now on your table would on the whole be the most acceptable, and I thought also it was in harmony with what had been done with reference to the Treasury Department. I am to a certain extent corrected by the Senator from Maine in that respect, though the Senate will observe that the statement in the petition which has been read at the desk is to the effect that the clerks of the Treasury Department have had an increase of twenty per cent. on their compensation. That is the statement there. I confess I made no inquiry on that subject. I took the statement as it appeared in that petition, and I thought it advisable that what we did should be applicable to all the clerks in the Department of State; but Senators around me seem to think otherwise; I do not wish to have a division upon it; and therefore I will withdraw that proposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. SUMNER. At the same time I thank my friend from California for the earnest support which he promises in advance to the amendment which I propose to substitute in its place; and I thank the Senator from Maine for the good words which he has said in favor of the proposition practically; and I think I shall show in one minute that the objection of form which he makes does not apply. I will send, therefore, to the Chair this proposition, which, as it is in my own handwriting, I will read:

That the compensation of William Hunter, Esq., chief clerk of the Department of State, be at the rate of $3,500 a year; and a sufficient sum is hereby appropriated for this purpose out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. GRIMES. What is the salary now?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Two thousand dollars.

Mr. SPRAGUE. That is right.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Oh, no; it is too high.

Mr. SUMNER. And now for the question of form; this amendment is to come in after section two, which is in these words:

That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, an officer in the Department of State, to be called "Solicitor to the Department of State," at an annual salary of $3,000.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is here now.

Mr. SUMNER. I say that is here now; and I say, because that is here now I put immediately after it the proposition with reference to Mr. Hunter. If this proposition with reference to the Solicitor is proper in form, on this bill, all the Senate will see that the proposition with reference to the chief clerk of the Department of State must be equally in form. There can be no objection to one, in point of form, which does not hold to the other.

Now, I am in favor of both propositions; and even if either proposition should seem to be a little out of the way, a little of a defection from that straight line which the Senator from Maine likes to run with in all his appropriation bills, yet I think the goodness of the cause which he himself has so ably commended must induce him to forget for a moment the sternness of duty and to allow his bill to depart for a moment from that straight line which he likes so much to pursue. I think, therefore, the objection of form fails simply because in this very bill we have another proposition which has already passed the House of Representatives, which has passed the committee that the Senator from Maine represents on this floor, which in point of form is identical with that which I now offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The Secretary read the amendment, which was at the end of section two to insert:

And that the compensation of William Hunter, Esq., chief clerk of the Department of State, be at the rate of $3,500, and a sufficient sum is hereby appropriated for this purpose out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. GRIMES. Everybody agrees that Mr. Hunter is a very valuable public servant, and has been for a long time, and I suppose that everybody would be willing to recognize his services in making him proper compensation; but it seems to me the form of this is exceedingly objectionable. If we adopt this and specify to-day that such a sum shall be paid to William Hunter, as chief clerk of the Department of State, to-morrow some other Senator will get up and pronounce a eulogy on some other clerk of the Department, and propose to give him a higher salary.

Mr. SUMNER. When that is done we shall consider that case.

Mr. GRIMES. But we shall have our appropriation bills loaded down; that is exactly the way it will be done. It will be done whenever an appropriation bill comes up, and we shall be placed here in a very delicate situation. We shall be called upon to pass on the merits of men that we know, that we meet every day in social life, and whether we decide for them or against them will be considered according as we may vote.

Mr. CONNESS. There is not another case like this in the public service.

Mr. GRIMES. I am not certain of that. There are men who have been in the public employment here for forty years, and who have done labor just as assiduously, probably, as Mr. Hunter. They and their friends think so, at any rate. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, May 16, 1866.

The House met at twelve o'clock m.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

RICHARD CHENERY.

Mr. McRUER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill for the relief of Richard Chenery; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

SAFETY OF STEAMBOAT PASSENGERS.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, there is a bill which has been ordered to be reported by the Committee on Commerce in regard to the safety of passengers on steamboats. It contains very many important provisions which the public interests demand should be passed without delay. As I am compelled to be away after to-day, the committee have instructed me to ask that the bill shall be considered this morning.

It contains a provision in reference to nitroglycerine, a new and dangerous substance.

It also contains a provision in reference to crude petroleum. A construction has been given to the law which prevents the shipment of that article. The committee, after full examination, think there should be a modification of that ruling as it interferes with commerce in this most valuable product.

It is House bill No. 477, further to provide for the safety of the lives of passengers on board of vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, to regulate the salaries of steamboat inspectors, and for other purposes.

The bill was read.

Mr. ANCONA. I ask whether the bill contains a provision regulating the compensation of pilots on the Ohio river.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Nothing whatever regulating the compensation of pilots.

There is a provision in regard to pilots, but it has nothing to do with compensation.

Mr. BERGEN objected, but afterward withdrew his objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. FINCK demanded the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The bill was then passed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move to reconsider the vote just taken; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONTESTED ELECTION.

Mr. DAWES presented additional papers in the case of Fuller vs. Dawson; which were referred to the Committee of Elections.

CORRECTION OF THE JOURNAL.

Mr. DARLING. I rise to a question of privilege. I am recorded as not voting yesterday on the proposition to strike out the ninth section of the bill to amend the organic acts of the Territories. I never dodge. I voted in the negative on striking out that section.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk did not hear the gentleman's response. The Journal will be corrected.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. SCHENCK. I am recorded as not voting on the proposition to strike out the ninth section of the territorial bill. The reason was that I happened to be absent. I was called out by a constituent. Had I been here I would have voted against striking out that section.

Mr. COBB. I, too, was absent when that vote was taken. I would have voted against striking out the ninth section. I was attending to my duties as chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order in the morning hour is the calling of the committees for reports, commencing with the Committee on Patents.

DELIA A. JACOBS.

Mr. MYERS, from the Committee on Patents, reported a bill for the relief of Delia A. Jacobs; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read in full. It authorizes the Commissioner of Patents to extend the patent for an improved method of dressing tree-nails for seven years to Delia A. Jacobs, late Delia A. Fitzgerald, the original term having expired August 28, 1863.

Mr. TAYLOR. I call for the reading of the report.

Mr. MYERS. I will explain this in a few words. The bill is simply to correct an error that occurred in the Patent Office. An extension was refused on the supposition that certain testimony, showing that the extension was to inure to the benefit of the applicant, was not submitted. The Commissioner appeared before the committee and stated that the evidence was in his office at the time, but was not brought to his notice. We desire to correct that error and allow the extension.

Mr. TAYLOR. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania when the patent expired.

Mr. MYERS. It expired August 28, 1863. The application, however, was made in due time. Further than that, there is a provision in the bill to prevent any injury accruing to others by the delay.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would ask whether other persons have not engaged in the business.

Mr. MYERS. It appeared fully that no other persons have been using this patent since its expiration. There is a general desire that this administratrix, who was the widow of the patentee, shall have the benefit of the extension.

Mr. TAYLOR. It seems that it is some time since the patent expired, and other parties may have engaged in the business.

Mr. MYERS. No other parties have engaged in this business, so far as the committee have been able to ascertain. There is, as I have stated, a general desire that the error occurring in the Patent Office should be corrected, and that this party should not suffer by it, the requisite testimony having been on file at the proper time.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I wish to say that from hearing the bill read I do not understand that any person who may have machines for doing this work, which were made during the period of time since the expiration of the patent, is authorized to continue the use of them.

Mr. MYERS. There is a provision incorporated in the bill that no parties shall be held to account for damages by such reason.

Mr. BOUTWELL. That is in the bill, undoubtedly; but there is no provision that people who have built machines while there was no patent shall be authorized to continue the use of the same without being liable. That is a well-recognized principle in such cases, and ought to be incorporated in this bill.

Mr. MYERS. I have no objection whatever to accepting an amendment of that kind, but I think it is already covered.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I then move to amend by inserting the words "or build or use machines."

Mr. MYERS. I now demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendment was agreed to, and the bill ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I call for the reading of the report.

Mr. MYERS. There is a report, but it is lengthy, and to save time I will state the particulars.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. If the gentleman will yield a moment I will state my objections.

Mr. MYERS. I will yield.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I understand that this case presents these facts: a patent was issued for an invention, which has expired, and the period allowed for an application for an extension of the patent has expired some years since.

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. How long since?

Mr. MYERS. Two or three years.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] if this is the same bill that was rejected last year.

Mr. MYERS. Precisely the same bill which was before the House last year, and which failed because at that time the question asked by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] could not be answered for want of the necessary testimony before the committee. We now have that testimony.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I wish to call the attention of the House to a practice which I think is a fraud upon the people of this country. After these inventions have been brought before the public, and have probably become of great public utility, and have been enjoyed by the inventor for the period of time provided by the patent laws, the period of the patent expires. After that time, no notice of an extension having been given, the citizens of the country enter into the business of manufacturing the machines thus patented.

Mr. MYERS. If the gentleman will allow me a word, I think he need not pursue that line of argument any further. We have placed in the bill a provision for the protection of all persons such as those to whom he refers.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. For all persons who have machines?

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I go beyond that. I call attention to the fact that in many instances where patents have expired establishments have been put up for the manufacture of the machines, involving the expenditure of a large sum of money. They make a few machines, and the use of those machines is protected by this exception. But what is to be done for the large establishments? Why simply this: the renewal of the patent gives the patentee an opportunity to go and levy black mail upon every man making these machines, or he must shut up shop and sacrifice a large amount of money.

Mr. MYERS. If the gentleman will allow me a word I think I can satisfy him on that point. There was evidence before the committee that there was no party whatever who had entered into this business.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. How searching and general was your investigation?

Mr. MYERS. Enough to prove a negative—pregnant, at all events.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I have reference in my own mind to an invention in relation to plows, which expired some years ago. The people of the West and of the country generally entered into the manufacture of that article. There were large shops erected for that purpose. Then comes up an application for a renewal of the patent, and if the inventor obtains the renewal he can go and levy black mail upon all who are now engaged in the business.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Does my colleague refer to the Dundas patent for a cultivator?

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. Yes, sir.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The reissue is to go back to 1851, covering all improvements since then, and subordinating all agricultural interests to a few patent sharks.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. There is this case then: a man invests money in this manufacture, and as soon as he gets a good start in it the inventor comes here and gets authority from the Commissioner of Patents to go back and levy black mail, and I am opposed to it.

Mr. MYERS. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HARDING] could not have heard the statement I made in regard to this matter. This is the case where the administratrix, lately the widow of the inventor, is applying to have a mistake corrected which occurred in the Patent Office. The application was made in time, but was rejected because certain requisite evidence was supposed not to be there. But the Commissioner of Patents reports to the committee that he made a mistake, that the evidence was in his office. Even if all the ideas of the gentleman in this case were correct this lady would have the right to a rehearing.

But it was further shown that this lady now is almost entirely supported by the little pitance that has been given her during this interim, as it was given her during the original term of the patent, by William H. Webb and James Udall, distinguished citizens of New York, who obtained rights under the patent.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I withdraw my remarks as far as they apply to the widow, but I stand by the general principle.

Mr. MYERS. The gentleman may have a weakness for widows; but I have a weakness for justice, and this is a just application.

Mr. TAYLOR. I desire to ask the gentleman one question, and that is this, whether or not this lady has not sold to other parties the interest which this legislation proposes to confer upon her.

Mr. MYERS. That was the very point upon which the application was rejected in the Patent Office; and the Commissioner of Patents now certifies that there was testimony in his office at the time, that the extension would inure to her benefit.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would like the gentleman to answer that question directly, whether or not this lady has any direct interest in this patent.

Mr. MYERS. Yes, sir; it is upon proof of that fact that the bill has been reported.

Mr. JENCKES. The concluding sentence of the bill answers the gentleman's question. Will the Clerk please read that?

The Clerk read as follows:

And provided, also, That the Commissioner shall be satisfied before granting the extension that it will inure to the benefit of said Delia A. Jacobs.

Mr. MYERS. I think that entirely meets the objection suggested by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. TAYLOR.] I now demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered, which was upon the passage of the bill.

On the question there were—ayes 62, noes 31.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 88, nays 81, not voting 64; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ancona, Anderson, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Benjamin, Bergen, Blow, Boutwell, Boyer, Brownell, Bundy, Rander W. Clark, Conkling, Darling, Davis, Dawes, Delano, Denison, Dodge, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eggleston, Eliot, Ferry, Finck, Garfield, Goodyear, Grider, Hart, Higby, Hogan, Holmes, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, James Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, James R. Hubbell, Jenckes, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Kelso, Kerr, Ketcham, Kuykendall, Laflin, George V. Lawrence, Le Blond, Loan, Longyear, Lynch, Marston, McCullough, McKee, McRuer, Mercer, Miller, Moorhead, Morris, Myers, Niblack, Nicholson, O'Neill, Perham, Samuel J. Randall, Rogers, Scofield, Shanklin, Sitgreaves, Streuse, Taber, Thayer, Trimble, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Ward, Warner, William B. Washburn, Welker, Williams, Stephen F. Wilson, Winfield, and Woodbridge—88.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Bidwell, Brandegee, Broomall, Cobb, Cook, Cullom, Dawson, Deming, Eckley, Aaron Harding, Abner C. Harding, William Lawrence, Morrill, Paine, Pike, Plants, Price, Ritter, Rollins, Ross, Sawyer, Sloan, Spalding, Taylor, Elihu B. Washburn, Henry D. Washburn, James F. Wilson, and Windom—31.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Delos R. Ashley, Baxter, Beaman, Bingham, Blaine, Buckland, Chanler, Sidney Clarke, Coffroth, Culver, Defrees, Dixon, Eldridge, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Glossbrenner, Grinnell, Griswold, Hale, Harris, Hayes, Henderson, Hill, Hooper, Chester D. Hubbard, Hulburd, James Humphrey, James M. Humphrey, Ingersoll, Johnson, Jones, Latham, Marshall, Marvin, McClurg, McIndoe, Moulton, Newell, Noel, Orth, Patterson, Phelps, Pomeroy, Radford, William H. Randall, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rousseau, Schenck, Shellabarger, Smith, Starr, Stevens, Stilwell, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trowbridge, Upson, Robert T. Van Horn, Wentworth, Whaley, and Wright—64.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. MYERS moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM MANN AND JACOB SENNEFF.

Mr. MYERS, from the Committee on Patents, reported a bill for the relief of William Mann and Jacob Senneff; which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read at length, authorizes the Commissioner of Patents to hear and determine upon the application of William Mann for an extension of his letters patent dated July 11, 1852, which will expire July 11, 1866, and upon the application of Jacob Senneff for an extension of his letters patent dated January 13, 1852, which expired January 13, 1866, and to decide upon said applications with like effect as though the said applications had been duly filed ninety days before the expiration of said letters patent; and the Commissioner of Patents is directed to publish forthwith notice of said applications for the extension of said letters patent, with like effect as though said publication had been made sixty days before the expiration of said letters patent.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope the report will be read.

Mr. MYERS. There is no report in these cases. I will state very briefly the reasons for the applications.

In the case of Mr. Mann, he was in Europe, and was not aware that ninety days' notice must be given of the application for an extension. Sixty days yet remain before the expiration of that patent. In the case of Jacob Senneff, he was in the Army, and therefore could not attend to the renewal of his patent. It is simply to allow the Commissioner to hear as though full notice had been given. One lacked thirty days of the time, the party being abroad, while the other was in the service of the United States.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. It is the fault of the party if he went "swelling" through Europe.

Mr. MYERS. I never talk of the gentleman's swelling about when he takes his trips, but I think he is harsh in reference to these parties.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. What are these patents for?

Mr. MYERS. Mr. Mann's patent is for an improvement in copying paper, and Mr. Senneff's for an improved heddle.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. What is a heddle?

Mr. MYERS. A heddle is a part of a loom used in weaving, part of the harness.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I object to this practice of reporting bills without reports and asking them to be put at once on their passage.

Mr. MYERS. I think the objection of the gentleman from Illinois is captious. It does not matter what the patent is for, as we do not decide in reference to the extension of these patents. That is a question for the decision of the Commissioner of Patents. We have satisfied ourselves the statement is true that the parties did not know their patents were so near their expiration.

I will say that I was prepared this morning to report a bill for the relief of William Mann. The case of Senneff was added to the bill, and very properly, because it had been recommended by the Committee on Patents, but I was absent when it was passed upon. Both are good cases and stand upon the same ground, and it is right they should be embraced in the same bill. I will yield to the chairman of the Committee on Patents for a moment.

Mr. JENCKES. I wish to say a word about the patent of Senneff. It is a case addressed simply to the discretion of Congress. He was one of the persons who originated the Volunteer Refreshment Saloons in Philadelphia, to provide for soldiers passing to and fro through that city during the war, and afterward he entered the United States hospital service and was detained there during the time his application should have been made. He lost his chance of obtaining an extension of his patent because of his benevolence and patriotism. All that we propose is to give him a chance to make his application. His invention is an improvement in heddles, an ingenious arrangement for dividing threads in the loom.

Mr. DAWES. The gentleman from Pennsylvania did not say whether the patent had expired.

Mr. JENCKES. It expired in January, 1866.

Mr. DAWES. What is the condition of the parties who have invested their capital in looms since January?

Mr. JENCKES. All who have purchased since then are entitled to use them. It will refer to those only after the extension, if any extension be granted. There is also a limitation in the bill.

Mr. DAWES. If a reissue be granted does it not date back?

Mr. JENCKES. No, sir. The reissue of the patent will not give the patentee the authority to recover a dollar from those who have purchased since January. The committee were satisfied of that before they agreed to report the bill.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I understand this is to cover a case outside of the law which requires application to be made within ninety days. The application has not been made here, and these parties are only in the same condition with a hundred others. The parties have neglected to make application.

Mr. JENCKES. They did not neglect to do so, and that is the reason why we have recommended the passage of the bill. These are exceptional cases.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. That is not a sufficient excuse.

Mr. MYERS. My friend from Illinois having made his speech, I shall in a few moments call the previous question.

What I desire to say to the House, and I hope it will be listened to, is this: this bill authorizes the Commissioner to proceed to grant a hearing, not a rehearing, of the applications in the cases of these two patents just as though a notice of ninety days had been given. The error in the one case was that the party was in Europe, and there are still sixty days of the time remaining. In the other case the party was in the service of his country, and we report that he was not aware of the time when the letters patent expired.

Now, if this House votes against these two propositions it will be equivalent to saying that this soldier who has forfeited a few months' time shall not have the benefit of even applying for an extension; and in the other case that a worthy citizen who has been abroad, and who mistook the date of his letters patent by a month, shall not have a right even to be heard before the Commissioner of Patents. This bill only proposes to give that right. It trenches upon no rights of other parties. It simply allows a hearing, and does not decide the question of granting the extensions at all.

Mr. DAWES. I would ask the gentleman if he is quite certain that if we authorize by act of Congress a renewal to-day, as of January, of the other two patents which did expire in January, we shall not trespass upon the rights of other people. I suggest to him whether, as a safeguard, he had not better put a protective clause in the bill, unless the patent law is clear on that point.

Mr. MYERS. I have no objection to it. It so happens that I was not present at the meeting of the Committee on Patents when the application of Mr. Senneff was before them.

Mr. JENCKES. There is no objection to it.

Mr. MYERS. To render assurance doubly sure we will put that in.

Mr. JENCKES. In accordance with the suggestion, I move to amend by inserting the following:

But no person shall be held liable for damages for using or making said heddles after the expiration of the original term of said patent and before the renewal of the same.

Mr. MYERS. I now demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendment was agreed to, and the bill ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The question recurring on the passage of the bill—

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, demanded the yeas and nays on its passage.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The bill was then passed—ayes 63, noes 31.

Mr. MYERS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay that motion on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

THOMAS D. BURRALL.

Mr. BROMWELL, from the Committee on Patents, reported a bill for the relief of Thomas D. Burrall; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read in full. It authorizes the Commissioner of Patents to grant an extension for seven years to the petitioner for an improved corn-sheller, commencing with the expiration of the original term, December 6, 1866.

Mr. BROMWELL. The report is not very long, if the House desire to hear it read. I can state the substance of it.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. Let the report be read.

The report was accordingly read.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROMWELL. For a moment.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. For a moment! Mr. Speaker, I have heard for a good many years of this invention. Will my colleague inform me when it is claimed to have been made?

Mr. BROMWELL. In 1845.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. It is therefore twenty-one years of age. All this time it has been dragging its slow length along for a fortune in Illinois. It is of full age. Now, sir, while I do not wish to be discourteous to my colleague, nor to oppose any interest of his constituents, I do suggest to him with great respect that there are other constituents besides this inventor who are interested in this question.

Now, it is stated, I believe, in the report just read, that this claim or invention has been infringed upon by many machine makers in that State. At least I infer that fact. I will state to the House that there are very many machines invented in Illinois for shelling corn, and I believe some few in other States in the West, and the effect of this reissue will be that in all cases where these new inventions have infringed upon this indorsed and confirmed right there is to be a lawsuit or a settlement made by which a considerable amount of money will be extracted from those infringers. The interests of agriculture in the West are not so flourishing and so prosperous that this Congress should step in and take away the rights of the people for the benefit of an individual. And now a gentleman has declared upon the subject of renewing patents that he stands for justice; that he yields nothing to the presentation of the widow or the hospital cases that have just been passed.

Now here comes a suggestion that there is some old man in this case. These things have of course no weight with the House; they are not designed to have any; the gentleman stands sturdily upon the ground of justice and demands of Congress that we shall recognize the rights of men. That is what I will always do; I never refuse to do it.

Now, I understand there is a contract between the Government and all men who will make useful inventions, by which they shall have the use and benefit of their inventions for a limited period of years; no more, no less. When that period runs out, then the invention belongs to the public; it becomes their property. Now, who knows but what if this man had not been fencing with this subject some smarter man in my district would have made a much better machine? It does not follow that because there is money in this thing it should be continued for that purpose. The invention, if there is anything in it, belongs to the public, and not to this individual.

A case has just been passed upon, where one man was in a prosperous hospital business, and another was abroad as a foreign minister or something of that kind. Now here comes a man who has been receiving large rewards for an invention during twenty-one years, and now he wants to continue the same business. Now I am opposed to it upon the general principle that it is giving away the rights of the people to an individual, and to the lawyers and others who are to prosecute his rights against an oppressed people for the purpose of obtaining money without earning it, or being entitled to it by strict law. These are my sentiments.

Mr. BROMWELL. I now call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered, which was upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. BROMWELL was entitled to the floor.

Mr. DAWES. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BROMWELL. Certainly.

Mr. DAWES. I do not intend to make an indiscriminate warfare upon the renewal of patents; but I desire to make a discrimination between them, and put each one upon its merits. I understand this to be a bill to extend by act of Congress a patent which has already existed twenty-one years, not to refer it to the Commissioner of Patents for examination.

Mr. BROMWELL. The gentleman is mistaken; the bill provides that this patent shall be extended, if the Commissioner of Patents upon a full hearing shall deem it proper to do so.

Mr. DAWES. Then in that respect I was misinformed; the bill is better in that regard than I had supposed. If the bill is passed, the case ought to be referred to the Commissioner of Patents.

But I wish to call the attention of the House to the reasons upon which this bill is based. As I understand, the reason is given that this is an old man who has not yet received any fair remuneration for his invention. Now, is there any reason shown why he has not yet received a fair remuneration? Has the committee given any good reasons for it?

A few days since the committee reported a bill proposing to refer to the Commissioner of Patents to decide whether a patent should be renewed which had been in existence for twenty-one years. The ground upon which that bill was based was that during nearly all the last seven years of the patent, the patentee, from the character of his patent, had been deprived from receiving any benefit from it. His patent was one in relation to the production or preparation of cotton; and during the whole of the late war he was shut out from any use of it whatever, and had therefore made nothing from it. But the House on a full hearing of that case said by positive vote that that was no reason why the case should be referred to the Commissioner of Patents, and they refused to give the patentee an opportunity for a rehearing. I thought that was wrong; I thought it was hard. I asked the House to refer that case to the Commissioner of Patents; but the House concluded otherwise.

Now, I do not see any better reason, I do not see any good reason for referring this case to the Commissioner of Patents. If my friend from Illinois [Mr. BROMWELL] will show me as good a reason in this case as I thought existed in the other case I would vote for it; for I do not stand up here to oppose all these cases indiscriminately. But I desire to see a good reason for extending any further a patent which has already existed twenty-one years.

I will listen to the gentleman from Illinois, and see if he can show any good reason why this bill should pass.

Mr. BROMWELL. I wish merely to say a few words in answer to my colleague from Illinois [Mr. HARDING] and to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.]

In the first place, as to the cotton press mentioned by the gentleman from Massachusetts, I think it is safe to say that the House never did hear that question discussed, because there was so much noise in the House while the gentleman who reported the bill was trying to show the reason for the extension of that patent. I admit that there was more reason for the extension in that case than in this.

But with all due deference to my colleague's views touching the right of the public in these inventions, allow me to say that in all these cases some principle of equity must be, and doubtless will be, recognized by this Congress. Many of these inventors devote the best years of their lives to a struggle to perfect their inventions; and it is these inventions and improvements that have transformed this country from a wilderness into what it is. Many of the men who have brought forward the most valuable of these inventions have led lives of poverty and vexation and have died poor.

The period of fourteen years has been named in the law as being, in general, and all things considered, a proper time during which the inventor shall enjoy the exclusive benefits of his invention. But is this period never to be varied by any considerations of equity? What do these bills which have been brought forward propose? They propose that the officer whom the law has appointed to consider questions of this nature, a competent man with legal knowledge, shall, by means of a bill of this kind, have jurisdiction to hear and determine the question between the inventor and the public at large upon principles of common equity. Shall this be denied? If the Commissioner is not a man of sufficient knowledge and judgment to hear such cases properly, then authorize the appointment of a chancellor for that office and let him hear such cases; for these questions resting on equitable considerations continually arise.

Now, sir, the committee did not report any of these bills until they had been satisfied that the cases were such as to call for such interpolation. The case at present before the House is that of a man exceedingly old and exceedingly poor. His means, whatever they may have been, are completely exhausted. He has a son who has attempted to carry on the manufacture of these corn-shellers for the benefit of the old man. This is the only resource left for the support of that old man, after a life-time expended in efforts to perfect inventions, some of which have been valuable, but the term of which has expired, so that the public has now the benefit of them all.

This bill expressly protects the rights of every person who may, since the expiration of the patent, have been possessed of one of these machines. The bill can hurt no one. It is not necessary that the "watch-dog of the Treasury" should fight these bills. They seek to take nothing from the Treasury. The question simply is whether this Congress is willing that the officer appointed by the law to hear such matters shall be endowed with jurisdiction to do justice in certain cases in which the law, by reason of its generality, operates harshly.

I am not prepared to say that this case presents stronger claims than any other. On the contrary, I think that there have been before the House cases equally entitled to favorable consideration, and I have no doubt that such cases will come before us again. I know, indeed, that some such cases will be reported soon. But I think that in this case there are sufficient reasons to induce us to allow the Commissioner of Patents to hear the application and decide it as he deems right in view of the rights of the public and the inventor.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. BROMWELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MAIL SERVICE.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Postmaster General, transmitting, in compliance with the act of Congress of July 2, 1836, abstracts of offers received, contracts made, and allowances made to contractors for additional services, &c.; which was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. By the law of 1864, this document is not to be printed except by special order of the House.

TAX BILL.

Mr. MORRILL moved that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. DAWES in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being a bill of the House (No. 513) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof.

The pending section was as follows:

That section seventy-four be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause, and inserting, in lieu thereof, the following: that the receipt for the payment of any special tax shall contain and set forth the purpose, trade, business, or profession for which such tax is paid, and the name and place of abode of the person or persons paying the same; if by a rectifier, the quantity of spirits intended to be rectified; if by a peddler, whether for traveling on foot, or with one or two or more horses or mules, the time for which and the date or time of payment, and (except in the case of auctioneers, produce brokers, commercial brokers, patent-right dealers, photographers, builders, insurance agents, insurance brokers, and peddlers) the place at which the trade, business, or profession for which the tax is paid shall be carried on: Provided, That the payment of the special tax imposed shall not exonerate from taxation the person or persons, (except lawyers, physicians, surgeons, dentists, cattle brokers, horse dealers, peddlers, produce brokers, commercial brokers, patent-right dealers, photographers, builders, insurance agents, insurance brokers, and auctioneers) or firm, company, or corporation in any other place than that stated; but nothing herein contained shall prohibit the storage of goods, wares, or merchandise in other places than the place of business, nor the sale by manufacturers or producers of their own goods, wares, and merchandise, at the place of production or manufacture, and at their principal office or place of business, provided no goods, wares or merchandise shall be kept for sale at said office. And every person exercising or carrying on any trade, business, or profession, or doing any act for which a special tax is imposed, shall, on demand of any officer of internal revenue, produce and exhibit the receipt for payment of the tax, and unless he shall do so may be taken and deemed not to have paid such tax. And in case any peddler shall refuse to exhibit his or her receipt, as aforesaid, when demanded by any officer of internal revenue, said officer may seize the horse, wagon, and contents, or pack, bundle, or basket of any person so refusing, and the assessor of the district in which the seizure has occurred may, on ten days' notice, published in any newspaper in the district, or served personally on the peddler, or at his dwelling-house, require such peddler to show cause, if any he has, why the horse, wagon, and contents, pack, bundle, or basket so seized shall not be forfeited; and in case no sufficient cause is shown, the assessor may direct a forfeiture, and issue an order to the collector or to any deputy collector of the district for the sale of the property so forfeited; and one half of the same, after payment of the expenses of the proceedings, shall be paid to the officer making the seizure, and the other half thereof to the collector for the use of the United States. And all special taxes imposed after the 1st day of May in any year shall be paid for and until the 1st day of May next succeeding, and shall be the ratable proportion of the whole amount of tax imposed for one year, and estimated from the first day of the month in which such tax is imposed.

Mr. DELANO. I move to amend as follows:

In line eight hundred and fifty-six strike out the words "one half of," and in lines eight hundred and fifty-eight and eight hundred and fifty-nine strike out the words "to the officer making the seizure, and the other half thereof."

Mr. Chairman, as the section now stands the peddler making a forfeiture of his "traps" is liable to be condemned by the action of the assessor, and one half of the forfeiture is to go to the assessor. I propose the amendment for the purpose of striking at the whole system of bounties to informers who are themselves the assessors. I will read the general provision on page 130, which does not cover this case:

And provided further, That no collector, deputy collector, assessor, assistant assessor, revenue agent, revenue inspector, or other officer or person connected with the Treasury Department, or any of the branches thereof, shall be entitled to receive or shall be interested in any share allowed to an informer under the internal revenue law.

I respectfully suggest to my distinguished friend, the chairman, that does not include this case; and to make the bill homogeneous the amendment should be adopted.

Mr. MORRILL. I had intended to make the amendment myself.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next paragraph, as follows:

That section seventy-five be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting, in lieu thereof, the following: that upon the death of any person having paid the special tax for any trade, business, or profession, it may and shall be lawful for the executors or administrators, or the wife or child, or the assignee or assigns of such deceased person to occupy the house or premises, and in like manner to exercise or carry on, for the residue of the term for which the tax shall have been paid, the same trade, business, or profession, in or upon the same house or premises as the deceased before exercised or carried on, without payment of any additional tax. And in case of the removal of any person or persons from the house or premises for which any trade, business, or profession was taxed, it shall be lawful for the person or persons so removing to any other place to carry on the trade, business, or profession specified in the tax receipt at the place to which such person or persons may remove without payment of any additional tax: Provided, That all cases of death, change, or removal, as aforesaid, shall be registered with the assistant assessor, together with the name or names of the person or persons making such change or removal, or successor to any person deceased, under regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. MORRILL. I move, in line eight hundred and seventy, to strike out the words "assignee or assigns," and insert "legal representatives."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DARLING. I move to go back to offer the following amendment:

Insert in line seven hundred and seventy-five, after the word "provided," the following:

The several rates hereinafter stated for business tax shall be assessed annually and in all cases wherein an additional amount is dependent upon the amount of his or their sales, such sales shall be registered monthly, and the additional tax shall be assessed and collected as in the case of tax upon manufactures.

Mr. MORRILL. I object.

The Clerk read the next paragraph, as follows:

That section seventy-six be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting, in lieu thereof, the following: that in every case where more than one of the pursuits, employments, or occupations, hereinafter described, shall be pursued or carried on in the same place by the same person at the same time, except as hereinafter provided, the tax must be paid for each according to the rates severally prescribed: Provided, That in cities and towns having a less population than six thousand persons according to the last preceding census, one special tax may embrace the business of land-warrant brokers, claim agents, and real-estate agents, upon payment of the highest rate of tax applicable to either one of said pursuits.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out the word "may," in line eight hundred and ninety-eight, and insert "shall be held to;" so that it will read:

One special tax shall be held to embrace the business of land-warrant brokers, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next paragraph, as follows:

That section seventy-seven be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting, in lieu thereof, the following: that no auctioneer shall, by virtue of having paid the special tax as an auctioneer, sell any goods or other property at private sale, or employ any other person to act as auctioneer in his behalf, except in his own store or warehouse or in his presence; and any auctioneer who shall sell goods or commodities otherwise than by auction, without having paid the special tax imposed upon such business, shall be subject and liable to the penalty imposed upon persons dealing in or retailing, trading, or selling goods or commodities without payment of the special tax for exercising or carrying on such trade or business; and where goods or commodities are the property of any person or persons taxed to deal in or retail, or trade in or sell the same, it shall and may be lawful for any person exercising or carrying on the trade or business of an auctioneer to sell such goods or commodities for and on behalf of such person or persons in said house or premises.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out the word "or," in line nine hundred and six, and insert the words "nor shall he;" so that it will read:

That no auctioneer shall, by virtue of having paid the special tax as an auctioneer, sell any goods or other property at private sale, nor shall he employ any other person to act as auctioneer in his behalf, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next two paragraphs, as follows:

That section seventy-eight be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting, in lieu thereof, the following: that any number of persons, except lawyers, conveyancers, claim agents, patent agents, physicians, surgeons, dentists, cattle brokers, horse dealers, and peddlers, doing business in copartnership at any one place, shall be required to pay but one special tax for such copartnership.

That section seventy-nine be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting, in lieu thereof, the following: that there shall be paid, annually, on the 1st of May, or on commencing any trade, business, or profession, a special tax, as hereinafter stated, respectively, that is to say.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out all after the word "following" in the last paragraph, and insert in lieu thereof these words:

That a special tax shall be, and hereby is, imposed as follows, that is to say.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next two paragraphs, as follows:

1. Banks chartered or organized under a general law with a capital not exceeding $50,000, and bankers using or employing a capital not exceeding the sum of $50,000, shall pay $100; when exceeding $50,000, for every additional thousand dollars in excess of $50,000, two dollars. Every incorporated or other bank, and every person, firm, or company having a place of business where credits are opened by the deposit or collection of money or currency, subject to be paid or remitted upon draft, check, or order, or where money is advanced or loaned on stocks, bonds, bullion, bills of exchange, or promissory notes, or where stocks, bonds, bullion, bills of exchange, or promissory notes are received for discount or for sale, shall be regarded as a bank or as a banker under this act: Provided, That any savings bank having no capital stock, and whose business is confined to receiving deposits and loaning or investing the same for the benefit of its depositors, and which does no other business of banking, shall not be subject to this tax.

2. Wholesale dealers, whose annual sales do not exceed $50,000, shall pay fifty dollars; and if exceeding $50,000, for every additional thousand dollars in excess of $50,000, one dollar. Every person shall be regarded as a wholesale dealer under this act whose business it is, for himself or on commission, to sell or offer to sell any goods, wares, or merchandise of foreign or domestic production, not including wines, spirits, or malt liquors, whose annual sales exceed $25,000. And the special tax to be paid by any wholesale dealer shall not be estimated on a less amount than his sales for the previous year, unless he has made or proposes to make some change in his business that will, in the judgment of the assessor or assistant assessor, reduce the amount of his annual sales; nor shall the payment of the special tax as a wholesale dealer exempt any such person acting as a commercial broker from the payment of the special tax imposed upon commercial brokers: Provided, That any tax understated may and shall be again assessed; and no person paying the special tax as a wholesale dealer in liquors shall be required to pay an additional special tax on account of the sale of other goods, wares, or merchandise on the same premises: And provided further, That in estimating the amount of sales for the purposes of this section, any sales made by or through another wholesale dealer on commission shall not be again estimated and included as sold by the party for whom the sale was made.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out the word "exceeding," in line nine hundred and fifty-five, and insert the words "their annual sales exceed;" also, to insert before the word "one," in the next line, the words "they shall pay;" so that it will read:

And if their annual sales exceed $50,000 they shall pay one dollar.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to insert after line nine hundred and fifty-six the following:

And the amount of all sales within the year beyond $50,000 shall be returned monthly to the assistant assessor, and the tax on sales in excess of $50,000 shall be assessed by the assessors and paid monthly as other monthly taxes are assessed and paid.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. It is now necessary to strike out after the word "and" in line nine hundred and sixty-two, down to and including the word "shall" in line nine hundred and sixty-seven, and to insert the word "shall" in line nine hundred and sixty-eight; so that the clause will read:

And the payment of the special tax as a wholesale dealer shall exempt any such person, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move further to strike out after the word "that," in line nine hundred and seventy-one, down to and including the word "and," in line nine hundred and seventy-two; so that it will read:

That no person paying the special tax as a wholesale dealer in liquors shall be required to pay an additional special tax, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Iowa. I move to strike out line nine hundred and thirty-four to nine hundred and forty inclusive, and to insert in lieu thereof:

All banks chartered or organized under a general law shall pay $100.

Mr. MORRILL. I raise the point of order that we have passed that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. PRICE. I move to strike out "one dollar" in line nine hundred and fifty-six and insert "two dollars;" so that it shall read:

Wholesale dealers, whose annual sales do not exceed $50,000, shall pay fifty dollars; and if their annual sales exceed $50,000, for every additional thousand dollars in excess of $50,000, they shall pay two dollars.

The object of the amendment is this: in the section immediately preceding we make banks and bankers pay two dollars for every additional thousand dollars over $50,000. This section proposes to make wholesale dealers pay one dollar on a thousand on their sales above $50,000.

Gentlemen who are acquainted with the business will understand that the profits of one are about equal to the profits of the other, and the wholesale dealer can well afford to pay two dollars on $1,000 of sales during a year.

Mr. MORRILL. As the present bill is one mainly reducing the tax, I hope we shall not adopt the amendment proposed. For one I am disposed to allow the people of the United States to have all the goods they may have occasion to consume at the lowest possible rate, and a tax imposed in this form would necessarily enhance the price.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the amendment.

Mr. PRICE. I move pro forma to make it $1 50. I want to show the fallacy of the argument of the gentleman. He proposes to give the people cheap goods. Will he tell me how much more a man will have to pay for a yard of muslin which is usually retailed at twenty-five cents when the wholesale dealer has to pay an additional dollar tax on a thousand dollars' worth of goods? It would be going a little further with infinitesimal arithmetic to get at that result than I am able to cipher.

Mr. MORRILL. As a matter of experience, we know that our city horse railroad companies put on a whole cent extra to cover a tax of one eighth of a cent. And when we put on a tax of six cents on a ton of coal, there was not a single instance where the price did not immediately rise at least twenty-five cents. And so it has been in a great many other instances. This tax takes the place of a license. Some large wholesale dealers now pay seventy or eighty thousand dollars a year in the form of a license or special tax. I think it is enough.

Mr. PRICE. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I move pro forma to make it $2 75. I wish my friend from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] would withdraw his amendment. So far as the business classes of the community are concerned they are not only taxed once and twice but in many cases five and six times. And now the gentleman proposes where a man sells more than $50,000 that he shall pay a tax of two dollars on every thousand dollars, or double the rate proposed in the bill. It applies to all commission merchants, all brokers, all classes of men who sell property which has been consigned to them. Take a firm that sells at one half per cent. commission. In the first place you make them pay a license and then you tax them on the sales. You will tax the business out of existence. I say that one dollar is high enough. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

The question recurring on the amendment of Mr. PRICE, it was disagreed to.

The Clerk read the next paragraph, as follows:

3. Retail dealers shall pay ten dollars. Every person whose business or occupation it is to sell or offer for sale any goods, wares, or merchandise of foreign or domestic production, not including spirits, wines, ale, beer, or other malt liquors, and whose annual sales exceed $1,000 and do not exceed $25,000, shall be regarded as a retail dealer under this act.

Mr. BALDWIN. I move to amend by adding the following:

Provided, however, That when the annual sales of a retail dealer exceed $25,000, for every additional thousand dollars in excess of $25,000 he shall pay one dollar.

As the law now stands, and as it has heretofore been executed, a retail dealer who sells $25,001 is charged as a wholesale dealer and required to pay a license of fifty dollars. That seems to me unreasonable and unjust. It seems to me more just and reasonable that retail dealers should be graded in this way, so as to pay a dollar for every additional thousand dollars, rather than to be required to pay fifty dollars for a wholesale license because their sales barely exceed $25,000.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the amendment will not prevail. It is necessary to make some line of demarkation between a retail dealer and a wholesale dealer. At whatever point you draw the line if the dealer exceeds the amount of course he becomes liable to a higher tax as a wholesale dealer. It is a small amount which the retailer is required to pay. The moment the amount of sales exceeds $25,000 the man becomes a wholesale dealer. We must have some line of demarkation.

Mr. DAVIS. It is provided in the bill that persons and corporations in certain branches of business shall pay a tax upon their annual sales. It is also provided, I believe, that they shall pay the tax before commencing business. I desire to know how the amount of this tax is to be ascertained.

Mr. MORRILL. The tax upon the annual sales does not commence until those sales shall have exceeded $50,000, though a special tax of a fixed amount is paid at the outset.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

4. Wholesale dealers in liquors whose annual sales do not exceed $50,000 shall pay fifty dollars, and if exceeding $50,000, for every additional thousand dollars in excess of $50,000, one dollar. Every person who shall sell or offer for sale any distilled spirits, fermented liquors, or wines of any kind in quantities of more than three gallons at one time to the same purchaser, or whose annual sales, including sales of other merchandise, shall exceed $25,000, shall be regarded as a wholesale dealer in liquors.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Iowa. I move to amend by striking out "one dollar" and inserting in lieu thereof "two dollars."

I understand that this business of selling liquor is very profitable, and if so, I think the liquor sellers are able to pay the sum I propose.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Chairman, I suppose the object of Congress to be to obtain as large a revenue as possible from liquors; but I conceive that the more legitimate way to reach that object is to levy the tax upon the liquor; and if, as proposed in the bill, we allow the tax to remain at two dollars per gallon, it seems to me that ought to satisfy us. I hope, therefore, that the amendment will not prevail.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend by inserting after the word "dollar" in line nine hundred and ninety-two the following words:

And such excess shall be assessed and paid in the same manner as required of wholesale dealers.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend by inserting after the word "dollars" where it last occurs in line nine hundred and ninety-one the words "they shall pay."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PRICE. Hopeless as the attempt may appear, I will make one more effort to amend this section. I move to amend by striking out the word "fifty" in line nine hundred and eighty-nine and inserting in lieu thereof "one hundred;" so that the clause will read:

Wholesale dealers in liquors whose annual sales do not exceed $50,000 shall pay $100.

Under this bill as it stands the wholesale liquor dealer selling $50,000 worth of liquor annually will pay only fifty dollars; while a banker doing business right alongside of him, with a capital of $50,000, pays a license of $100, and pays also upon every additional $1,000 double the amount which the liquor dealer pays. It appears to me that men in the liquor business can afford to pay a tax of $100, which is not as much as men in honest branches of business pay on a corresponding amount of capital.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

5. Retail dealers in liquors shall pay twenty-five dollars. Every person who shall sell or offer for sale foreign or domestic spirits, wines, ale, beer, or other malt liquors in quantities of three gallons or less, and whose annual sales, including all sales of other merchandise, do not exceed $25,000, shall be regarded as a retail dealer in liquors under this act.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I move to amend by striking out "twenty-five," in the first line of the paragraph just read, and inserting in lieu thereof "fifty."

Mr. Chairman, while I have great respect for the opinions of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, I distrust the notion that we are going to realize much revenue from distilled spirits by a tax of two dollars a gallon. I think the gentleman will concede that the experiment has not in the past been very successful. Members of the House are, I suppose, fully aware that, within the last year at least, the larger proportion of distilled spirits in the United States has paid little or no tax. What has been paid has been divided among informers, detectives, and the Government.

Mr. MORRILL. The gentleman will have an opportunity to discuss this question at a latter stage of the bill.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I think the discussion is apropos now.

Mr. Chairman, the practice has been to manufacture distilled spirits illegitimately, making it out of dollar corn, and then smuggle the article into the market. When once in the market, it can be sold in the groceries by paying a license of twenty-five dollars. I propose to catch some of it in this way, by a charge of fifty dollars for the privilege of selling.

Mr. MORRILL. I would not object if it were the sentiment of the country that all these beer shops and groceries should be suppressed; but I warn gentlemen, if they can enforce the law, the Government will get no revenue at all. If you adopt this increased tax, a poor widow or a maimed soldier who is keeping a small beer shop will have to pay this large tax; and hotel keepers will be compelled to pay this in addition. I hardly think Congress will be disposed to raise the tax.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read the next paragraph, as follows:

6. Lottery ticket dealers shall pay $100. Every person, association, firm, or corporation who shall make, sell, or offer to sell lottery tickets or fractional parts thereof, or any token, certificate, or device representing or intending to represent a lottery ticket or any fractional part thereof, or any policy of numbers in any lottery, or shall manage any lottery, or prepare schemes of lotteries, or superintend the drawing of any lottery, shall be deemed a lottery ticket dealer under this act: Provided, That any person doing the business of lottery ticket dealers shall give bond, in the sum of $1,000, with sureties, to be approved by the collector of the district, conditioned that he will not sell any ticket or supplementary ticket of such lottery which has not been duly stamped according to law.

Mr. DARLING. I move to amend in line ten hundred and five by inserting the word "policy" after the word "ticket." I shall next move to strike out "one hundred" and insert "one hundred and fifty."

If we are to legalize this iniquitous traffic, I want to get the largest possible amount of revenue. I am satisfied, from the information I have received, that the Government is defrauded out of at least $9,000,000 a year in the way of taxes under the present law. All of the small dealers have been subject to the monopolists who carry on the business, particularly in New York city, the same as the banking business. It is carried on with a magnitude that would astonish the House. Every man who wants to go into the business is subject to the orders of the large dealers. I desire that every man who goes into the business, no matter how small his business may be, shall pay the tax directly to the Government, and that he shall give bond to the United States that he will pay the tax into the United States Treasury. That is the reason I move the amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. We have already tried the policy of extreme taxation in relation to lottery dealers. We placed the tax as high as $1,000. It proved to be a bad policy, and we did not derive much revenue at all. Since the amount has been fixed as it is the Government is in receipt of a considerable amount of revenue. Let me say it is to ferret out, and seize the parties who sell these tickets, and that we may know who they are that this license or special tax is imposed.

After all this is done, we impose a tax upon all of their sales of five per cent. If we succeed in collecting this special tax we shall collect the other also.

The law is amended in one respect. Under the existing law one or two parties in New York have enjoyed a monopoly; others dealing in lotteries have been dealing in them surreptitiously and in violation of law, or have been made to pay tribute to one or two men. The present bill changes all that. I hope the amendment will not prevail.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DAVIS. I offer the following amendment:

Insert in line ten hundred and nineteen: And provided moreover, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to authorize the sale of lottery tickets in any State where such sales are prohibited by the laws thereof.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. That is already in the bill.

Mr. DAVIS. Then I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. DARLING. I move to amend the proviso by striking out the word "any" and inserting the word "every" before the words "person doing the business of lottery ticket dealers," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DARLING. I move to further amend the same sentence by inserting after the words "lottery ticket dealers" the words, "or dealers in policy of numbers." What I want to get at is this: I want to prevent if possible the spread of this nefarious and iniquitous practice in our large cities, which is entailing so much ruin and distress and suffering upon the families of poor people. It is a species of gambling which is carried on to an extent that, in my judgment, inflicts more misery, more sorrow, and more suffering upon families than the use of intoxicating drinks, or at least quite as much.

Now, I do not mean, if I can help it, that any person shall be authorized to do this business unless he takes out a license and is put under heavy penalties that he will pay the tax due to the Government under the law. And therefore I want to include, not only those who sell lottery tickets, but those who do a business far worse, that of selling policies of numbers, which are sold principally to the poor, the degraded, and the ignorant.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DARLING] to a description of lottery ticket dealers which renders his amendment unnecessary. The attention of the committee was called to this subject, and they made a provision to meet the point the gentleman refers to, by inserting it in the description of lottery ticket dealers.

Mr. DARLING. Where is that?

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. In the part of the paragraph which reads:

Every person, association, firm, or corporation which shall make, sell, or offer to sell lottery tickets or fractional parts thereof, or any token, certificate, or device representing or intending to represent a lottery ticket or any fractional part thereof, or any policy of numbers in any lottery, or shall manage any lottery, or prepare schemes of lotteries, or superintend the drawing of any lottery, shall be deemed a lottery ticket dealer under this act.

Mr. DARLING. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOOPER] is right, and I will withdraw that amendment.

I move to amend by inserting in the proviso, before the words "or supplementary ticket," the words "or policy of numbers." I want to make it so clear and distinct that there will be no escape from a proper construction of the law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next paragraph, as follows:

7. Horse dealers shall pay ten dollars. Any person whose business it is to buy or sell horses or mules shall be regarded a horse dealer under this act: Provided, That one special tax having been paid, no additional tax shall be imposed upon any horse dealer for keeping a livery stable, nor upon any livery stable keeper who may also be a horse dealer.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out at the end of the paragraph the words "who may also be a horse dealer," and insert in lieu thereof the words "for dealing in horses."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I move to amend the first sentence so that it will read:

Horse dealers whose annual sales do not exceed $10,000 shall pay ten dollars; and if exceeding the sum of $10,000, one dollar for each additional thousand dollars.

My amendment is intended to make this paragraph correspond with the paragraph in regard to cattle dealers. In this paragraph there is no limit to the amount of sales that horse dealers may make under a license of ten dollars. In the case of cattle dealers there is a limit of $10,000, and I think this paragraph should be modified accordingly. Or if a horse dealer with a license of ten dollars can sell without any limitation as to the amount of his sales, then the provision in regard to cattle dealers should be the same. This business of horse dealing is a large business in some localities; there is an immense amount of capital invested in it; and it strikes me there should be some limit on the amount of capital invested or the amount of sales under a license of ten dollars.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not know that I have much objection to the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BENJAMIN.] But I do not believe there are a dozen men in the United States who do so large a business in horse dealing as to render them liable to the proposed increased tax.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I beg to inform the gentleman that there are more than that number in my district alone.

Mr. MORRILL. They are very fortunate men. The business is very much reduced from what it was for the last three or four years, when the Government had occasion to employ this kind of men.

Mr. DELANO. I would inquire of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means [Mr. MORRILL] if he is willing to have this amendment adopted, and also allow the proviso to remain which allows a party to be a livery stable keeper also without paying an additional tax. I would prefer the paragraph as it is. I shall certainly move to strike out the proviso if the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BENJAMIN] shall be adopted.

Mr. MORRILL. I think the paragraph better remain as it is; that is my view of it.

The amendment of Mr. BENJAMIN was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the next paragraph, as follows:

8. Livery stable keepers shall pay ten dollars. Any person whose business it is to keep horses for hire, or to let, or to keep, feed, or board horses for others, shall be regarded as a livery stable keeper under this act.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read the next paragraph, as follows:

9. Brokers shall pay fifty dollars. Every person, firm, or company, except such as have paid a tax as a bank or banker, whose business it is to negotiate purchases or sales of stocks, bonds, exchange, bullion, coined money, bank notes, promissory notes, or other securities, for themselves or others, shall be regarded as a broker under this act: Provided, That any person having paid the tax as a banker shall not be required to pay any tax as a broker.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out the words "except such as have paid a tax as a bank or banker," as that is provided for in the proviso.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend the proviso by inserting the word "special" before the words "tax as a banker."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move further to amend the proviso by striking out the word "any" and inserting the words "a special" before the words "tax as a broker."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next paragraph, as follows:

10. Pawnbrokers using or employing a capital of not exceeding $50,000 shall pay fifty dollars; and when using or employing a capital exceeding $50,000, for every additional thousand dollars in excess of $50,000, two dollars. Every person whose business or occupation it is to take or receive, by way of pledge, pawn, or exchange, any goods, wares, or merchandise, or any kind of personal property whatever, as security for the repayment of money lent thereon, shall be deemed a pawnbroker under this act.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend this paragraph by inserting after the words "two dollars" the words "and such excess shall be assessed and paid in the same manner as required of wholesale dealers."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to amend by inserting the words "shall pay" before the words "two dollars."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next paragraph, as follows:

11. Land-warrant brokers shall pay twenty-five dollars. Any person shall be regarded as a land-warrant broker within the meaning of this act who makes a business of buying and selling land-warrants, or of furnishing them to settlers or other persons.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read the next paragraph, as follows:

12. Cattle brokers, whose annual sales do not exceed $10,000, shall pay ten dollars; and if exceeding the sum of $10,000, one dollar for each additional $10,000. Any person whose business it is to buy or sell or deal in cattle, hogs, or sheep shall be considered as a cattle broker.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read the next paragraph, as follows:

13. Produce brokers, whose annual sales do not exceed the sum of $10,000, shall pay ten dollars. Every person other than one having paid the special tax as a commercial broker or cattle broker, or wholesale or retail dealer, or peddler, whose occupation it is to buy or sell agricultural or farm products, and whose annual sales do not exceed $10,000, shall be regarded as a produce broker under this act.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read the next paragraph, as follows:

14. Commercial brokers shall pay twenty dollars. Any person or firm whose business it is, as a broker, to negotiate sales or purchases of goods, wares, or merchandise, or to seek orders therefor in original or unbroken packages, or to negotiate freights and other business for the owners of vessels, or for the shippers, or consignors, or consignees of freight carried by vessels, shall be regarded a commercial broker under this act.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend by striking out after the word "merchandise" the words "or to seek orders therefor in original or unbroken packages."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next paragraph, as follows:

15. Custom-house brokers shall pay ten dollars. Every person whose occupation it is, as the agent of others, to arrange entries and other custom-house papers, or transact business at any port of entry relating to the importation or exportation of goods, wares, or merchandise, shall be regarded a custom-house broker under this act.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read the next paragraph, as follows:

16. Distillers shall pay $100. Every person, firm, or corporation who distills or manufactures spirits shall be deemed a distiller under this act: Provided, That distillers of apples, grapes, or peaches, distilling or manufacturing less than one hundred and fifty barrels per year from the same, shall pay fifty dollars; And provided further, That no tax shall be imposed for any still, stills, or other apparatus used by druggists and chemists for the recovery of alcohol for pharmaceutical and chemical or scientific purposes, which has been used in those processes.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I move to amend this paragraph by striking out "$100" and inserting "$1,000" as the tax to be paid by distillers.

I have this much to say in support of my proposition: unless you guard and protect the legitimate manufacturer of this article, you will fail to derive any considerable amount of revenue from this source.

In one district in the State of New York where three years ago the census shows there was no distillery, there are now thirty distilleries. And so it is in the State of Pennsylvania. In the northern district of Georgia, where but a few years ago there was no distillery, the internal revenue collector of the district reports that there are now fifteen hundred distilleries. In one district in Virginia where there were formerly no distilleries there are now several hundred of them. Those distilleries are making, in a great measure, contraband whisky, which is being sold in the various markets of the country for less than the Government tax.

Rectified whisky in the city of New Orleans is sold at $1 75 per gallon—twenty-five cents less than the amount of the Government tax. Unless the legitimate manufacture of whisky is protected by law, the Government will obtain no revenue from this business, while the country will be flooded with whisky. All the evil consequences of the manufacture and consumption of the article will be experienced, while there will be no adequate compensation to the Treasury of the United States. Unless we adopt a system similar to that carried out in Great Britain, the Government taking charge of the manufacture of this article and recognizing those engaged in its manufacture as agents of the Government, we shall get, comparatively speaking, no revenue.

The manufacture of whisky in the United States ought to produce to the Government a yearly revenue of $80,000,000. This is the amount of the estimate formerly made by the Committee of Ways and Means; and this amount could be realized under a proper system. Estimating that the annual consumption of whisky during the last two years has been forty million gallons per annum, a tax of two dollars per gallon should yield to the Treasury $80,000,000. But if we allow every little distillery to be run for a license of twenty-five dollars, we shall have the country flooded with contraband whisky, and the Treasury will obtain but little revenue. If the license be fixed at $1,000, we drive this contraband trade out of existence, thereby protecting the legitimate manufacturer, who can thus afford to pay a license of $1,000, and also a tax of two dollars per gallon.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I would like the gentleman to explain what he means by a "legitimate manufacturer."

Mr. INGERSOLL. I mean one who pays his license, who makes his regular monthly returns, as required by law, and pays two dollars on every gallon of whisky that he manufactures. Sir, it is known to the revenue officers of the country that under the present system not one gallon out of every four gallons manufactured pays any tax to the Government.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit some statistics relative to the manufacture of this article during the last fiscal year. The table which I submit emanates from the internal revenue department:

Collections returned on distilled spirits for the first six months of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1866.

July, 1865.....	$352,252 15
August.....	267,457 88
September.....	755,682 06
October.....	1,306,025 23
November.....	3,050,671 28
December.....	3,762,134 21
Total for six months.....	9,554,202 81
January, 1866.....	3,751,469 91
February.....	3,592,677 46
March.....	2,439,124 42
Total returns to date.....	$19,337,474 60

NOTE.—The collections for February and March will be somewhat increased, as all returns have not yet been received.

Thus it appears that the Government, instead of receiving, as it should, $80,000,000 per annum from this source, receives annually only about twenty-four million dollars.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. STEVENS. I entertain just the contrary view to that of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. INGERSOLL;] and I move to amend his amendment by inserting, in lieu of what he proposes, to strike out, the word "fifty," so as to make the amount fifty dollars instead of $100, as it now stands in the bill.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we do not expect to raise any large amount of revenue from the licenses of these distilleries. Anybody who knows anything about the matter must know that the amount received from licenses is a mere bagatelle compared with the whole amount of taxation derived from this branch of business. The object of requiring a license to be taken by distillers corresponds with the object of requiring a license for the manufacture of cigars. The purpose is that the officers of the Government may know who are engaged in distilling, so that they may require proper returns. If we induce every distiller to take out a license then the officers of the Government have a clue as to who are manufacturing whisky. But if the amount of license be fixed at $1,000 not one in twenty of these distillers will take out a license. The majority will prefer to risk the chances of being detected in the illicit manufacture, and the Government officers will not have the means of tracing them which they have when licenses are taken out.

Besides that, sir, there are all over the country very small distilleries, making perhaps twenty-five gallons a day. They cannot afford to pay a large license.

There are in several parts of the country small distilleries running out perhaps in the course of a year from four hundred to five hundred gallons. Now twenty-five dollars license and then raising the tax on the distilled article is, I think, a great deal. After all, the revenue to the Government comes from the tax on the distilled article.

My friend from Illinois, [Mr. INGERSOLL,] represents larger operations than those I have referred to. He represents men who distill a thousand gallons a day. What is a thousand dollars to them if they can crush out all other distilleries than those at Peoria? What is a thousand dollars to them in comparison to the enormous profits which they are enabled to make?

I am sure the gentleman would be glad to have the monopoly confined to Peoria. They have had the monopoly there this year. Also understand that a great many of them there were caught in attempts to defraud the Government.

I am in favor of leaving the license at twenty-five dollars, and not increasing it as is proposed to fifty dollars.

I agree with the gentleman that down South there may be thousands of gallons distilled which do not pay tax to the Government. It is I suppose because the Government cannot find loyal men enough to take the oath and support "my policy." [Laughter.] I am told that one half of the whisky in the United States is now made in the southern States.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. INGERSOLL. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment. I have no sympathy with the large distilleries in Peoria or the small distilleries in Pennsylvania. I believe the distilleries in Peoria and elsewhere are generally carried on by Democrats. Of course they support "my policy" as it is termed.

But, sir, I am looking at the interests of the revenue of this Government. I desire to state here in regard to the administration of the revenue law as it is applicable to the manufacture of whisky, that in the large distilleries the collector appoints what is called an inspector whose duty it is to remain there night and day if necessary to watch and supervise operations, and to see that they return the exact number of gallons that is manufactured.

Mr. STEVENS. That is the way they do with the distilleries in my county, but they found three of these inspectors who received $5,000 a year each from these distilleries for the purpose, I suppose, of watching. [Laughter.]

Mr. INGERSOLL. I presume that is so. Of course you will find here and there a fraudulent agent. But, sir, if you do not watch these distilleries, I will guaranty you will get but little revenue. If you employ honest men, the Government will get its proper revenue.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania says that it is not the license that goes to make up the amount of the revenue, but the tax on the article. I am aware of that; but in order to get that tax you must have the manufacture of whisky, to a certain extent, under the control of the Government. If you do not, as I have said, you will get but little revenue. The small distilleries in Pennsylvania, Kentucky, or anywhere else, paying a license of twenty-five dollars, and having no one to supervise them, may return only one barrel on which the tax is paid, and will sell as many other barrels of whisky on which no tax is paid. They may make $100 profit each day, and I have no doubt many of them do, from illicit traffic in this article. The Government, of course, gets nothing in the way of tax on this contraband whisky. You cannot detect them, because you have no one there to watch them. If you put up the license to $1,000, and have an agent in every distillery, together with severe penalties for violation of the law, I have no doubt the Government will secure the collection of the tax.

I am speaking in the interest of the revenue, and not in the interest of the manufacturer, whether he be a large one or a small one. I ask whether twenty-five millions is an adequate revenue from this source. It ought to be eighty millions.

Mr. STEVENS. I withdraw my amendment. Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I will renew the amendment simply for the purpose of calling attention to the thirty-third section on page 155 of this bill, where it is required that an inspector shall be appointed for every distillery established according to law.

I concur with the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the object to be secured by having the rate of special tax a smaller sum is to induce everybody who distilled to come and pay for a license. With a tax of $1,000 it is certain the small distiller would not and could not pay it. Then I think there will be more fraud in the large distilleries than the small ones. If I am not mistaken, in the neighborhood of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. INGERSOLL,] among the largest distilleries there were found some heavy frauds.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I will state how that is, because I wish to defend every manufacturer from any unjust imputation on his character. Within my knowledge in the Peoria district, so far as the manufacturers are concerned, I think there is but one house that has ever had any charge preferred against it for any fraud, large or small, upon the revenue connected with the manufacture of whisky. That is the only case that I am aware of in the fifth district.

Mr. STEVENS. What was the amount of the fraud?

Mr. INGERSOLL. I think the amount of the whisky alleged to have been made in fraud of the revenue law was between four and five hundred barrels.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I do not mean to charge fraud upon the gentleman's district; but I know that in Illinois there have been large frauds committed.

Mr. MORRILL. It is evident that in regard to the policy of having a high or low tax on the business of distilling liquors, there is a wide difference of opinion among members of the House. The revenue commission have reported a bill for our action, adopting the policy somewhat of England, that is, of confining the business to a few large distilleries. But in this country, I think, where the business is already established—and there is a large amount of property invested all over the country in small distilleries—it would be rather hard to suddenly adopt a policy that would crush the business of these men and destroy their property without notice.

I am willing for one to go to some extent on that line of policy. I believe that in the end we may find it to be the only policy by which we can squeeze out of this manufacture the large amount of tribute that evidently is intended to be done not only by the people but by Congress. With that view the committee have raised the amount of special tax from fifty dollars to $100. I believe that is as far as we ought to go now, and it is a just compromise between the conflicting opinions that undoubtedly now prevail.

In another part of the paragraph it will be found that a less rate is imposed upon those who distill apple brandy or apple jack where the amount is less than one hundred and fifty barrels a year.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted and the amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I do not withdraw it. I insist upon a vote.

Mr. PAINE. I rise to a point of order. Has not this precise amendment once been voted down?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] withdrew it, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOOPER] renewed it.

Mr. PAINE. The House voted down the amendment of Mr. STEVENS, I believe, and then he informed the House that he withdrew it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not announce the result when the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] rose and stated that he withdrew it.

Mr. PAINE. There was a vote upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not sustain the point of order, inasmuch as the gentleman from Pennsylvania withdrew the amendment before the Chair announced the vote. The same amendment is now offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOOPER.] No further debate is in order upon it.

The amendment to the amendment was disagreed to.

The question recurred on the amendment offered by Mr. INGERSOLL to strike out "$100" and insert "$1,000."

Mr. HENDERSON. Are remarks in order on that amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. No debate is in order. The gentleman can move pro forma to strike out "one thousand" and insert "two hundred."

Mr. HENDERSON. Very well. I move to insert "eleven hundred." I was going to renew the motion to insert "fifty," with a view of stating, not that I was in favor of reducing it to fifty dollars, but that I was in favor of the amendment of my friend from Illinois, [Mr. INGERSOLL.] I think the first business of the Government is to so adjust the tax as to have as little distillation as possible, and to make as much profit as possible out of what is manufactured; the least possible amount of liquor with the greatest possible revenue from it.

Now, I cannot understand how it is that a thousand-dollar tax will increase the distillation of liquor. That is to my mind very strange. I have heard it stated here by several gentlemen that by thus increasing the amount of tax you will increase the number of distilleries. If it is so, and they all pay their tax, we certainly will get more revenue. But I am impressed with the belief that it will not have the effect to increase the number of distilleries; that is to say, if the Government is able to enforce the laws which it makes. I do not believe that the Government has come to that point that it cannot enforce its laws, and consequently I am fully satisfied that the high tax, with vigilant prosecution of the laws, will reduce the number of distilleries, and at the same time increase the amount of the revenue. My principle would be to reduce the amount of liquor and increase the revenue.

Mr. HENDERSON. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. LAFLIN. I move to strike out "one thousand" and insert "twelve hundred."

I was very glad indeed to hear the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means assert that the revenue commission, in making their propositions of amendment to the revenue laws, had endeavored, as far as possible, to follow the example set by England. As was remarked by the chairman of the committee when he first introduced this bill, this subject of internal revenue is an entirely new one with us, and I commend to the judgment of this House whether it is not for our interest to follow, as far as we can, the example set to us by a nation which has had a long experience on this subject.

We find that Great Britain has adopted the plan of taxing all luxuries to the very greatest extent, and it raises over $50,000,000 annually from its tax on distilled spirits. By reference to the report of the revenue commission of that country it appears that in the year 1863-64 England raised $50,666,775, and in 1864-65 $53,200,385 on spirits.

Now, sir, what is our experience? We have a population nearly as great as that of England, and the statistics of our returns show that we consume fully as much in amount as England does. And yet according to the returns of the internal revenue it appears that in 1863 we raised a revenue of $3,229,990, in 1864 a revenue of $28,431,797, and in 1865, when we taxed whisky two dollars a gallon, we raised only $15,995,702.

Now, what are the facts with reference to the production and consumption of whisky in this country? Prior to 1860 this country produced one hundred million gallons of whisky annually. If the same amount was produced to-day and the tax of two dollars a gallon was collected we should receive $200,000,000. But we find since the tax of two dollars has been imposed that the amount consumed in this country is forty-five million gallons annually, which instead of yielding a revenue of $90,000,000 has only yielded a little over $15,000,000.

Mr. STEVENS. The gentleman must recollect that when we were about to impose the tax of two dollars for six months there was not a distillery that did not run night and day up to the time when the tax commenced; and from that time until within three months scarce a distillery ran at all, because they had laid in an immense quantity at the old tax.

Mr. LAFLIN. I understand that, but at the same time, during 1864, when we had a tax of $1.50, we only raised $28,000,000. It is estimated that seven eighths of all the whisky produced in this country is used for drinking purposes.

Now, what is the fact in regard to the number of distilleries? In 1860 there were eleven hundred and ninety-three distilleries in the United States. Now the number is estimated at five thousand. Why? Because under the stimulus of high prices people all over the United States have engaged in distillation on a small scale, some of them producing at the rate of one hundred gallons a year. It is said to be a fact, and I have not seen it denied, that every manufacturer of small stills has more orders on hand than he can fill. And it is said that in the State of Georgia there are fifteen hundred distilleries in one district.

Mr. DODGE. Mr. Chairman, all that we require in regard to this question of whisky is a law sufficient to find out these small distilleries. I fail to perceive the force of the suggestion made by the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, that a small tax of twenty-five dollars will induce men who are carrying on an illicit traffic in cellars and garrets to come forward and make known the fact that they are engaged in this business. I hope, sir, that we shall fix a tax so large and frame a law so stringent that every manufacturer of distilled spirits, whether he makes a thousand gallons a day or five gallons a day, will be found out, so that the Government shall receive from him the entire amount of revenue contemplated by the law.

We may rest assured, sir, that a tax of twenty-five dollars will never bring to light men who are seeking to carry on an illicit traffic. If the tax be fixed at $1,000 or $1,500 there would be an object in finding them out. In the city of New York we have now a law fixing the license at $200 and $150. Last year, when only a small tax of ten dollars was required for selling liquor, there were in that city more than nine thousand places in which intoxicating drinks were sold. Under our present system, where it is an object to detect every individual selling liquor without a license, the city is receiving $1,000,000 of revenue annually from this source. If men will manufacture, if men will sell, if men will drink alcohol, let them pay the tax which the Government imposes.

The amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "$1,000" and inserting the following:

Distillers distilling less than fifty thousand gallons annually shall pay $100; those distilling fifty thousand gallons, or over, annually, shall pay $200.

Mr. Chairman, it appears to me that this is a more reasonable proposition than to make distillers indiscriminately pay $1,000. The latter system would simply break up the small distilleries and give a monopoly of the business to the large manufacturers. I do not see that any good is to be gained by it. It would not diminish the amount of whisky distilled. It would simply leave the monopolists at liberty to increase the price of the article for their own benefit.

Experience has shown that the amount consumed is not decreased by an increase in the price; and I see no reason why we should enact an oppressive law with the view to obtain revenue, or to effect a moral reform. I am as hostile to the manufacture and the use of whisky as any gentleman on this floor can be, but I do not think it wise for us to attempt to enact oppressive laws to suppress this traffic, because I do not think that we would effect the object.

Let us have, however, a discrimination between large establishments and the smaller ones. I do not know how much a small establishment manufactures annually, but I suppose that the quantity would not exceed fifty thousand gallons. Those manufacturing more than that quantity will be required by this amendment to pay $200. Gentlemen more familiar with this branch of the business can, if they deem it proper, move to increase the license fee in proportion to the amount manufactured.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not know but that I, for one, would be willing that the Government should forego all revenue from this source if we could entirely suppress the distillation and consumption of the article throughout the country. But, believing that to be impossible, I am for obtaining the largest possible amount of revenue on the smallest consumption of the article. I believe, however, that in this case moderation is true wisdom. Our own experience, corresponding with that of other countries, has shown that when we undertake to levy an exorbitant tax we always defeat our object. If we now undertake to levy a tax of $1,000 upon every distillery in this country, not one fourth of these distilleries will ever be reached at all. Why? Because we give a sufficient amount to make it an object for parties to conceal the fact—to hide their stills in garrets and cellars.

As I said in my opening speech, it is true the manufacturers in small copper stills have been exceedingly busy for the last two years. They are spread over all parts of the country. If we leave this tax at the moderate sum proposed by the Committee of Ways and Means, I believe we can collect it. I am therefore opposed either to reducing or increasing it.

There is in the paragraph a provision by which distilleries of apples, grapes, and peaches shall be taxed a less amount. We do not expect to extract so much revenue from them. These distilleries are located in Pennsylvania, Kentucky, and New Jersey, and are small establishments—to accommodate their neighborhoods. Unless they shall be allowed to remain, those who have large peach or apple orchards will find they will have no sale for their fruit. If we are to have whisky or brandy at all I would as soon have it from apples or peaches as from anything else. I hope we shall allow the bill to stand as it is.

I move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate on this paragraph.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DAWES reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being bill of the House No. 513, to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof, and had come to no resolution thereon.

CLOSE OF DEBATE.

Mr. MORRILL moved that all debate on the pending paragraph of the tax bill in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be closed in five minutes after its consideration shall be resumed.

The motion was agreed to.

TAX BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. MORRILL moved that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. DAWES in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being a bill of the House (No. 513) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof.

The CHAIRMAN stated the question to be on Mr. HOTCHKISS's amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was disagreed to.

The question then recurred on Mr. INGERSOLL's amendment, and it was also disagreed to.

Mr. RANDALL, of Kentucky, moved after the word "manufacture," in line ten hundred and eighty-nine, to insert the words "fifty and," and after the word "dollars," in line ten hundred and ninety-one, to add the following:

And those distilling or manufacturing less than fifty barrels per year from the same shall pay twenty dollars.

The committee was divided; and there were—ayes 35, noes 47; no quorum voting.

Mr. ALLISON demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. RANDALL, of Kentucky, and ALLISON, were appointed.

The committee was again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 50, noes 43.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I move to strike out the proviso as amended.

The motion was disagreed to.

The Clerk read the next paragraph, as follows:

17. Brewers shall pay $100. Every person, firm, or corporation who manufactures fermented liquors of any name or description, for sale, from malt, wholly or in part, or from any substitute thereof, shall be deemed a brewer under this act: Provided, That any person, firm, or corporation, who manufactures less than five hundred barrels per year, shall pay the sum of fifty dollars.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read the next paragraph, as follows:

18. Rectifiers who shall rectify any quantity of spirituous liquors, not exceeding five hundred barrels, packages, or casks, containing not more than forty gallons to each barrel, package, or cask, shall pay twenty-five dollars; and twenty-five dollars additional for each additional five hundred such barrels, packages, or casks, or any fractional part thereof. Every person, firm, or corporation, who rectifies, purifies, or refines spirituous liquors or wines by any process, or mixes distilled spirits, whisky, brandy, gin, or wine, with any materials for sale under the name of whisky, rum, brandy, gin, wine, or any other name, shall be regarded as a rectifier under this act.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I move to strike out the word "rectifiers." I notice in a subsequent portion of this bill a direct blow at the only prosperous manufacturing business we ever have had in the West. We are situated far from market; the products of our soil are abundant in the forms of rye and corn; and we have been able heretofore to compete successfully in the business of manufacturing alcohol with our friends in the East who are so generally superior in manufactures. But if this paragraph shall pass that interest in the West will be destroyed.

Now, I wish to call the attention of the House to the unfairness of this paragraph. I say what I mean; I use the word "unfairness" intentionally. It is known to the country that the business of manufacturing alcohol is performed by two modes. The mode which has been successfully performed in the West is the redistillation carried on by continued processes in the same establishment in which the spirit is manufactured. By continued redistillation it is rectified to the standard of alcohol.

Now this bill, infamous in this particular, the vile brood of a local interest—I have no reference of course to the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, [Mr. MORRILL] for he evidently has been imposed upon—this bill provides that alcohol and spirits shall not be made in the same establishment. Why? There is no other reason that can be given than that it is because we can manufacture alcohol out of the cheap corn of the West, in the same establishment where spirits is made, at such a rate that no man who buys his spirits in New York or New England can compete with us. And therefore it is that obstacles must be put in the way of the successful manufacture of alcohol in the West.

And how is that done? This bill requires our distiller to take his spirits out of the whisky distillery, put it in barrels, put it into bond, then take it out of bond, and put it into another establishment where it is to be made into alcohol. And when I asked why this was done, one of the heads of bureau informed me that it was to enable the eastern manufacturer to compete with the western manufacturer. Now here in this instance the man is not allowed to produce alcohol in any particular quantity by rectifying, or if he does he has to pay this additional tax for every few hundred gallons that are rectified.

Mr. ALLISON. I am quite as anxious as my friend from Illinois [Mr. HARDING] to protect the interests of our western friends who are engaged in this business. The provision that he objects to is a mere repetition of the existing law; and I have yet to hear of a single rectifier of whisky or manufacturer of alcohol in the West who complains of this license.

The provision prohibiting the rectifying of whisky or the manufacture of alcohol upon the same premises or in the same establishment where high-wines are distilled, is in another part of this bill, and has no reference whatever to this subject. I think that it is a provision that should be adopted, perhaps with some modification; because it is well known that under the existing law most of the frauds that have been discovered have been in the cases of parties who manufacture alcohol upon the same premises where they distill high-wines, without having their high-wines inspected.

This provision is evidently a just one. It certainly is a just one now, when we have doubled the tax upon the manufacture of distilled spirits, but leaves the tax as it exists in the present law upon the manufacture of alcohol and the rectifying of whisky.

I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HARDING] will not be adopted.

The amendment of Mr. HARDING, of Illinois, was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the next paragraph, as follows:

19. Coal-oil distillers shall pay fifty dollars. Any person, firm, or corporation, who shall refine, produce, or distill crude or refined petroleum or rock oil, or crude coal oil, or crude or refined oil made of asphaltum, shale, peat, or other bituminous substances, or shall manufacture coal illuminating oil shall be regarded as a coal-oil distiller under this act.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out the word "coal" before the words "illuminating oil."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next paragraph, as follows:

20. Keepers of hotels, inns, or taverns shall be classified and rated according to the yearly rental, or, if not rented, according to the estimated yearly rental of the house and property intended to be so occupied, as follows, to wit: when the rent or valuation of the yearly rental of said house and property shall be $200, or less, shall pay ten dollars; and if exceeding $200, for any additional $100 or fractional part thereof in excess of $200, five dollars. Every place where food and lodging are provided for and furnished to travelers and sojourners, in view of payment therefor, shall be regarded as a hotel, inn, or tavern, under this act: Provided, That keepers of hotels, taverns, and eating-houses, in which liquors are sold by retail, to be drank upon the premises, shall pay an additional tax of twenty-five dollars. The yearly rental shall be fixed and established by the assessor of the proper district at its proper value; but if rented, at not less than the actual rent agreed on by the parties. All steamers and vessels upon waters of the United States, on board of which passengers or travelers are provided with food or lodgings, shall be subject to and required to pay twenty-five dollars: Provided, That if there be any fraud or collusion in the return of actual rent to the assessor there shall be a penalty equal to double the amount of the tax required by this section, to be collected as other penalties under this act are collected.

Mr. MORRILL. In the sentence which now reads, "the yearly rental shall be fixed and established by the assessor of the proper district at its proper value," I move to insert the word "assistant" before the word "assessor," and the word "assessment" before the word "district."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move further to amend this paragraph by striking out the following:

Provided, That if there be any fraud or collusion in the return of actual rent to the assessor, there shall be a penalty equal to double the amount of the tax required by this section, to be collected as other penalties under this act are collected.

And inserting in lieu thereof the following:

Provided, That any person who shall make a false or fraudulent return of the annual rent mentioned in this paragraph shall be subject to a penalty therefor of double the amount of the tax.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PIKE. I move to amend by inserting at the close of the first sentence in this paragraph the following proviso:

Provided, That no license shall be required when the rent or valuation of the yearly rental shall be less than $100.

The object of my amendment must be apparent to any one. It is merely to exempt from this tax a class of people who keep small country wayside inns, which can hardly be called inns or taverns, except for the purposes of this act; places which are kept for the benefit of passers-by rather than for profit.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to amend this paragraph by striking out the following proviso:

Provided, That the keepers of hotels, taverns, and eating-houses, in which liquors are sold by retail, to be drank upon the premises, shall pay an additional tax of twenty-five dollars.

In the first place, this proposes to tax tavern-keepers on a pretty high rental. Now, a tavern-keeper, everywhere that I know anything about, is a man who keeps a house of public entertainment, including liquor to be drank upon the premises. Retailers of liquor that is not to be drank upon the premises are a different class of persons and are taxed differently.

It is proposed by this paragraph to tax all tavern-keepers twenty-five dollars more for selling liquors to be drank on the premises than if they sold none. Now, a tavern where no liquors are sold is no tavern. All taverns, except now and then a temperance house, as it is called, sell what we propose to charge twenty-five dollars for. In Pennsylvania a man licensed to keep a tavern is allowed by the law to sell liquors.

A tavern-keeper pays $200 a year rental, for what? To allow a man to call there and get a little bread and milk. He can get nothing to drink there unless the tavern-keeper pays twenty-five dollars extra. I therefore propose to strike out this proviso.

Mr. PIKE. The committee have just refused to adopt a very reasonable proposition: I made in regard to small taverns. I hope they will not adopt the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS], which I consider a very unreasonable one. This paragraph provides that tavern-keepers whose rent does not exceed $200 per annum shall pay a license tax of ten dollars. The proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is to allow a man to take out a tavern license of ten dollars, and then go into the retail liquor business.

Mr. STEVENS. Only to sell liquor to be drank on the premises.

Mr. KUYKENDALL. Retail liquor dealers always sell liquor to be drank on their premises.

Mr. PIKE. If it was to apply only to those who did not sell liquor to be drank on the premises, then we would have to keep an inspector always on the premises to see if the liquor sold was or was not drank there. The effect of the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] will be simply to allow tavern-keepers to retail liquors to any extent under the license of ten dollars. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. THAYER. I was the author of this proviso in the old law, and therefore I feel called upon to defend it now. I believe that no provision in the law has been more popular than this one. I think it is a tax which nine tenths of every community will approve.

Now, without this provision in the law, any man who shall take out a small license for an eating saloon could sell any quantity of liquor without paying any additional tax at all. And a man who sells thousands and thousands of dollars' worth of liquors, as they do in the first-class hotels of this country, could carry on a retail liquor trade under this ten-dollar license—a trade exceeding in its profits the legitimate business of entertaining travelers, and not pay one cent additional to the Government for the purposes of revenue.

I do not consider it necessary to say much in defense of such a provision as this. I cannot conceive in what manner a tax can be laid which will be more universally approved, or more justly imposed than by this provision.

Mr. PRICE. Let me ask the gentleman whether he does not think it possible in this age of the world to keep a tavern without selling whisky.

Mr. THAYER. I do think it possible; and where that is the case, of course no tax is to be paid for liquor sold.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I view this question very differently from my friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS], who seems to think that public houses where liquor is not sold do not generally keep anything in the shape of refreshments, except bread and milk, or something of that sort. According to my observation, those houses that keep no liquor keep much the best provisions. Hence, I think that my respected friend, in the remark which he made, was not in earnest, but was only practicing upon the House an innocent joke.

Mr. MORRILL. For the purpose of terminating debate on this paragraph I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DAWES reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being bill of the House No. 513, to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof, and had come to no resolution thereon.

CLOSE OF DEBATE.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that when the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union shall resume the consideration of House bill No. 513, all debate upon the pending paragraph and the amendments thereto terminate in one second.

The motion was agreed to.

TAX-BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. MORRILL moved that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. DAVES in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being a bill of the House (No. 513) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof.

The pending question was on the amendment of Mr. STEVENS to strike out the following:

Provided, That keepers of hotels, taverns, and eating-houses, in which liquors are sold by retail, to be drank upon the premises, shall pay an additional tax of twenty-five dollars.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I move to amend by inserting, after the word "act" in line eleven hundred and thirty-five the following:

Provided, That a payment of such special tax shall be construed to authorize the person so keeping a hotel, inn, or tavern to furnish the necessary food for the animals of such travelers or sojourners, without the payment of an additional special tax as a livery stable keeper.

Mr. MORRILL. I see no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PIKE. I move to amend by inserting after the word "dollars," in line eleven hundred and thirty-eight, the following:

Provided, That in case the receipts of any keeper of a hotel do not exceed $500 a year, no license shall be required.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to amend by striking out the following:

The estimated yearly rental of the house and property intended to be so occupied as follows, to wit: when the rent or valuation of the yearly rental of said house and property shall be $200 or less, shall pay ten dollars; and if exceeding $200, for any additional $100 or fractional part thereof in excess of $200, five dollars.

And inserting in lieu thereof the following:

The charge per diem they make against their guests as follows, to wit: when they charge five dollars per day, or over, they shall pay $2,000 per annum; when they charge less than five dollars per day, and not less than three dollars, they shall pay $1,000 per annum; when they charge less than three dollars a day, and not less than two dollars per day, they shall pay $100 per annum; when they charge less than two dollars per day, they shall pay a tax of fifty dollars per annum.

So that the clause will read:

Keepers of hotels, inns, or taverns shall be classified and rated according to the yearly rental, or, if not rented, according to the charge per diem, &c.

Mr. PIKE. I move to amend the amendment by adding the following:

And when they charge $1 50 or less per day they shall not be required to pay tax.

The amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

21. Keepers of eating-houses shall pay ten dollars Every place where food or refreshments of any kind, not including spirits, wines, ale, beer, or malt liquors, are provided for casual visitors and sold for consumption therein, shall be regarded as an eating-house under this act. But the keeper of an eating-house having paid the tax therefor shall not be required to pay a tax as a confectioner, anything in this act to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to strike out in line eleven hundred and fifty-two these words, "not including spirits, wines." An eating-house, as we understand it, includes the sale of oysters and fermented liquors, ale, beer, and other malt liquors. The words I have mentioned ought of course to be stricken out, and the section ought then to remain so that these eating-houses shall be allowed to sell, as they have always heretofore, ale, beer, and other malt liquors.

Mr. MORRILL. This is exactly according to the existing law.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read the next paragraph, as follows:

22. Confectioners shall pay ten dollars. Every person who sells at retail confectionery, sweetmeats, confits, or other confections, in any building, shall be regarded as a confectioner under this act. But wholesale and retail dealers, having paid the tax therefor, shall not be required to pay the tax as a confectioner, anything in this act to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. MORRILL moved to insert the word "special" before the word "tax."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next paragraphs, as follows:

23. Claim agents and agents for procuring patents shall pay ten dollars. Every person whose business it is to prosecute claims in any of the Executive Departments of the Federal Government, or procure patents, shall be deemed a claim or patent agent, as the case may be, under this act.

24. Patent-right dealers shall pay ten dollars. Every person whose business it is to sell, or offer for sale, patent rights, shall be regarded as a patent-right dealer under this act.

25. Real-estate agents shall pay ten dollars. Every person whose business it is to sell, or offer for sale, real estate for others, or to rent houses, stores, or other buildings or real estate, or to collect rent for others, shall be regarded as a real-estate agent under this act.

26. Conveyancers shall pay ten dollars. Every person, other than one having paid the tax as a lawyer or claim agent, whose business it is to draw deeds, bonds, mortgages, wills, writs, or other legal papers, or to examine titles to real estate, shall be regarded as a conveyancer under this act.

Mr. MORRILL moved, in line eleven hundred and eighty-one, before the word "tax" to insert the word "special."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next two paragraphs, as follows:

27. Intelligence office keepers shall pay ten dollars. Every person whose business it is to find or furnish places of employment for others, or to find or furnish servants upon application in writing or otherwise, receiving compensation therefor, shall be regarded as an intelligence office keeper under this act.

28. Insurance agents shall pay ten dollars. Any person who shall act as agent of any fire, marine, life, mutual, or other insurance company or companies, to negotiate or procure insurance for which he receives any commission or other compensation, shall be regarded as an insurance agent under this act: Provided, That if the annual receipts of any person as such agent shall not exceed $100, he shall pay five dollars only: And provided further, That no special tax shall be imposed upon any person for selling tickets or contracts of insurance against injury to persons while traveling by land or water.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I ask unanimous consent to go back in order to move an amendment.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOTCHKISS moved in line eleven hundred and seventy-eight after the word "others" in the paragraph relating to real-estate agents to insert these words, "except attorneys being licensed as such."

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. There are no licenses provided for in this bill. They are all special taxes.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I modify my amendment, then, so as to "say special tax" instead of "license."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LYNCH. I move to amend as follows:

Strike out in lines eleven hundred and ninety-two and eleven hundred and ninety-three the words "ten dollars" and insert these words: "whose annual receipts exceed $100 and do not exceed $500 shall pay five dollars; when over $500 and not exceeding $5,000, ten dollars; when over $5,000, fifteen dollars." Also, strike out lines eleven hundred and ninety-eight and eleven hundred and ninety-nine to and including the word "only" in line twelve hundred.

Mr. Chairman, the effect of this amendment will be to exempt insurance agents who receive less than $100 and to increase the tax from ten to fifteen dollars on all those who receive more than $1,000. There are very few who receive less than $100, while there are a great many whose annual receipts are large, running up, in some instances, to $200,000 per annum.

Mr. MORRILL. The gentleman will perceive that in levying this special tax it is a sort of protection to those who pay the tax against those who do not. Now, if the gentleman's amendment is adopted it will allow all his neighbors to go into the same kind of business without the payment of any tax provided their receipts do not exceed $100. I hope it will not be adopted. The amount to be gained by the other part of the gentleman's amendment is so small and the burden upon the parties to keep the account would be so great that I think it will hardly be worth while to adopt it.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out the word "to" in line eleven hundred and ninety-five and insert "shall."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next two paragraphs, as follows:

29. Foreign insurance agents shall pay fifty dollars. Every person who shall act as agent of any foreign fire, marine, life, mutual, or other insurance company or companies shall be regarded as a foreign insurance agent under this act.

30. Auctioneers whose annual sales do not exceed $10,000 shall pay ten dollars, and if exceeding $10,000 shall pay twenty dollars. Every person shall be deemed an auctioneer within the meaning of this act whose business it is to offer property for sale to the highest or best bidder: Provided, That the provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to judicial or executive officers making auction sales by virtue of any judgment or decree of any court, nor public sales made by or for executors or administrators.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out the word "for," in line twelve hundred and thirteen, and insert the words "at public;" so that it will read, "at public sale."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMES. I move to strike out the word "or," in line twelve hundred and eighteen, and to add to the paragraph the words "or guardians of any estate held by them as such;" so that it shall read:

Nor public sales made by or for executors, administrators, or guardians of any estate held by them as such.

Mr. MORRILL. I think that is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I suggest to the chairman of the committee the propriety of amending this paragraph by including in the exemption sales made by any mortgagee under foreclosure.

Mr. MORRILL. I think that ought not to be excepted. It is one of the most profitable sales we have.

Mr. DAVIS. I will then move to amend by adding to the end of the paragraph these words:

Nor by any mortgagee under mortgage foreclosure.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I move to amend by adding to the paragraph the words "and lawyers paying a tax as such."

Mr. MORRILL. I do not know that I understand the gentleman's amendment. I doubt if we ought make such an exception as will allow lawyers to act as auctioneers.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DAVES reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being bill of the House No. 513, to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof, and had come to no resolution thereon.

TAXES IN ALABAMA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication signed by R. M. Patton, Governor of Alabama, without the seal of the State, in regard to taxes; which was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed House bill No. 568, to repeal section twenty-three of chapter seventy-nine of the acts of the third session of the Thirty-Seventh Congress, with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

Also, that the Senate had passed a bill and joint resolution of the following titles, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House:

An act (S. No. 222) further to prevent smuggling, and for other purposes; and

A joint resolution (S. No. 90) to suspend temporarily the collection of the direct tax in the State of West Virginia.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 280) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department during the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1867, and for other purposes.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the House proceed to the business on the Speaker's table.

The motion was agreed to.

JOSEPH NOCK.

The first business was Senate joint resolution No. 71, referring the petitions and papers in the case of Joseph Nock to the Court of Claims; which was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

AMOSKEAG MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

The next business was Senate bill No. 225, for the relief of the Amoskeag Manufacturing Company; which was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

FIRST CONGREGATIONAL SOCIETY, WASHINGTON.

The next business was Senate bill No. 253, to incorporate the First Congregational Society of Washington; which was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

CAPTAIN JOHN H. CROWELL.

The next business was Senate bill No. 278, for the relief of Captain John H. Crowell, an assistant quartermaster of the United States Army; which was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

NOTARIES PUBLIC, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The next business was Senate bill No. 305, to amend an act entitled "An act concerning notaries public for the District of Columbia," approved April 8, 1864; which was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

COMMANDER CHARLES HUNTER.

The next business was Senate bill No. 307, authorizing the restoration of Commander Charles Hunter to the Navy; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

JONATHAN W. GORDON.

The next business was Senate bill No. 127, for the relief of Jonathan W. Gordon, late major in the eleventh regiment of infantry; which was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 318, to authorize the appointment of an additional Assistant Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I ask that that may be put upon its passage now.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] was to proceed to business upon the Speaker's table for reference only.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I suppose it can be considered now by unanimous consent.

Mr. MORRILL. Let the bill be passed over for the present and remain on the Speaker's table.

No objection was made.

PREVENTION OF SMUGGLING, ETC.

The next business upon the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 222, to further prevent smuggling, and for other purposes.

Mr. MORRILL. Let that be passed over for the present.

No objection was made.

DIRECT TAX IN WEST VIRGINIA.

The next business was Senate joint resolution No. 90, to suspend temporarily the collection of the direct tax within the State of West Virginia; which was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. ELDRIDGE moved to reconsider the various votes by which the bills and joint resolution had been taken from the Speaker's table and referred; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TRANSPORTATION AND COAL COMPANY.

Mr. INGERSOLL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to incorporate the Washington Transportation and Coal Company; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRIZE PROCEEDINGS, ETC.

Mr. DARLING, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate prize proceedings," &c., approved June 30, 1864; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT, VIRGINIA.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, moved to take from the Speaker's table Senate amendment to House bill No. 563, to regulate the time and fix the place for holding the circuit court of the United States in the district of Virginia, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

The amendment of the Senate was read. It is to strike out all after line seventeen on page 1 to the end of the bill.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I move that the House non-concur in the amendment of the Senate, and ask for a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

COLLECTION OF DUTIES ON IMPORTS.

Mr. BOUTWELL, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back House bill No. 141, to amend an act entitled "An act further to provide for the collection of duties on imports;" which was ordered to be printed and recommitted.

TAX ON CIRCULATION OF STATE BANKS.

Mr. LYNCH. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution for consideration at this time:

Resolved, That the Committee on Banking and Currency be directed to inquire into the expediency of so amending the act of March 3, 1865, imposing a tax of ten per cent. upon all State circulation after July 1, 1866, as to exempt from said tax all national banks which have applied for and have not received the amount of national bills to which they are entitled under section twenty-one of the national currency act: Provided, That the total amount of the circulation of said banks does not exceed the amount of national circulation to which they are entitled under said section.

Mr. ANCONA. I object.

PROTECTION OF SOLDIERS' GRAVES.

Mr. BANKS, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire and report what measures may be necessary for the further protection of the graves of soldiers of the United States who have been buried within the limits of the insurgent States.

WASHINGTON LAND AND BUILDING COMPANY.

Mr. MERCUR, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to incorporate the Washington Land and Building Company; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

And then, on motion of Mr. THAYER, (at twenty minutes of five o'clock p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule and referred to the appropriate committees:

By the SPEAKER: The petition of Governor Morton, and the other trustees of the Indiana Agricultural College, asking an amendment to the law granting lands to agricultural colleges.

By Mr. CONKLING: The petition of citizens of Oneida county, New York, asking a readjustment of the tariff on flax.

By Mr. DAVIS: The petition of Jedediah Barber, J. D. Sliter, Thomas D. Challan, and 208 others, citizens of Cortland county, New York, praying for increased protection to the growers of American wool.

Also, the like petition of John L. Booran, J. M. Clark, and 82 others, citizens of said county.

Also, the memorial of Board of Trade of Portland.

By Mr. MOORHEAD: The petition of Lyon Short & Co., and others, citizens of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of an act of Congress authorizing the Cleveland and Mahoning Railroad Company to extend their road to the city of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania.

By Mr. MYERS: The petition of William Mann, of the city of Philadelphia, that the Commissioner of Patents be granted authority to hear his application for an extension of his patent for "improvement in copying paper" as though the ninety days' notice required by law had been given.

By Mr. FAINE: The petition of W. M. Blair and A. J. Frame, president and cashier of the Waukesha National Bank, of Waukesha, Wisconsin, respecting the taxation of national banks by State and municipal authorities.

Also, the petition of G. Buckley, cashier of First National Bank of Elkhorn, Wisconsin, on the same subject.

Also, the petition of O. Bell and W. A. Ray, president and cashier of the National Bank of Delavan, Wisconsin, on same subject.

Also, the petition of S. Marsh and C. M. Blackman, president and cashier of the First National Bank of Whitewater, Wisconsin, on same subject.

By Mr. WRIGHT: The petition of John L. Success for relief.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, May 17, 1866.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. H. GRAY. The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from J. H. Screment, accompanied by an address to the President and Congress of the United States by the Swiss committee in favor of emancipated slaves, expressing their gratification at the abolition of slavery in the United States, and their earnest wishes for the prosperity of the American people; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. YATES presented the petition of Mrs. Nancy A. Stokes, of Williams county, Illinois, praying for a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a memorial of citizens of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, praying the enactment of a law authorizing the Cleveland and Mahoning Railroad Company to extend its route from the west line of the State of Pennsylvania to the city of Pittsburg; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Harriet B. Crocker, of Bath, Maine, praying for a pension, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 326) granting a pension to Mrs. Harriet B. Crocker. The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Mrs. Katharine F. Winslow, praying for a pension, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 237) granting a pension to Mrs. Katharine F. Winslow. The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Mrs. Abigail Ryan, praying for a pension, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 328) for the relief of Mrs. Abigail Ryan. The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. POMEROY, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 391) to create the office of surveyor general in Idaho Territory, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a joint resolution (S. R. No. 85) explanatory of and in addition to the act of May 5, 1864, entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of certain railroads in Wisconsin," reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred a memorial of the Legislature of Wisconsin, asking the assent of Congress to the route of the land-grant railroad from Portage to Bayfield, and thence to Superior; a resolution of the Legislature of Wisconsin in favor of a change of the route of the land-grant road from Portage to Superior; and also a resolution of the Legislature of Wisconsin relating to the construction of the Portage and Superior railroad, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill (S. No. 285) granting lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Kansas and Neosho Valley railroad and its extension to Red river, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was recommitted a bill (S. No. 224) to aid in the construction of a southern branch of the Union Pacific railway and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. KIRKWOOD, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred a bill (S. No. 309) to authorize Samuel Stevens, a Stockbridge Indian, to enter and purchase a certain tract of land in the Stockbridge reservation, Wisconsin, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 434) for the relief of Isabella Strubing, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Mrs. Margaret Kaetzel, praying for a pension, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 329) for the relief of Mrs. Margaret Kaetzel. The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. WADE, from the Committee on Territories, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 178) amendatory of the organic act of Washington Territory, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 202) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a temporary government for the Territory of Montana," approved May 26, 1864, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a joint resolution (H. R. No. 32) to facilitate communication with certain Territories, reported it without amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 555) for the relief of Charles Brewer & Co., reported it without amendment.

• Mr. NORTON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of James B. Johnson, praying for compensation for property destroyed on the 14th of March, 1864, by a band of guerrillas under the command of one Anderson, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. POLAND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred a petition of judges of the United States courts and citizens of the District of Columbia, praying that provision may be made for the payment of counsel fees for defending persons who are not able to employ counsel, reported that no legislation is needed on the subject, and asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred a bill (S. No. 320) to amend an act entitled "An act for a grant of lands to the State of Kansas, in alternate sections, to aid in the construction of certain railroads and telegraphs in said State," approved March 8, 1863, reported it without amendment.

BRIDGE ON LAKE CHAMPLAIN.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 316) to establish a post route from West Alburg, Vermont, to Champlain, in the State of New York, and for other purposes, have instructed me to report it back with an amendment and recommend its passage, and I am also authorized to ask for the present consideration of the bill.

By unanimous consent the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to declare the railroad bridge across Lake Champlain at Rouse's Point, connecting the Ogdensburg and Lake Champlain railroad, in the State of New York, with the Vermont and Canada railroad, in the State of Vermont, to be a lawful structure and a postal route. It further authorizes the Ogdensburg and Lake Champlain Railroad Company, their successors or assigns, and the Vermont and Canada Railroad Company, their successors or assigns, to keep up, maintain, and use the bridge for the transportation of the mails, and for the benefit of the general commerce between those two States, and the transportation of persons and property; and also authorizes them, in place of the float now in use forming part of the bridge, to construct and maintain two suitable draws, one at least sixty and one at least ninety feet in width, which shall be opened whenever required for the passage of vessels, except during and for fifteen minutes prior to the passage of mail trains.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Commerce was to add to the bill the following clause:

And which draws shall be so constructed and managed as at all times to afford reasonable and proper facilities for the passage of vessels: Provided, This act shall be subject to amendment or repeal at the pleasure of Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON. I ask the Senator from Minnesota if the bill is now in the shape in which the bill was that was passed the other day for constructing a bridge at Quincy.

Mr. HARRIS. This is a bill in relation to a bridge on Lake Champlain.

Mr. HENDERSON. I beg pardon; I thought it was for the Mississippi river.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended; the amendment was concurred in.

NITRO-GLYCERINE.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 313) to regulate the transportation of nitro-glycerine or glynnoin oil, to report it back with amendments, and with a recommendation that it pass; and, on account of its importance to passengers traveling to the Pacific coast, I am instructed to ask for its present consideration.

Mr. GRIMES. Oh, no; let us have it printed.

Mr. CONNESS. There is no necessity for printing it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will lie over under the rule.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I would rather that it should lie over. I want the unfinished business of yesterday to come up.

Mr. CONNESS. Not in the morning hour, I hope.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I refer to the unfinished business of the morning hour. It was a resolution offered in the morning hour, and is the business of the morning hour. I do not wish to interfere with the presentation of memorials and reports; but I understand that the resolution to which I refer is the unfinished business of the morning hour. It was being discussed when the morning hour expired yesterday.

Mr. CONNESS. I do not wish to persist in asking for the immediate consideration of the bill; but it appears to me that it is one of such transcendent importance that it ought to be passed at once.

Mr. GRIMES. It ought to be printed first.

Mr. CONNESS. There is nothing in it that the whole Senate cannot understand on hearing it read. It will excite no debate, I apprehend, and can be finished in five or ten minutes. It will be remembered that the memorial presented to this body, calling for the passage of such a bill as this, asked for its passage under a suspension of the rules. The Treasury Department preferred that the preparation of this bill should be made by the Solicitor of that Department; and we have waited for nearly three weeks for it. This article has been transported on our passenger vessels. Only recently twenty-five pounds of it were carried out on a Pacific steamer, in the state-room of a passenger, enough to blow that ship to atoms, with its thousand lives.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will not object to it if it will not occasion any debate.

Mr. CONNESS. It will not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The objection being withdrawn, the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and will be read.

The Secretary read the bill. It provides that hereafter it shall not be lawful to transport, carry, or convey the substance or article known or designated as nitro-glycerine or glynnoin oil, upon or in any ship, steamship, steamboat, vessel, car, wagon, or other vehicle used or employed in transporting passengers by land or water, between a place or places in any foreign country, and a place or places within the limits of any State, Territory, or district of the United States, or between a place in one State, Territory, or district of the United States and a place in any other State, Territory, or district thereof; and any person, company, or corporation who shall knowingly violate these provisions is to be liable to a fine of not less than $5,000 at the discretion of the court, to be recovered by an action of debt, one half to the use of the informer.

In case the death of any person shall be caused, directly or indirectly, by the explosion of a quantity of this substance or article while it is being placed upon or in any ship, steamship, steamboat, vessel, car, wagon, or other vehicle, to be transported, carried, or conveyed therein or thereon in violation of this act, or while it is being so transported, carried, or conveyed, or while it is being removed from such ship, steamship, steamboat, vessel, car, wagon, or other vehicle, every person who knowingly placed, or aided, or permitted the placing of the substance upon or in such ship, steamship, steamboat, vessel, car, wagon, or other vehicle to be so transported, carried, or conveyed, is to be deemed guilty of murder in the first degree, and on conviction is to suffer death by hanging.

It is not to be lawful to ship, send, or forward any quantity of this substance or article, or to transport, carry, or convey it by ship, steamship, steamboat, vessel, car, wagon, or other vehicle of any description upon land or water between a place in a foreign country and a place within the United States, or between a place in one State, Territory, or district of the United States, and a place in any other State, Territory, or district thereof, unless it shall be securely inclosed, deposited, or packed in a metallic vessel, separated from all other substances, and the outside of the package containing it to be marked, painted, or labeled, in a conspicuous manner with the words, "Nitro-glycerine, dangerous." Any person, company, or corporation who shall knowingly violate the provisions of this section is to be liable to a fine of $3,000, at the discretion of the court, to be recovered by an action of debt, one half to the use of the informer.

The district court of the United States within the district in which any offense against the act shall be committed, or if committed in or upon any ship, boat, vessel, or vehicle beyond the territorial limits of any district, then within the district from which it departed, or in which it shall first arrive, is to have jurisdiction to try and punish the offenders by fine or death, as the case may be, under the provisions of this act.

The act is not to be so construed as to prevent any State, Territory, district, city, or town within the United States regulating or prohibiting the traffic in or transportation of this substance between persons or places lying or being within their respective limits, or from prohibiting its introduction into such limits for sale, use, or consumption therein.

The first amendment of the Committee on Commerce was in section one, line five, after the word "convey" to insert the words "ship, deliver on board, or cause to be delivered on board;" so that it will read:

That hereafter it shall not be lawful to transport, carry, or convey ship, deliver on board, or cause to be delivered on board the substance or article known or designated as nitro-glycerine, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section one, line twenty-three, to strike out the words "to be recovered by an action of debt;" so that the clause will read:

And any person, company, or corporation who shall knowingly violate the provisions of this section shall be liable to a fine of not less than $5,000, at the discretion of the court, one half to the use of the informer.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section two, line twenty, to strike out the words "murder in the first degree" and to insert "manslaughter."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section two, line twenty-two, after the word "suffer" to strike out the words "death by hanging" and to insert "imprisonment for a period not less than ten years."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines twenty-five and twenty-six of section three, to strike out the words "to be recovered by an action of debt."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines eleven and twelve of section four, to strike out the words "by fine or death as the case may be."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to inquire how the bill stands now with reference to punishment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The bill now makes the crime of shipping this article on board of passenger vessels, or the transportation of it with knowledge, manslaughter where death happens in consequence of the act, and punishes the crime of manslaughter by imprisonment for ten years or upward. The shipping on board a passenger vessel where death or any other accident does not occur is made merely a misdemeanor, punishable by fine; and the rest of the bill requires that when it is shipped by freighting vessels or cars it shall be securely packed and marked.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. GRIMES asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 95) amendatory of a resolution regulating the investment of the naval pension fund, approved July 1, 1864; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

RECONSTRUCTION.

Mr. WADE submitted an amendment which he intends to offer to the joint resolution (H. R. No. 127) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States when it comes up for consideration.

The amendment was received, and ordered to be printed.

APPROVAL OF BILLS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. COOPER, his Secretary, announced that the President of the United States had approved and signed, on the 16th instant, the following act and joint resolution:

An act (S. No. 310) to change the place of holding the courts of the United States for the northern district of Mississippi; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 88) authorizing the Secretary of War to grant the use of certain lumber for the fair for the Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphan Home.

FRESH-WATER BASIN FOR IRON-CLADS.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I now move to take up the joint resolution (S. R. No. 92) authorizing the appointment of examiners to examine a site for a fresh-water basin for iron-clad vessels of the United States Navy.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. FOSTER, to insert after "Maine" the words "and also New London, Connecticut."

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope that will not be inserted.

The amendment was rejected.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to the examination proposed. I only want to enter my disclaimer now against the inference that was drawn from the report on the iron-clads. We appointed a commission to examine into the cost of the iron-clads, and that seemed to be the principal argument for passing the bill for the relief of those who built the iron-clads. I hope the honorable Senator from Maine, when this report comes in, will not consider that because we without objection vote for a commission to examine into the propriety of this work we are thereby foreclosed from any examination into the propriety of that report.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Of course not. It has no sort of connection with it; not the slightest in the world.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time and passed.

BENJAMIN HOLLIDAY.

Mr. NESMITH. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution No. 103.

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution (H. R. No. 103) to refer the petition of Benjamin Holliday to the Court of Claims was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It provides that so much of the claim of Benjamin Holliday as relates to damages for change of route by military orders and property taken by the military authorities and appropriated to the use of the Government be referred to the Court of Claims for adjustment.

The Committee on Claims reported the joint resolution with an amendment, which was in line four, to strike out the words "damages for change of route by military orders and;" so that the joint resolution will read:

That so much of the claim of Benjamin Holliday as relates to property taken by the military authorities and appropriated to the use of the Government be referred to the Court of Claims for adjustment.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not know anything about this particular case; but I am entirely opposed to referring by joint resolution, which amounts to a law, special cases in this way to the Court of Claims. We have a general law giving that court jurisdiction of a certain class of cases. If the law is not broad enough, enlarge it; but this way of coming in and giving the court jurisdiction of a particular case, some favorite case, I do not think is right, unless it is done under some very peculiar circumstances. There may be some circumstances in this case which justify that species of legislation; but it is certainly a very bad way to be conferring upon a court of general jurisdiction of a particular class of cases like this special jurisdiction of some special case.

Mr. POMEROY. The Senator must be aware that the Committee on Claims who pass on this class of claims have the opportunity of hearing testimony only on one side; the Court of Claims have an opportunity to examine witnesses on both sides, and I think it is safer for the Government to let claims be tried where witnesses can be examined on both sides.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I entirely concur with the Senator from Kansas. I think so, too. I am not objecting to the court, but it is to giving the jurisdiction of a particular case in this way; and unless it is an exceptional case I do not think it ought to be done.

Mr. CLARK. This is a joint resolution from the House of Representatives. As it came to the Senate it was referred to the Committee on Claims and read in this way: "That so much of the claim of Benjamin Holliday as relates to damages for change of route by military orders and property taken by the military authorities and appropriated to the use of the Government be referred to the Court of Claims for adjustment." The Committee on Claims came to the conclusion to recommend to the Senate to strike out that part of the claim which was for damages for change of route, and to let the other part of the claim for property alleged to be taken by military orders go to the Court of Claims, and no more; and we think that is a better tribunal than the Committee on Claims and the Senate.

Mr. POMEROY. I do not wish to contest the amendment, but I have this to say: Benjamin Holliday, who had the overland contract, made his stations every fifteen miles on a given route, and built houses. The military authorities told him to abandon all those and to go on to another line, because they could protect him from the Indians on that other line. It is a question of equity whether he ought not to have some compensation for the abandoned houses and stations that he had built at great expense.

Mr. CLARK. I ought to say that the Committee on Claims examined the claim so far as to see precisely what it was. I doubt very much whether he can set up any military order in the case; but we concluded to let the whole matter go for adjudication to the Court of Claims.

Mr. POMEROY. If he cannot set up any military order, the resolution was a very harmless thing as it was before.

Mr. CLARK. I think the amendment should be agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the joint resolution to be read a third time. It was read the third time and passed.

MARYSVILLE AND PORTLAND RAILROAD.

Mr. STEWART. I move to take up Senate bill No. 123.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 123) granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Central Pacific railroad, in California, to Portland, on the navigable waters of the Columbia river, in Oregon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Committee on Public Lands reported a substitute in lieu of the original bill, striking out all after the enacting clause. The substitute only will be read unless the reading of the original bill shall be asked for.

The Secretary read the words proposed to be inserted, as follows:

That the California and Oregon Railroad Company, organized under an act of the State of California, to protect certain parties in and to a railroad survey, to connect Portland, in Oregon, with Marysville, in California, approved April 6, 1863, and such company organized under the laws of Oregon as the Legislature of said State shall hereafter designate, be, and they are hereby, authorized and empowered to lay out, locate, construct, finish, and maintain a railroad and telegraph line between the city of Portland, in Oregon, and the Central Pacific railroad, in California, in the manner following, to wit: the said California and Oregon Railroad Company shall construct that part of the said railroad and telegraph within the State of California, beginning at some point (to be selected by said company) on the Central Pacific railroad in the Sacramento valley, in the State of California, and running thence northerly, through the Sacramento and Shasta valleys, to the northern boundary of the State of California; and the said Oregon company shall construct that part of the said railroad and telegraph line within the State of Oregon, beginning at the city of Portland, in Oregon, and running thence southerly through the Willamette, Umpqua, and Rogue River valleys to the southern boundary of Oregon, where the same shall connect with the part aforesaid to be made by the first-named company: Provided, That the company completing its respective part of the said railroad and telegraph from either of the termini herein named to the line between California and Oregon before the other company shall have likewise arrived at the same line, shall have the right, and the said company is hereby authorized, to continue in constructing the same beyond the line aforesaid, with the consent of the State in which the unfinished part may lie, upon the terms mentioned in this act, until the said parts shall meet and connect, and the whole line of said railroad and telegraph shall be completed, including all necessary grounds for stations, buildings, workshops, depots, machine-shops, switches, side tracks, turn-tables, water stations, or any other structures required in the construction and operating of said road.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That there be, and hereby is, granted to the said companies, their successors and assigns, for the purpose of aiding in the construction of said railroad and telegraph line, and to secure the safe and speedy transportation of the mails, troops, munitions of war, and public stores over the line of said railroad, every alternate section of public land designated by odd numbers, to the amount of ten sections per mile on each side of said railroad, and contiguous hereto; and when any said sections or parts of sections shall be found to have been granted, sold, reserved, occupied by homestead settlers, preempted, or otherwise disposed of, other lands, designated as aforesaid, shall be selected by said companies in lieu thereof, within twenty miles of said road, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior; and as soon as the said companies, or either of them, shall file in the office of the Secretary of the Interior a map of the survey of said railroad, or any portion thereof, not less than sixty continuous miles from either terminus, the Secretary of the Interior shall withdraw from sale public lands herein granted on each side of said railroad and not more than twenty miles therefrom: Provided, That forty-two hundred miles of said road most mountainous and difficult of construction, namely, one hundred miles northwardly from the line between California and Oregon, and one hundred miles southwardly from the said line, the lands to be granted shall be double the amount per mile hereinbefore provided, designated as hereinbefore provided, to be selected as the Secretary of the Interior may direct: Provided further, That this grant shall not defeat or impair any preemption, homestead, swamp land, or other lawful claim existing at the time of the final location of the line of said railroad; and all reservations by the Government are hereby excepted from the provisions of this act. The lands herein granted shall be applied to the building of said road within the States, respectively, wherein they are situated.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the right of way through the public lands be, and the same is hereby, granted to said companies for the construction of said railroad and telegraph line, and the right, power, and authority are hereby given to said companies to take from the public lands adjacent to the line of said road, earth, stone, timber, water, and other materials for the construction thereof. Said right of way is granted to said railroad to the extent of one hundred feet in width on each side of said railroad where it may pass over the public lands, including all necessary grounds for stations, buildings, workshops, depots, machine-shops, switches, side tracks, turn-tables, water stations, or any other structures required in the construction and operating of said road.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That whenever the said companies, or either of them, shall have twenty or more consecutive miles of any portion of said railroad and telegraph line ready for the service contemplated by this act, the President of the United States shall appoint three commissioners to examine the same, and if it shall appear that twenty consecutive miles of railroad and telegraph shall have been completed and equipped in all respects as required by this act, the said commissioners shall so report under oath to the President of the United States, and thereupon patents shall issue to said companies, or either of them, as the case may be, for the lands hereinbefore granted, to the extent of and continuous with the completed section of said railroad and telegraph line as aforesaid; and from time to time, whenever twenty or more consecutive miles of the said road and telegraph shall be completed and equipped as aforesaid, patents shall in like manner issue upon the report of the said commissioners, and so on until the entire railroad and telegraph authorized by this act shall have been constructed, and the patents of the lands herein granted shall have been issued.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the grants aforesaid be made upon the condition that said companies shall keep said railroad and telegraph in repair and use, and shall at all times transport the mails, troops, munitions of war, supplies, and public stores upon said railroad, and transmit dispatches by said telegraph line for the Government of the United States, when required so to do by any Department thereof, and that the Government shall at all times have the preference in the use of said railroad and telegraph at fair and reasonable rates of compensation, not to exceed the rates paid by private parties for the same kind of service.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That the said companies shall file their assent to this act in the Department of the Interior within one year after the passage hereof, and shall complete said railroad and telegraph before the 1st day of July, 1875; and the said railroad shall be of the same gauge as the Central Pacific railroad of California, and be connected therewith.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That the said companies named in this act are hereby required to operate and use the portions or parts of said railroad and telegraph mentioned in section one of this act for all purposes of transportation, travel, and communication, so far as the Government and public are concerned, as one connected and continuous line; and in such operation and use to afford and secure to each other equal advantages and facilities as to rates, time, and transportation, without any discrimination whatever, on pain of forfeiting the full amount of damage sustained on account of such discrimination, to be sued for and recovered in any court of the United States, or of any State of competent jurisdiction.

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That in case the said companies shall fail to comply with the terms and conditions of this act, by not completing said road and telegraph within the time required, or by not keeping the same in repair and fit for use, but shall permit the same for an unreasonable time to remain unfinished, or out of repair and unfit for use, Congress may pass an act to insure the speedy completion of said road and telegraph, or put the same in repair and use, and may direct the income of said road and telegraph to be thereafter devoted to the use of the United States to repay all such expenditures caused by the default and neglect of said companies or company, as the case may be.

Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That the said California and Oregon Railroad Company and the said Oregon Company shall be governed by the provisions of the general railroad and telegraph laws of their respective States, as to the construction and management of the said railroad and telegraph line hereinbefore authorized, in all matters not provided for in this act. Wherever the word "company" or "companies" is used in this act it shall be construed to embrace the words "their associates, successors, and assigns," the same as if the words had been inserted or thereto annexed.

Sec. 10. And be it further enacted, That all mineral lands shall be excepted from the operation of this act; but where the same shall contain timber, the timber thereon is hereby granted to said company: Provided, That the term mineral lands shall not include lands containing coal and iron.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move to amend the first section by striking out all after the word "completed," in the thirty-seventh line, to the end of the section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. CLARK in the chair.) The Chair will inquire whether that is an amendment to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not in order to amend that amendment, it having been agreed to in committee; but when the bill comes into the Senate it can be done.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, which is now open to amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move to strike out all after the word "completed" in the thirty-seventh line of the first section to the end of the section, as the words are repeated in another section of the bill.

The Secretary read the words proposed to be stricken out, as follows:

Including all necessary grounds for stations, buildings, workshops, depots, machine-shops, switches, side tracks, turn-tables, water stations, or any other structures required in the construction and operating of said road.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move to amend the second section of the amendment, in line twelve, by striking out the words "designated as aforesaid."

Mr. POMEROY. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that by striking out these words, "designated as aforesaid," it will give these companies the even sections outside of the ten-mile limit. The committee have never agreed to that. We give the odd sections and reserve the even sections; but if you strike out the words "designated as aforesaid" it allows them to take the even sections out of the first ten-mile limit to make up the deficiency.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is that the purpose?

Mr. POMEROY. That is the purpose of this amendment. The committee are opposed to it.

Mr. JOHNSON. It never has been done.

Mr. POMEROY. We have never reported a bill to allow them to take both odd and even sections. There is a great pressure upon the committee to induce them to do so; all these railroad companies desire it; but we have refused, up to this time, to grant anything of that kind. In the history of this legislation there is one such instance on record, I believe, where the roads crossed each other, and one company got the even sections and the other the odd; but I think it is against the manner in which we have disposed of the public lands to grant anything of this kind. We reserve the even sections, because it is supposed they will sell for twice as much as the odd sections that are given away. That is the principle upon which we report these bills. I admit that in the mountain regions of Oregon, perhaps, they will never get enough agricultural land to make a road; but that is the fault of the country; it is not the fault of the committee. We cannot guaranty the land all to be good. We reported this bill precisely in harmony with our system, in the way we have reported them all. If the Senate now agree to this amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon, it will be considered as an instruction to the Committee on Public Lands to report these bills hereafter with a provision giving both the even and odd sections.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, it becomes the duty of the Chair to call up the special order, which is the unfinished business of yesterday.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I hope the Senator from Maine will allow us to get through with this bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I would rather not give way. I declined yesterday finishing a resolution in which I was particularly interested for the reason that I desired to go on with the appropriation bill when the hour arrived.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There is to be no other amendment proposed to this bill, and I am willing the Senate should vote at once upon this amendment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If it creates no debate I will not object.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There will be no debate. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The special order will be laid aside informally if there be no objection on the part of any member of the Senate. The Chair hears no objection. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed. Its title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Central Pacific railroad, in California, to Portland, in Oregon."

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The special order, being the bill (H. R. No. 261) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th June, 1867, and for other purposes, is now before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. SUMNER,] to insert at the end of section two the following words:

And the compensation of William Hunter, Esq., chief clerk of the Department of State, shall be at the rate of $3,500 a year; and a sufficient sum is hereby appropriated for this purpose out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It does not state where the compensation is to begin.

Mr. SUMNER. I presume with the passage of this bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. You should say "from and after the 30th day of June next."

Mr. SUMNER. I should like to have it embrace the last year.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That language will not embrace it, and we never go back in such cases.

Mr. SUMNER. Could we not say "from the 1st of January?"

Mr. FESSENDEN. Oh, no; we should not do that; it would make a bad precedent.

Mr. SUMNER. Then I will insert the words "from and after the 30th of June next."

Mr. FESSENDEN. I wish the Senator would put his amendment in the shape of a new section. It now comes directly after section two.

Mr. SUMNER. I propose that it shall come there.

Mr. FESSENDEN. But you make it come in as a part of section two. It should be a new section.

Mr. SUMNER. I desire to have it as a new section. The Clerk can change it in that respect.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Let it be read again as it now stands.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

And be it further enacted, That from and after the 30th day of June, 1866, the compensation of William Hunter, Esq., chief clerk of the Department of State, shall be at the rate of $3,500 a year, and a sufficient sum is hereby appropriated for this purpose out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will state to the Senator that in the legislative and executive appropriation bill there is an appropriation to pay his present salary, which is $2,200, and all that it is necessary for the Senator to insert in this amendment is "an amount necessary to pay the additional salary herein provided for is hereby appropriated," &c. Otherwise you make two appropriations, one in the legislative and executive bill, and one here, for the same purpose.

Mr. GRIMES. It ought not to be here at all.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I know that, but I want to perfect it as well as I can. I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts to make his amendment read, "and the amount necessary to pay the increased compensation herein provided for is hereby appropriated," &c.

Mr. SUMNER. Let it be so changed. When I drew it, I thought that any subsequent bill might be altered with reference to this.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will again be reported as modified.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

And be it further enacted, That from and after the 30th of June, 1866, the compensation of William Hunter, Esq., chief clerk of the Department of State, shall be at the rate of $3,500 per annum; and the amount necessary to pay the increased compensation herein provided for is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Senator from Massachusetts reported from the committee a proposition, not the one that is now before the Senate. I do not understand that this particular proposition comes before the body with the indorsement of the committee, but I understand that it is his own proposition.

Mr. SUMNER. I beg the Senator's pardon; he will allow me to interpose an explanation. In the committee the subject was discussed in the alternative, and I was authorized, in my discretion, to present to the Senate a proposition in the alternative, as at the moment should seem best. The committee first inclined in favor of the proposition which is now under consideration, but on a second thought it seemed that it might be better to include all the employés of the Department of State, and I was instructed to act accordingly. I presented, therefore, it will be remembered, yesterday, a general proposition, applicable to all the clerks in the employment of the Department of State. That seemed to find little favor; Senators were against it; and I then withdrew it, and substituted the proposition now before the Senate; and on that occasion I assigned some reasons in favor of the proposition which seemed to meet a very generous response from all sides. There seemed to be a general opinion that we ought to do something for this very faithful and eminent public servant.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The proceedings yesterday misled me. I knew that the Senator had stated to the Senate that he was authorized by his committee to propose the amendment which he did propose, and then when he perceived that that did not meet with the favor of the body I understood him to withdraw it of his own motion and propose the amendment now before us. It is a very disagreeable thing to oppose any proposition of this sort, but I cannot see the propriety of selecting one chief clerk of a Department and giving him a compensation so much above the compensation given to other chief clerks. If $3,500 is the proper sum to give a chief clerk in a Department as salary, I am in favor of it, but if it is not, I am at a loss to know how we shall estimate the value of the services of an eminent man. Are we going to pay particular officers because they are so much better than other officers, or are we going to have a uniform standard of compensation? If Mr. Hunter goes out of his office, his successor then is to have another compensation than that now given to him, I presume. We pay the man, and do not affix the salary to the office. It seems to me that is not right. If his services are very eminent and you feel it proper to do so, pay a sum in gross for them; but do not establish that which will be a precedent in other cases.

As I said at the last session, I am very earnestly in favor of giving an increased compensation to the clerks in the different Departments. I think they are very ill-paid. My knowledge, having been at one time connected with one of the bureaus, justifies me in saying that the compensation given to the clerks of the Departments is not adequate, in view of the talent which is to be found in the Departments, and in view of the expense of supporting families in this city; but I think it is a very unfortunate mode of arriving at justice to take out a particular individual and give him an extraordinary compensation, and say then that all the rest of the starving families of those employed in the Departments shall go without pay. This is to be an argument against doing justice to the other clerks. I do not think we ought to do it. I think Congress ought to come squarely up and meet the responsibility of the case, and give to the clerical force of the different Departments a proper compensation. I shall not vote for this amendment, for five reasons I have given.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It seems to me the form of this amendment is objectionable. It proposes to pay a person by name a particular salary, not to the officer. Is that usual? I would inquire. So far as my recollection of the statutes extends, the salary is affixed to the office, not to the person. The judge of a court, the head of a Department, the head of a bureau, has so much salary; but here is a provision to give a person by name so much salary. I should like to inquire if that is not unprecedented.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Entirely so.

Mr. SUMNER. I believe it is unprecedented, and the fact that it is unprecedented is a reason for it on the present occasion. The case of Mr. Hunter was presented last evening as exceptional. He is exceptional in the length of his service, in the character of the labor that he has performed, and in the trust which he has enjoyed. Mr. Hunter is exceptional in all these respects; and in drawing the proposition now before the Senate, I thought it better to treat the case as exceptional, so that it should not in any respect be a precedent.

That brings me to the position of the Senator from Indiana. He thinks we ought to embrace all the clerks in the Departments at once.

Mr. FESSENDEN. All the chief clerks, as I understood him.

Mr. SUMNER. I understood that he went even further, and meant all the clerks and employés in the Departments; he thought they were underpaid. I am sure that those in the State Department, where I am most familiar, are underpaid. I think we ought to do something for them: the committee with which I am associated think we ought to do something for them; and it was on that account that yesterday I brought forward the proposition which, yielding to remonstrances from Senators about me, I finally withdrew. I say this to the Senator from Indiana that he may see that I go along with him in that desire. I yielded reluctantly to the expression of opinion about me, and withdrew the proposition. What next? I became satisfied that there was at least one member in that body in the service of the Department of State, whose position, as I have said already, was absolutely exceptional; that if you were disposed to neglect others, you ought not to neglect him; that he had a claim—I may call it even by that very strong term—upon his country, after thirty years of service, for a compensation that should enable him to enjoy, not luxury, but a certain degree of comfort as years begin to creep upon him. When I expressed that opinion, I found there was a general accord about me. Senator after Senator rose to bear his testimony to the extraordinary merits of Mr. Hunter; and the only question at that time—I think the Senator from Indiana was not in his seat—was interposed by the Senator from Maine as to the propriety of making this motion on the bill now before the Senate. I think that I answered satisfactorily that objection.

Then the question was left open simply on the merits of this individual case. Has not Mr. Hunter rendered services to this Government which at his period of life make it proper for us to individualize him by name for the increased compensation which is now proposed? In individualizing him by name, you make no precedent except where you can show similar services. It is not a precedent for raising the salary of any other chief clerk, nor raising any other salary unless where you can exhibit a long series of services under peculiar circumstances such as we can exhibit in the case of this gentleman. I hope, therefore, that the proposition will not be opposed, and I hope that the Senator from Indiana will withdraw his opposition and let it pass unanimously. Let us make this offering to a good and faithful public servant who has served all the Administrations from John Quincy Adams down to this day, and I believe has enjoyed the confidence of all.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, the Committee on Foreign Relations, as has been stated by the honorable chairman, were unanimous in thinking that the compensation of all the clerks in the Department of State should be raised. They therefore authorized him, as he has said, to propose an amendment increasing them twenty per cent. That was offered in good faith, and of course supported in good faith by all the members of the committee; but we have found that it is impossible to have it done. The Senate entertain a different opinion; and the committee are not only now aware that in their judgment at least an additional compensation should be given to Mr. Hunter, but that the Senate almost universally concur in that opinion. I submit, therefore, to my friend from Indiana whether it is actually just, because he is unable to compensate all the clerks of the Department, to refuse to compensate one as to whose services we all concur and in whose increased compensation we all unite.

I agree with him that they are very badly paid, and I have often been surprised at their being able to live at all with the salaries they receive, not merely in the Department of State but the clerks in the Departments generally. I think it very bad policy to keep them in the service of the country at a rate of compensation evidently not adequate to their support. It appears to me to present temptations that they may be unable to resist. I have no reason to suppose that they have not been able to resist them; but I think it is bad policy to have in the employ of the Government, particularly in the Treasury Department, officers of this description who have very much to do with the actual administration of the finances of the country, upon salaries which are certainly inadequate to support even any one of them who may be without a family; and how they live as some of them do, with families consisting of a wife and several children, how they even manage to feed them, much less to educate them, has always been a mystery to me. I would therefore unite most cordially with the honorable member from Indiana in having them all increased; but that we are not able to accomplish now. I hope he will permit us at least, and those who think with him that the chief clerk of this particular Department is not paid enough looking to his long and faithful service, to adopt this amendment which gives him a rate of compensation by no means exaggerated.

Mr. GRIMES. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GRIMES. I desire to say that I am perfectly content to pay Mr. Hunter $3,500, and if the Senator from Massachusetts will put his proposition in such a shape that I can consistently do so, I will vote for it with great pleasure. We all know the services Mr. Hunter has rendered to the country in that Department. I believe that it would be well to have a second Assistant Secretary of State there; and if the Senator from Massachusetts will put his amendment in that shape I will vote for it most cheerfully; but this idea of singling out Mr. Hunter as the only clerk in all the Departments of the Government who is to receive an additional compensation is invidious, unkind to the rest of the clerks, and will be attended with very bad consequences. I think, in the future. I can see very well how we are going to be annoyed, when other appropriation bills come up, with clerks, friends of ours, who will come here and be constantly importuning to have themselves named, and then we shall have a personal discussion upon the merits and qualifications of each one of those clerks whose name may be suggested by a member from his State or by a member of the Senate who may be interested in him.

Mr. SUMNER. There is an easy answer to my friend from Iowa, and if I can have his attention I think he will be satisfied, though he is not very easily satisfied where he has made up his mind the other way. I am told that not very long ago a proposition was made to Mr. Hunter that he should become what the Senator from Iowa proposes now, Assistant Secretary of State. He did not enter into the idea; it was not agreeable to him; and for this reason: he saw that the office of Assistant Secretary of State would be a political office to be changed with the change of Administration. He had been there as a public servant knowing only his country for more than thirty years, and he preferred to continue with the humbler title, so I am assured, rather than have another title which might subject him to the vicissitudes of our politics. Now, if we should carry out the idea of the Senator from Iowa, which I know he presents in good faith, we know not that Mr. Hunter would not at the close of this Administration be ejected, with others in a similar situation. I wish to give him this compliment now in his declining years and to assure to him a position from which according to the course of things under our Government he will not be ejected. I wish to give him something which shall be an assurance of the future.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I shall vote against this proposition, for the reason which I before gave. I was anxious to have it put into good shape in case the Senate should pass it, and therefore suggested the modification. I shall vote against it, not that I am opposed to Mr. Hunter having an increase of salary, for I think he ought to have it, because I esteem him to be a very valuable man, and he has been there so many years that he is almost indispensable. With regard to the objection which the Senator from Massachusetts makes to the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa, I will only say that he will be equally liable to removal as chief clerk as he would be as Second Assistant Secretary; but my own opinion is that no Administration coming in there could or would dispense with him, whatever position he might fill. Mr. Hunter is not a political man in any sense. In my judgment no new Secretary of State could get along for twenty-four hours without Mr. Hunter's aid and his knowledge of the affairs of the office. A man might write dispatches exceedingly well; but as to managing the office, he could not do it unless he had more experience than any new man has, coming in there, or any man gets who stays there for years. He is the factotum, in my judgment, in regard to most of the things done there.

But my objection is twofold. I stated it frankly to the honorable Senator. I do not like it on this bill. To be sure, there is a provision on this bill which looks something like it, but that was put on in the other House, and we did not see fit to strike it out, it being here, because we did not want to differ with the House of Representatives on that subject. But that does not, to my mind, justify putting on another incongruous provision. I think the proper place for a provision creating a new civil office, and providing a salary for it, is on the legislative and executive appropriation bill, which is now on our tables and will be taken up by and by.

In the second place, I do not like the idea of naming a particular individual in this way, although it might have the effect the honorable Senator supposes. To name him personally, and give him the additional compensation as chief clerk, would be productive of the evils which are spoken of. I would rather make for him something in the nature of a permanent position, as suggested by the Senator from Iowa. That he ought to have an increase of salary, from his very long services and his position in the Department, acting, as he does very frequently, as Secretary of State, I am entirely satisfied; and that I should be willing to vote for; but in the position in which the honorable Senator from Massachusetts has seen fit to place the proposition, it cannot receive my vote, although I do not feel disposed to make any active and strenuous opposition to it.

Mr. SUMNER. Do I understand that the Senator would be for a proposition to make him Assistant Secretary?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Not on this bill.

Mr. GRIMES. You can carry it in that shape.

Mr. SUMNER. It is just as much in order on this bill as is the proposition to make a Solicitor.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I admit that.

Mr. GUTHRIE. The chief clerk of this Department, I have no doubt, is very essential to the office, and no new Secretary would like to undertake the business without the information possessed by him, or by some one who had been for some time in the office, and had taken some pains to understand the business. This gentleman knows more about our relations with all the Governments of the world than any other individual in the State Department. He has been there a very long time; he has frequently discharged the duties of Secretary of State, and he is very inadequately paid. I confess that I thought, when the place of Assistant Secretary of State was created, it should have been offered to him, and he should have had the additional compensation which that place would have given him. I am in favor, however, of giving him additional compensation in some form, because it is a real necessity at the present time. If gentlemen can put the proposition in any more appropriate form than that in which it is now presented, I shall be glad, because I feel constrained, knowing this individual and his essential services to the Government, to vote for an increase.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. CLARK in the chair.) The Secretary will call the roll on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I understand that the Senator from Massachusetts proposes to withdraw the amendment and offer one in a different form.

Mr. SUMNER. I was about to substitute a proposition following out the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa, and I am drawing it up now.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will move one or two amendments in the mean time.

Mr. SUMNER. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts withdraw the present amendment?

Mr. SUMNER. For the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It may be withdrawn by unanimous consent, the yeas and nays having been ordered. The Chair hears no objection and the amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move to amend the bill by adding at the end of section two these words:

To commence on the 1st day of July, 1866, and the amount necessary to pay the same is hereby appropriated.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I suppose it will be in order to move to strike out the whole of section two, after that amendment shall have been made, because I intend to make that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That motion will then be in order.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not think we should go on making these Solicitors.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Let him perfect the section first.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Very well.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move in line ninety-nine of section one to insert the word "five" after "twenty" and before "thousand;" so as to make the gross appropriation for salaries of consuls general, consuls, and commercial agents $425,000. We have provided for some new salaried officers here, and it may be well therefore to add $5,000 to the appropriation.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I now move to strike out section two of the bill.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope the Senator will allow me to finish my amendment.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I hope the Senator does not mean to put it on as an amendment to section two.

Mr. SUMNER. I am not going to put it on section two, but to have it as a provision by itself.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Very well, then, it is in order for me to move to strike out section two, and I do so.

Mr. SUMNER. I believe it is not in order until the committees get through with their amendments.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I suppose it is in order at any time for me to make a motion in reference to the bill whenever I can get the attention of the Chair.

Mr. SUMNER. Is it not the rule of the Senate that the committees are first to get through with their amendments? I was going on with the business of my committee and have not yet got through.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois withdraw his motion?

Mr. TRUMBULL. No, sir. There is no other motion before the Senate with reference to the bill; and I move to strike out section two.

Mr. SUMNER. If I can have the floor on the business that was pending I will move a section to come in immediately before section two, from the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts if he is authorized by the committee to recommend the creation of a new office.

Mr. SUMNER. This is carrying out the main idea of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Illinois is in order, unless withdrawn.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is not a matter of much importance, but it is very manifest that the Senator from Massachusetts, unless he is the committee himself, cannot make these motions from any committee. He has not charge of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Illinois. That Senator moves to strike out section two. The section will be read.

The Secretary read section two, as amended, as follows:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, an officer in the Department of State to be called Solicitor to the Department of State, at an annual salary of $3,000, to commence on the 1st day of July, 1866; and the amount necessary to pay the same is hereby appropriated.

Mr. TRUMBULL. In making this motion, I am not governed by any considerations of objection to having a law officer for the State Department, if one be necessary; and I am not prepared to say that it may not be necessary to have advice in connection with that Department; but the question which influences me is this: before the war the Law Department of the Government was the Attorney General's Department, and all the other Departments—the State, the War, the Navy, the Post Office, the Interior—whenever a question arose about which there was a doubt in the construction of a law, referred that question to the Attorney General's office. There was an exception, I think, in the case of the Treasury Department, which has had a Solicitor for some years, and perhaps it is necessary that there should be a Solicitor in the Treasury Department, not for the purpose of advising that Department as to the construction of laws, but for the purpose of aiding in the collection of claims.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Solicitor of the Treasury was appointed for the very purpose of superintending the prosecution of suits or the defense of suits in which the Treasury was concerned; but when the Secretary desired any opinion he always consulted the Attorney General.

Mr. TRUMBULL. So I supposed; whenever a legal opinion was desired by the Secretary of the Treasury, it was obtained from the Attorney General, and the Solicitor in the Treasury Department was appointed merely to attend to the collection of claims, and there may be a propriety for such an officer there. But during the war the War Department had a Solicitor attached to that Department, and so also had the Navy Department. The Post Office Department has now a Solicitor, and a bill is pending, I think, to give an Assistant Solicitor to the Treasury Department.

Mr. GRIMES. The office of Solicitor of the Navy Department expires with the war or within one year thereafter.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I was not aware of that limitation. This is a provision now to establish a Solicitor in the State Department. In my opposition to it I am governed entirely by general considerations. I think that the Attorney General's Department should be an independent Department of the Government, and the construction of the laws to govern all the Executive Departments, the Interior, the Treasury, the War, the Post Office, the State, the Navy, should be the same and should come from the Attorney General's office. If the Attorney General has not now sufficient force in his office give him one, two, or half a dozen assistants, I care not how many, so that the public service requires them, and let one of those assistants, if you please, attend to business that peculiarly pertains to the War Department, or pertains to the State Department. By having them all together and all under one head you will have one construction of the laws. That is not the case now. A member of the Senate stated to me the other day—I think the Senator from Nevada; some Senator, I know—that he had been around from one Department to another and had found conflicting constructions of statutes which subjected parties doing business with the Government to a great deal of difficulty, expense, and uncertainty. This ought not to be. There should be a head to the Law Department of the Government as well as to every other.

I will state here that I have had some consultation with the Attorney General on this subject, and that a bill can be prepared which shall place this whole matter under one head. I think it very improper to be making a Solicitor for each one of the Departments. If we are to go on with that system we might as well abolish the Attorney General's office; we do not need it at all. Instead of doing this, let us increase the force of the Attorney General's office as much as may be necessary to give all the advice that is needed in the construction of laws to the various Departments.

I would not interfere with the Solicitor of the Treasury Department because, as was stated by the Senator from Maryland, he is not placed there for the purpose of construing statutes and fixing the rules by which the Departments of the Government are to be governed, but rather to attend to the collection of claims, and that Department may need such an officer. I suppose, from the fact that the office was established there a long time ago, that it is necessary; but the Government having for eighty years been able to get along without a Solicitor in the State Department, and having been able to get along through the war without such an officer, it can, I think, continue to get along without such an officer now, if there is a law officer to whom the State Department can apply for the construction of laws applicable to that Department. I hope the Senate will consent to strike out this second section, and let us have some uniform rule in reference to these Departments.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hold in my hand a letter from the Secretary of State on this subject, which I will read:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE.
WASHINGTON, February 6, 1866.

SIR: The great number of claims of citizens of the United States on foreign Governments and of the citizens and subjects of foreign countries on this Government growing out of the late civil war and the importance of the principles involved in them, make it indispensable, in my judgment, that the head of this Department should have the assistance of a professional gentleman properly to dispose of those subjects. To that end I recommend that an appropriation be inserted in the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill of $3,000 for the compensation at that rate by the year of an officer to be called the Solicitor to the Department of State.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,
WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

Hon. WILLIAM P. FESSENDEN, Senate.

The recommendation of the Secretary, it will be observed, is that it be inserted in the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill. There is no such appropriation bill at present. There is the legislative, executive, and judicial bill, and the diplomatic and consular bill. In former times, there was but one bill entitled as the Secretary has stated.

I differ with the honorable Senator from Illinois on this subject. I do not see the propriety of making so large an establishment of the Attorney General's office. With regard to the Treasury Department, my experience satisfied me that they could not get along there at all without a Solicitor. Questions are arising every day upon which you must have an immediate decision, and the officer to examine the papers and give the decisions should be an officer who is subject to the control and under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury. He cannot send questions that arise there, involving the examination of papers to see what the statutes are on the particular subject, to the Attorney General's office and wait until the Attorney General, or somebody under his direction, is in a condition to advise him with reference to it. The office of Solicitor of the Treasury Department has existed now for over twenty years, and the business of the Solicitor is now very large. It is true it may originally have been the case that he was appointed merely to look after claims, although I am inclined to think that is not so; it has not been so within my recollection; but the business he has to do now is multiform. There is a great variety of questions arising every day for the Secretary to decide, upon which he wants to know what the law is, and know it immediately, and it is impossible for him to examine them, and he sends them to the Solicitor to have an immediate opinion. The Solicitor lays aside other business which can be disposed of afterward, and attends to the directions of the Secretary of the Treasury. I am satisfied that that officer is indispensable.

I can understand from the letter of the Secretary of State why at the present time he needs this officer, and why he has not needed him before. During the war, claims were not presented to any considerable extent to that Department; before the war there were none; but he says very properly, and we can understand it, that out of the war have grown many claims of foreigners upon our Government, and of our citizens upon foreign Governments. Those must be undoubtedly attended to through communications made by the Secretary of State. He is the person to communicate with foreign Governments upon all these subjects; and with the variety of matters arising there it is impossible for him to examine these questions personally. I have no doubt about it. The duties which he is called upon to perform in the ordinary course of correspondence, &c., are enough to occupy all his time.

Now, then, there being this large number of claims there at the present time, he must have an opinion, upon those claims, of somebody else, which he can understand and appreciate, or else he must examine them himself and form his own opinion. He cannot examine them himself. They are peculiar to and appropriate to his office, and he would be exposed to a great deal of inconvenience if he were obliged to send every claim that comes from foreign Governments or from foreigners, or from our citizens upon foreign Governments, to the Attorney General's office, to an officer not under his control or direction, to be examined, and a report made by the Attorney General; and as the answer must be made by the Attorney General himself, it would lay a very considerably increased burden upon him. To be sure, as the Senator from Illinois says, you may make the Attorney General's office as large as he states it, with half a dozen Assistant Attorneys General, and they may be divided, one for the Treasury Department, one for the State Department, and one for every other Department, if needed. How far they will be needed for other Departments I do not know; but my own belief is that the same rule would apply to the State Department, with reference to these classes of claims, that applies to the Treasury Department. I am satisfied that no Secretary of the Treasury, with the business that is to be done there, the great variety of cases that arise in regard to which he must have the statutes examined, and have an opinion upon which he can act, which he cannot do himself, could get along if he was obliged to send all that current business out of his office to get an opinion of somebody else, at his own convenience, and subject to the interruptions of others. He must have it at the instant; and, to a certain extent, the same must be true of the Secretary of State as regards all these questions directly before him. The officer to look up the information to be stated to him should, in my judgment, be an officer under his control and direction, and should do what he wants done at the time he wants it done, and he ought not to be subjected to another Department to get the information required. That is my belief with regard to it; and I shall be opposed altogether to changing our system, which has worked exceedingly well in the Treasury Department, if it is proposed to make a new arrangement of the law, as suggested by the honorable Senator from Illinois.

So in the War Department. During the war the Secretary of War could hardly have got along if he had been obliged to send all these questions out of his Department to the Attorney General—everything that arose there to be taken up and decided—and receive the information required when the business of the Attorney General's office would allow it to be done.

I am very unwilling, when a system has been found to be a good one in its operations, for the sake of symmetry merely, or what would be supposed to be symmetry—because it goes no further than that—to change that whole system and enlarge the Attorney General's office. I think that each Department should be independent, so far as the current business is concerned. To be sure, every Secretary is entitled to the opinion of the Attorney General. My practice was, when an important matter arose upon which I wished very particular to rid myself of responsibility, to pass it over to somebody else, to get the opinion of the Attorney General; but, as a general rule, I think it would be better that the ordinary current business and responsibility should be left with the Department where the question arises. I therefore, for these reasons, am opposed to the proposition of the honorable Senator from Illinois, and think it would not be wise to adopt it.

Mr. HOWARD. I concur entirely with the honorable Senator from Illinois in the views which he has presented to the Senate in favor of striking out the second section of the bill. I doubt very much the propriety of multiplying the subordinate law officers in the various Departments of the Government. It leads undoubtedly to a diversity of decision and opinion in those various Departments, whereas it is necessary that there should be harmony and uniformity in the construction given to the laws during the course of their administration. It is made the duty of the Attorney General, by law, to give advice and legal opinions to the various heads of Departments and to the President of the United States whenever he is called upon to do so; and although we may appoint a Solicitor for the Department of State, it will still be the right of the Secretary of State to call upon the Attorney General for his opinion upon any question that he may see fit to submit to him; so that the duty of the Attorney General is by no means lighter by the retention of the second section of this bill, and the appointment of a Solicitor under it.

Owing to the complicated nature of the Treasury Department, Congress, many years ago, saw fit to create the office of Solicitor of the Treasury. I have heard no complaint, it is true, of that; still, it has always appeared to me that the most consistent course would have been to confide all questions of law that arise even in that Department to the Attorney General, so that his decisions may be uniform, and so that his construction of the various acts of Congress may be uniform, and be understood to be uniform throughout the United States.

During the war, owing to circumstances of which we are all aware, Congress authorized the appointment of a Solicitor to the War Department, and I believe the country has not complained of that appointment. There seemed to be a necessity for the employment of such an officer owing to the great multiplicity of questions that arose during the war and the pressing necessity of an immediate decision upon them from time to time. I think that necessity at present has ceased, and I think we may dispense with the services of the Solicitor of the War Department without injury to the public service.

But, sir, the questions which ordinarily and naturally come before the Secretary of State are of a character on which, it seems to me, it is necessary there should be a decision of the highest law officer of the Government. In that Department are considered from time to time questions of international law of the gravest and highest importance—questions which of all others deserve to be submitted to the calm consideration of the Attorney General, and ought not to be left, in my judgment, to the decision of any inferior law officer. Questions respecting the true construction to be given to treaties, indeed all questions that relate to international law, must naturally come before the Attorney General of the United States; and I object to submitting those questions, or any of them, to an inferior law officer without the concurrence of the Attorney General of the United States. I see no necessity, I must confess, for placing a Solicitor under the control of the Secretary of State. If any question of importance arises in that Department, the Attorney General is the proper functionary to determine it for the Government. He, and he alone, ought to be held responsible for the decision of the question, in case the Secretary of State should deem it necessary to take his opinion. It seems to me the creation of this office of Solicitor to the State Department is entirely an anomaly; it is without necessity so far as I can see, and I shall vote to strike out the second section for that reason.

I do not see the necessity of giving the Secretary of State a Solicitor to act under his especial instructions and control. It is generally supposed that the Secretary of State is, or should be, a gentleman of such intelligence and such information as to make it unnecessary to refer ordinary questions of law to the Attorney General; that he is competent himself to decide most of the questions which come before him; and I think undoubtedly that is true in the case of the present Secretary of State. I do not see the necessity, as I remarked before, of treating another office to accommodate some favorite, under the control and direction of the Secretary of State, and I shall vote against it.

Mr. SUMNER. After the very full and accurate statement made by the Senator from Maine, I should deem anything from me superfluous had it not so happened that my attention was drawn at least three years ago to this very question. It is fully three years ago that I received a communication from the Secretary of State similar to the one which the Senator from Maine has read to-day, and from that time to the present my attention has been drawn to the necessity of this office. It has often been the subject of conversation when I have been at the Department of State. I made myself, at least three years ago, acquainted with what I might call the necessity of such an office there. Senators all recognized the necessity of such an office during the war in the War Department; and my friend from Michigan, I think, voted for it. I thought at the time there was an equal necessity for the office in the State Department growing out of the new condition of things, carrying with it a class of business for the consideration of that Department which it had never had before.

That brings me to the precise point which has been presented by the Senator from Illinois, and afterward by the Senator from Michigan, that this office is not necessary in the Department of State; and they proceeded to argue that whatever in the way of legal opinion may be required in the Department of State should be referred to the Attorney General. It seems to me that my friends, when they press that argument, do not take into consideration the precise nature of the business which it is proposed to submit to a Solicitor in the State Department. If it were what perhaps may be compendiously called the great business or the great questions of law that may arise in that Department, I should agree with both of those Senators, that it would be advisable that they should be submitted in the most solemn form possible to the highest law officer of the Government. Probably if such questions should arise in the Department of State, requiring any legal opinion, they would be so submitted. But, as I understand it, the necessity which it is proposed to meet now is of entirely a different character. It refers to matters of what I may almost call current business, occurring, if not daily, at least weekly, on which the Department must express its opinion. For the most part, this business grows out of claims, first, by our citizens on foreign Governments, and secondly, by the subjects of foreign Governments on our Government.

Now, for instance, to take the first class, the claims of our citizens on foreign Governments; we all know that there is a large class of claims growing out of the depredations of the Alabama and other cruisers that have sailed out of British ports, amounting to millions of dollars. Before these claims can be presented to the British Government they must be reduced to some form. They should at least undergo some consideration on the part of some functionary of our Government to the end that we should not put forward mere shadows. Our Government owes it to itself to ascertain that the claims have a certain validity, at least in form. How can that be done? As I understand it, only through some legal officer, some person familiar with that business, who can attend to it specially, and in whom the Secretary of State can rely. It may be said that the Secretary of State can attend to it himself. How so? Absorbed in correspondence of a political character, or of a diplomatic character with foreign Powers, he can have no time to enter into the duties of a solicitor or of an attorney to grind out a claim and reduce it to form in order that it shall be properly presented to a foreign Power. That is a service which ought to be rendered in the Department, under his eye, by some person in whom he has adequate confidence.

That is one side of the case—claims of our citizens on foreign Governments. Then comes the other side—claims of foreign Governments on ours. The relations which I bear to the business of the Senate have made me perfectly familiar with that class of business. It is within my personal knowledge that but few of the Governments of Europe at this moment have not very large claims on our Government, growing out of the recent rebellion. I say nothing of the validity of the claims. Suffice it to say that they are presented. Those claims are entitled at least to a respectful consideration; they should be entertained to a certain extent, so that when our Government passes upon them, they may at least have a reasonable degree of knowledge with reference to them. But can the Secretary of State obtain that reasonable degree of knowledge? For instance, there are claims at this moment presented by the minister of Prussia, and I understand that the subjects of the claims are scattered throughout the whole country. Can the Secretary of State himself, by his own study, qualify himself to deal with those claims? Then there is another set of claims presented, which also comes within my own knowledge personally, by the minister of the Hanse Towns, and the subjects of those claims are scattered also throughout the whole surface of our country. Must not the Secretary of State be aided by some professional person in the first audit of those claims? I submit clearly that he must. I might go through, also, with other nations, and show you the constant recurring necessity of such an officer in aid of the Department of State.

I submit, therefore, that my learned friends, when they would transfer this duty to the Attorney General, do not conceive adequately what it is. They imagine that we propose this officer merely to decide on what I have already called great questions of jurisprudence; but it is no such thing. Such questions would naturally go to the Attorney General; but the business which the officer it is now proposed to establish must consider, would not, in the ordinary course of things, go to the Attorney General. The Department of State could not be conducted on that system. It must be handled at home; and to that end, I agree that an officer to be called a Solicitor should be appointed there; who should be in the Department, always within call and ready to give his counsel and aid and diligence to the Secretary of State.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I wish to add also that Senators, I think, misapprehend the question, from a want of familiarity with the business which is transacted at the Departments. Take, for instance, the Treasury. A question comes up for the Secretary to decide under the statute. He must decide it under the statute. That is a matter of business occurring every day. There are more or less of them. Then some question comes up and he is not exactly familiar with the application of the law to the facts; there is some doubt about it; it is not clear; and yet it is before him for decision. Now, what used to be the way of doing that? He had some clerk in the Department who had some legal knowledge. He would at once pass it over to that clerk to examine the case, and state what the law was and the sections of the law. It is the business in his own Department; he cannot send out the paper to be examined by another Department, to get a formal opinion on the subject. There is no time for it, and no necessity for it. In view of that, and of the inconvenience arising there, it was found necessary to have an officer of a higher grade than a mere clerk, whose opinions would be better than you were likely to get from a man receiving a small salary serving there, although he might be a creditable lawyer. For that reason the office of Solicitor was established.

Now, it comes to the same thing in the Department of State. Strike this section out, and what would the Secretary of State be obliged to do? He must pick out some clerk in his Department to do this work, and to report on the cases to him. That will be the amount of it. But on account of the war there is a great variety of these questions that require something better than the opinion he could get from a clerk upon the subject. He wants an officer of a higher grade, to be continually at his hand, to state the facts and the questions of law arising out of each case. The idea that all these papers, this infinite variety of claims and subjects in each Department, must be sent out of that Department to another—every-day business—to be examined, would create infinite confusion. It could not be done, and would not be done.

Mr. HOWARD. It has been done for about eighty years past.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I say it has always gone on inside of the Department; and the question here is not whether you will have them sent out to another Department, but whether you will have an officer of a higher grade and of more intelligence—a man whom you cannot get for $1,800, the salary of a fourth-class clerk—to advise the Secretary as to the facts on these questions. They cannot send these papers out of the Department. If they were required to be sent to the Attorney General's office they would lumber up that office to such an extent that you would require a new building entirely for his Department, with the number of papers that would come into his possession, and it would lead, in my judgment, from the little observation I have had, to infinite delay and infinite confusion in the Departments. That is what I think about it. The real question is, not whether you will send them to the Attorney General—for that is impossible; you cannot send the business of other Departments there—but whether these questions, the infinity of them that now arise, growing out of the war and claims on both sides, are of importance enough to allow the Secretary an officer, with the pay of $3,000, an officer of a higher class than he is at present able to employ. That is the simple question; because, to attempt to carry out the idea of the Senator from Illinois on the subject would, in my judgment, be an entire failure, and must necessarily be so.

Mr. TRUMBULL. How could it be a failure when this Government has been carried on in that way always until 1860?

Mr. FESSENDEN. It has not been carried on in that way.

Mr. TRUMBULL. There had been no Solicitor in any Department except the Treasury before 1860.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will tell you how it has been carried on. Great questions, as the Senator supposes, arising in the Treasury Department, are sent to the Attorney General for an opinion. That has always been done; that will be done now; but I tell him there are hundreds of questions coming up from day to day in the Departments that you never think of sending out of the Department, and which could not be sent out of the Department without making confusion in the business of the Department. You cannot do it in the way the Senator proposes; it would not be done; and the only question is, whether you will have an officer of a higher grade to attend to these matters or not. There has not been a necessity for such an officer in the Department of State until at present. But the Senator must see that there will be a very large number of these claims. The Secretary of State has been able hitherto, from the very little business to be done in the Department, to attend to those questions and examine them himself. He would only receive one occasionally. Now they come in in very large numbers. That is the difference.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I never contemplated that every question in regard to the settlement of a claim and every question in regard to what a statute was, was to be sent out of the Department. I never supposed that. I supposed that the Government would be conducted just as it had always been conducted up to 1860; that when the question involved was the construction of a statute of general importance, about which there was a dispute, it would be referred to the law officer of the Government, and that construction would govern the Secretary of the Interior as well as the Secretary of War. But how is it now? Why, sir, the district attorneys in the United States are receiving instructions one way from one Department and another way from another Department; and what are they to do? I have had a letter within a few days from the district attorney for the northern district of New York—I believe it is in my committee-room now—in which he says he has had one sort of instructions from the Attorney General and conducted his business one way under those instructions, and that now he ascertains that the suit which he was conducting in the court is taken out of his hands by an instruction from one of the Departments of the Government.

Mr. GRIMES. What Department was it?

Mr. TRUMBULL. That came from the Treasury. The case was connected, in some way, with the revenue. He was prosecuting the suit; and he writes me that the suit had been settled for three weeks, and he knew nothing about it, without the knowledge of the court or anybody else—a case pending in court.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Very likely, and very properly.

Mr. TRUMBULL. No, not very properly. Surely the Senator from Maine does not mean that there should be that want of harmony between the different Departments of the Government. He does not mean that when he, as an attorney, is prosecuting a suit, his client, or anybody else should settle that suit without giving him notice.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If it is within the power and jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Treasury to adjust it, it is very proper that he should adjust it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If he did adjust it he should not do it in that way. I know the Senator would not like a client of his to do that if he was attending to a suit for a private party in a court.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Let me say to the honorable Senator from Illinois that the business of the Treasury Department is not conducted exactly as he used to conduct his law office in the State of Illinois. That is the difference between the two cases. One is a little larger than the other, and involves other questions.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Undoubtedly; but I suppose we may illustrate great things by small ones.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Not always.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is not an improper illustration, I think, when speaking of a practice which prevails, where an officer of the Government is charged with a duty and is in the exercise of that duty, and he finds that another Department of the Government, without any notice to him, has disposed of the business which is intrusted to him. I know very well the Senator from Maine does not think that proper, because the district attorney might be putting the Government to expense by summoning witnesses and preparing to try a case in court which had been disposed of without his knowledge. That should not be. That is a small matter, the Senator says. I only mention it by way of illustration.

Now, I do not propose that every question that arises in the Departments is to be sent to the Attorney General's office for a legal opinion. I never contemplated any such thing as that. That was not the practice of the Government during the first seventy years of its existence. Until 1860 no such thing as a Solicitor in the various Departments of the Government was known, with the single exception of the Treasury Department. Since then we have been multiplying these officers. Now, if you will notice the letter of the Secretary of State, it is not simply in regard to claims that he desires to have a Solicitor appointed in his Department, but he says that important principles of law are to be settled, international principles. If international principles of law are to be settled, they should not be submitted to a Solicitor employed in one of the Departments of the Government, but they ought to go to the head of some Department. They are the most important questions that can be settled, and may involve the honor and faith of the nation.

Mr. FESSENDEN. They go to the head of the State Department.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Very well. In England we know that the opinions of the law officers of the Crown are taken when great questions of international importance are involved of a legal character, and I apprehend it would be so here. It ought to be so here.

Mr. SUMNER. But in the British Foreign Office there is a person whose particular duty it is to grind out these particular classes of claims.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I apprehend that the general class of this business that is spoken of would never go to the Attorney General's office, and therefore the objection does not obtain which the Senator from Maine makes.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Who is to do it?

Mr. TRUMBULL. Let it be done just as it was always done before 1860. This was a great Government before that.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I know it was; but then we did not have these claims.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Department did not have this Solicitor then. We had a war in 1812; we had a Mexican war; and we have been able to conduct the Government without having an Attorney General in each of the Departments of the Government, for that is what this proposition amounts to. The objection to it is the diversity it leads to in the construction of law; the same opinions do not obtain in the different Departments of the Government. I think it would be much better for the public service that there should be one officer to put the construction upon a statute which is to govern all the Departments of the Government. It is a matter of public interest, as I conceive, and best for the public service. I have suggested it to the Senate. The Senate will do with it what it thinks proper. I think the practice of establishing these Solicitors in the different Departments is a very bad one. If the Senate think differently, they will retain this section. That is all there is of it. I have discharged my duty with respect to it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Let me ask the Senator another question. In the Internal Revenue Bureau there are a large number of questions arising every day. They have an officer there—he is not called a Solicitor—to whom those questions are referred and to whom a salary is paid—I do not know how much—under the general authority giving additional compensation, where it is absolutely necessary, to certain officers, more than the amount allowed by law; I believe he gets $2,500. Does the Senator suppose that all the questions of law arising there, which come up every day, can be settled at the Attorney General's office?

Mr. TRUMBULL. Of course not.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Then you must have a Solicitor of that bureau—it is absolutely necessary; or you must have a man, no matter what you call him—you may call him a clerk, if you please—but an able lawyer, a man who can take up the questions and examine and settle them; unless you mean to declare that, in addition to all the immense business he has to do, the head of that bureau must settle all these questions and examine them for himself. This has got to be a very great concern of late years, and you cannot take questions that arise in the bureaus of the Departments appropriate to them, and send them out of the Departments to be settled.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I suppose the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is appointed for the very purpose of executing the internal revenue law. Most of it is matter of detail. It is not upon every section of the law that there will be a controversy. He establishes rules and regulations to carry the law into effect. Occasionally some questions of doubt in the construction of a statute may arise, on which it would be very proper for him, probably, to take the opinion of the head of the Department, the Secretary of the Treasury, and through him of the Attorney General. I believe the bureaus do not apply directly to the Attorney General's office. I am not quite sure what the practice of that is; but I suppose the application for the opinion comes from the head of the Department. But most of these questions are settled by the heads of the bureaus. It is not to be presumed that there is to be a controversy about every section of a statute or the execution of it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Does the Senator know that within the first two years of the establishment of that bureau there were legal questions of construction settled which were published in a volume of about four or five hundred pages?

Mr. TRUMBULL. Undoubtedly; and a great deal of that there was no controversy about in the world. Very few of its points were controverted points. Some construction was to be put upon the statute and the mode of executing it, and the Commissioner at that time had to inaugurate the system.

But I have said all I desire to say about this matter, and detained the Senate longer than I had any intention of doing in reference to it. I regard it as a matter of general importance in the administration of the Government affairs to preserve uniformity of decision, and harmony in the Government, and between the different Departments of the Government. I have thought it better that we should not create these law officers of the different Departments. I believe the Senate understand it. I shall be satisfied with whatever decision they make. My motion is to strike out this section, with a view, if it is stricken out, of increasing the force in the Attorney General's office sufficiently to discharge what I suppose would be the proper duty to be discharged by the Law Office.

Mr. SUMNER. I will only make one remark. It seems to me the Senator from Illinois strangely forgets the change in the condition of things. He asks why we should not go on now as we have for the previous sixty years. There is a very sufficient answer: the machinery of the previous sixty years is not adequate to the work which we have to do now. In some places you are obliged to change the machinery; in other places you are obliged to add to it. We are told that new occasions teach new duties, and I believe that the great occasion of our war has taught new duties to the Government of this Republic. There is no part of the Government which can be conducted now and in times to come as it was conducted before. A larger machine will be required. New persons must be summoned to the work, and among those who are to be summoned to the work is the officer which the Senator from Illinois seems so much disposed to oppose.

Mr. JOHNSON. The object of this amendment, as I understand, is to provide a Solicitor for the State Department. The opinion I am about to express I have entertained ever since I have had any knowledge of the actual operation of the Government. It is certainly advantageous to the several Departments of the Government, as far as the ordinary business of each Department is concerned, that they should have some one who would undertake what might be considered rather the clerical duty, or the duty that should belong to the head of the Department; but since these Solicitors have been provided for, as is the case in the Treasury Department and in the War Department and, I believe, in the Navy Department, the practical result, I think, has been that the Attorney General has very seldom been consulted on any question.

Another result of the failure to consult the Attorney General has been that different constructions have been placed upon the same laws, very much, as I think, to the injury of the public service. I had supposed that when an Assistant Secretary of the Treasury was provided for, and an Assistant Secretary of War—we have two or three of them—and an Assistant Secretary of State—and I believe my friend from Massachusetts proposes to increase the number, to which certainly I have no objection—that with the aid of these Assistant Secretaries the business of the offices would be properly conducted, and that there could be no occasion at all for any extra aid upon questions of law other than that which is to be had by a reference to the Attorney General's office. The honorable member from Illinois is right in saying that the act of 1789—and there is no subsequent law, that I am aware of—which creates the office of Attorney General, makes it his duty to answer all questions propounded by the President or by the heads of Departments. No bureau officer, no one less than the head of a Department, has a right to consult the Attorney General. It is very obvious that the wholesome operation of the Government depends very much upon the uniformity of the construction which can be given to the laws.

Now, in relation to the Department of State, the honorable member from Massachusetts, who from his situation as chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations has become very familiar with the actual condition of the Department, says there are pressing now upon the Department claims made by citizens of foreign countries and claims which our citizens suppose they have upon foreign Governments; but it seems to me that claims of that description, of all others, are the claims which should be submitted to the Attorney General—I mean, not the details of the claims, but the principle upon which those claims are to be placed. It would never do, and I do not know that the Secretary of State, or that the President would consent if the Secretary of State was disposed to do it, to make a claim upon a foreign Government without taking the advice of the law officer of the Government; but it may be that acting upon the authority of the Solicitor, and throwing himself upon that authority, the Secretary might present claims against a foreign Government or might resist claims upon our Government made by the subjects of a foreign Government which ought to be submitted to the judgment of the higher officer of the Government. I do not mean to say anything of the actual condition of things as they exist; but it is to be presumed, and I suppose it is true now, that the Attorney General of the United States must be more competent to advise on all questions of this description than any subordinate legal officer who may be employed by the Government at a salary of $3,000 or $3,500. So far, therefore, as my opinion is concerned, I am adverse to the creation of the office of Solicitor in any of these Departments.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will ask the Senator to compare the two propositions. The honorable Senator from Illinois admits, in argument, that the Attorney General cannot do this business, he cannot give these opinions, but it must be done by subordinates, and he says the subordinate officers to be employed should be employed in the office of the Attorney General. Where is the difference? If you have got to have the officers and got to pay them, why send them all to the Attorney General, when the questions to be settled are right in the different Departments? You do not care to have the Attorney General's opinion except upon a statement of principle.

Mr. JOHNSON. The honorable member will permit me to say that I suppose if these Solicitors were placed in the office of the Attorney General, they would be subject to his control.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Exactly; and therefore the different Departments would lose the control of their own business. If they have got fifty claims in the Department of State, which the Secretary cannot look at, which cases are to be made up and stated, which can be done by any good lawyer, if he can get a good lawyer, instead of having that work done in his own office, in his own time, and under his own eye, he must send it to the Attorney General for some subordinate in his office to do the same thing, who is to be paid the same amount. As I said before, the effect is to run the Departments into each other and create infinite confusion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois to strike out the second section of the bill.

Mr. SUMNER. I ask for the yeas and nays upon that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 18, nays 14: as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chandler, Clark, Cowan, Davis, Grimes, Hendricks, Howard, Howe, Johnson, Kirkwood, Morrill, Nesmith, Riddle, Sprague, Stewart, Trumbull, Wilson, and Yates—18.
NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cragin, Dixon, Fessenden, Foster, Guthrie, Harris, Lane of Indiana, Morgan, Norton, Pomeroy, Sumner, Willey, and Williams—14.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Connors, Creswell, Doolittle, Edwards, Henderson, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Nye, Poland, Ramsey, Saulsbury, Sherman, Van Winkle, Wade, and Wright—17.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. Now I send an amendment as a new section to the Chair, to come in precisely where the one just struck out was:

And be it further enacted, That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a second Assistant Secretary of State, in the Department of State, at an annual salary of $3,500, to commence on the 1st day of July, 1866; and the amount necessary to pay the same is hereby appropriated.

A Senator near me says he will not go for this amendment unless I put in the name. It is perfectly well known that it is intended to give an opportunity to appoint Mr. Hunter, and the authorities, I presume, will take notice. There is no need of inserting his name; and the remark of the Senator is simply a criticism for an excuse. I hope the Senate will adopt the amendment without a division.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I ask for the yeas and nays upon it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CLARK. It is perfectly apparent to everybody that this attempt to appoint an Assistant Secretary is to get an increase of salary; not for the wants of the service, but to give Mr. Hunter an increase of salary. I am not in favor of any such proposition. If the wants of the service absolutely required a second Assistant Secretary of State I would be willing to vote for it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Is the advice and consent of the Senate required to this appointment?

Mr. CLARK. The advice and consent of the Senate is required; but this office is not now proposed to be created because the Government needs it, but simply to give an increase of salary to Mr. Hunter. It is only another evidence of how men will squirm around to get more pay.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator says this is simply to give an increase of salary. It is to make a place for a valuable public servant. There is the simple fact. When I proposed to give an increase of salary outright to him as chief clerk, Senators said that that was contrary to precedent, it would be a bad precedent for the future. "Make a new office, Assistant Secretary of State, and see that he is appointed to that." Now, I have done what I could in order to bring that about, and Senators then come forward and say, "But you are creating a new office as an apology for giving a man additional salary." Sir, I accept the statement. It is in order to give an additional salary to a well-deserving public servant, and it is because in no other way can we give him adequate compensation.

Mr. COWAN. It is perfectly right.

Mr. SUMNER. I know it is perfectly right, and it ought to be done.

Mr. TRUMBULL. We have the avowal, then, and it is indorsed by the Senator from Pennsylvania, that it is perfectly right in this time of taxation and great debt to create an office, a place, for no other purpose in the world than to pay a salary.

Mr. SUMNER. Very well; to reward a faithful public servant.

Mr. DAVIS. I understand that a bran new principle is to be introduced into our Government; and that is, that a new place shall be created for every deserving officer. I am opposed to that principle.

Mr. COWAN. I think the Senator from Massachusetts has stated the question just about as well as it could be stated. Honorable Senators will not vote a valuable officer that which they admit themselves to be a sufficient compensation for him. Why? As I understand, because he is called a clerk. The honorable Senator from Massachusetts proposes to change his name; that is the whole of it; and I think he is perfectly right in availing himself of that privilege now, in order to achieve what I look upon as a good purpose in the end.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 18, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Cowan, Cragin, Dixon, Foster, Grimes, Guthrie, Harris, Howe, Johnson, Nesmith, Poland, Pomeroy, Ramsey, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Wilson, and Yates—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Chandler, Clark, Davis, Fessenden, Henderson, Hendricks, Howard, Kirkwood, Morgan, Morrill, Norton, Riddle, Sherman, Trumbull, Willey, and Williams—17.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Connors, Creswell, Doolittle, Edmunds, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Nye, Saulsbury, Van Winkle, Wade, and Wright—14.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. I offer this amendment to come in as a new section at the end of the bill:

And be it further enacted, That the salary of any envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary hereafter appointed shall be the salary of a minister resident and nothing more, except when he is appointed to one of the countries where the United States are now represented by an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary.

Mr. TRUMBULL. We acted on that once.

Mr. SUMNER. I beg the Senator's pardon; we voted on a different proposition which had something of the same idea. The proposition which is now submitted is substantially the proposition of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN.] The Senate will see its application if I call their attention for one minute to the consular and diplomatic act of 1856, which undertakes to fix the salaries of envoys extraordinary as follows: here is what is called schedule A; there are three clauses to schedule A: "Great Britain and France, each $17,500;" the second clause is "Russia, Spain, Austria, Prussia, Brazil, Mexico, and China, each $12,000;" and then comes clause third, "all other countries, each $10,000."

In point of fact I understand that under this third clause we have now envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary in Peru and Chili. The object of the section which I have offered is to declare that in all other cases except those on which Congress has already acted, and which I have now named, where an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary shall be appointed, his salary shall no longer be what it may be under this act, $10,000, but it shall be $7,500; in short, it shall be reduced to the salary of a minister resident. The proposition accomplishes, to a certain extent, the purpose aimed at in the proposition which I moved yesterday from the committee; but it has a different form, and I am indebted substantially to the Senator from Ohio for that form. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SHERMAN. My friend from Maryland [Mr. JOHNSON] asks me a question which I will answer to the Senate itself. He asks what is the meaning and what is the effect of it. I will state that schedule A, of the diplomatic and consular law, provides for three classes of envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary: first, to France and Great Britain, where the salary is $17,500; second, to several countries named where the salary is $12,000; and then it provides in the third clause that envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to all other countries shall have a salary of $10,000. We have some of each of the three classes. The Senator from Massachusetts wishes to give an additional title to ministers resident without any additional pay. To accomplish that, this amendment adds another grade of envoys extraordinary, so that a person who now holds the office of minister resident may be nominated to the Senate and confirmed as envoy extraordinary, and if he is sent to any country not specifically named, and at which we have not now an envoy extraordinary, he is to get but $7,500. I cannot see what objection there can be to this.

Mr. SUMNER. It is in point of fact a reduction of salary.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly. The effect is to make another class, class number four, of envoys extraordinary. The objection made yesterday by the Senator from Iowa was rather personal in its character, that it raised the salary of gentlemen to whom he had objection. Under this section it is a new office, and they must be sent here for confirmation; it is a fourth class of envoys extraordinary, and it fixes their salary at $7,500, the salary of a minister resident. I do not see any objection that can be made against it now. The objection made to the proposition yesterday and the reason I voted against it was because the inevitable effect of the proposition yesterday I thought would be to lead to an increase of salary to the officers appointed under it, because as the law fixed their salary at $10,000, and as they had performed the duties of an office the salary of which was fixed at $10,000, they would naturally claim it, and there was no exclusion of that claim in the amendment offered yesterday.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask the chairman of the committee, or my friend from Ohio, whether this amendment would interfere with the salaries of the ministers who are now abroad.

Mr. SUMNER. Not at all.

Mr. GRIMES. But I understand that under this proposition those persons who are now ministers resident can be sent in to-morrow, if the bill passes to-day, as ministers plenipotentiary, and then they will get the increased salary under the other schedule.

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, no.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator from Iowa is mistaken, first, as to sending them in. If they are sent in, then the Senator from Iowa will have an opportunity of opposing their confirmation. Take the two gentlemen to whom reference has been made so often in this discussion—the ministers resident at Brussels and at Lisbon. Suppose they are nominated to-morrow, each as envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary. It will then be for the Senator from Iowa to make his opposition. The time has not yet come. Why oppose a general principle, which I insist is beneficent in its application and for the good of the Republic, because under that two gentlemen, or one gentleman, to whom he is opposed may be sent in? Let the gentlemen be sent in, and then let the Senator from Iowa institute his opposition, but not oppose a principle which in itself is so essentially beneficent.

Mr. TRUMBULL. What is the principle?

Mr. SUMNER. The principle is that you reduce the salaries of envoys extraordinary from $10,000 to $7,500; you create a new class.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Allow me to ask a question right there. I understood the Senator from Massachusetts to say, in reply to a question from the Senator from Maryland, that it did not reduce anybody's salary.

Mr. SUMNER. I was right when I said that.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It does not reduce it, and yet now you say it does reduce it.

Mr. SUMNER. If the Senator from Illinois would only trouble himself to understand the question he would not speak as he does. As I understood the Senator from Maryland, he asked me whether this would reduce the salary of any actual minister, to which I replied no; and I can show that to the Senator if he will only attend.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I am listening.

Mr. SUMNER. For instance, the first class of envoys extraordinary is to Great Britain and France; the salary is $17,500 to each country. That is not touched. The second class of envoys extraordinary is to "Russia, Spain, Austria, Prussia, Brazil, Mexico, and China, each $12,000." That is not touched. Then comes the third clause, "all other countries, $7,500." Under that third clause the Government has already appointed envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to Peru and Chili. These two cases are saved out by the language of the proposition, and now the consequence is, that in future appointments of envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to countries not already provided for by the legislation of Congress, the salary will be $7,500 instead of $10,000; so that in point of fact we create a fourth class of envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary.

Mr. CONNESS. Will the Senator answer me a question?

Mr. SUMNER. Certainly. I am always happy to hear the Senator from California.

Mr. CONNESS. If it be deemed necessary or wise by the executive department to raise a minister resident to the rank of minister plenipotentiary, must his name be sent in to the Senate for confirmation under this proposition?

Mr. SUMNER. It must be, and the Senator from California can have the opportunity of voting against any of these gentlemen.

Mr. GRIMES. I desire to correct the Senator from Massachusetts in one respect. I did not allude yesterday to the minister resident of this Government at Belgium; I did allude to the one at Lisbon, and I am prepared if necessary to allude to him a little more extensively to-day than I did yesterday. But my objection to this proposition is that it proceeds upon altogether a different idea than the true American idea on this subject; and that is, that our consequence abroad is to be regulated by the rank which we see fit to confer upon our ministers. The only illustration the Senator has given us as to the necessity of the passage of this provision was given yesterday, when he said that a Senator had an introduction at the White House in preference to a member of the House. But does the member of the House have any the less influence when he reaches the ear of the President, than the member of the Senate who preceded him a few minutes in his introduction?

Mr. CONNESS. That depends on circumstances entirely.

Mr. GRIMES. In this case it will depend entirely on the character of the man who is sent and the character of the country that stands behind him, and not on the rank or the pay that we bestow upon him.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the American minister resident is invited to dinner and an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary from some little German State should be invited also, that envoy extraordinary would take precedence. On account of that misfortune, I am perfectly willing to give the higher title.

Mr. CLARK. Would he not have the same dinner?

Mr. SHERMAN. He might have the same dinner, but he would have to tag at the end of the line.

Mr. GRIMES. It seems that the upshot of all this is that we are to make a new schedule and a new grade, in order to enable a certain set of men to sit higher at table when they are invited to dinner than they otherwise would. That is the sum and substance of the whole thing. It proceeds upon anything else than the idea that should stimulate citizens in a republican Government.

Mr. SUMNER. I do not like to discuss things forever that have been discussed so often; I have said so much on this matter that I feel ashamed to add another word; and yet, as the Senator from Iowa returns to the assault, perhaps I may return to the defense.

I tried to show last evening that in introducing this proposition I was simply acting on the practice of this Government in other respects, and upon the practice of mankind universally, everywhere; and my friend from Ohio [Mr. WADE] reminds me that the argument of the Senator from Iowa, a few days ago, was one of the strongest illustrations of what I said. He induced the Senate to agree to appoint a new Assistant Secretary of the Navy merely to allow the actual Assistant Secretary to go abroad because his presence could give a little more clat to a certain service. That is his argument, and under his argument, yielding to its pressure, we appointed a new functionary in the Department of the Navy.

Now, if I can have the attention of the Senator from Iowa for one moment, I wish to put to him a practical question. If he had important business, say with the mayor of New York, which he wished to present in the best way possible, I have no doubt my friend would count naturally upon his own character, and justly; he would believe that any agent of his presenting himself to the mayor of New York would be well received; he doubtless would be well received; but if, for instance, there were two persons whose services he might employ, one with the rank of general and the other with the rank of colonel, each equal, perhaps, in abilities and in fitness, I have no doubt that my friend, who will not listen to me, however, while I am addressing him—

Mr. GRIMES. I am all attention.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators, according to the rules, must address the Chair.

Mr. SUMNER. I have no doubt my friend would select for his service the general rather than the colonel. He knows enough of human nature to know that the general, on his arrival, would have a prompter reception than the colonel. It is useless to say in reply that behind the agent is the same personage. I assume all that, but I wish to secure to that same personage the best reception possible, and the highest facilities for his representative when he arrives at his destination. I wish now to secure the same thing for my country, and I believe—I do not like to bring my own personal testimony into a matter like this—but I believe, according to such opportunities of observation as I have had, now running over a considerable period of my life, that the interests of the country would be promoted by this change. I believe that business would be facilitated and opportunities of influence afforded.

I make no allusion to such topics as have been playfully introduced into this discussion; it is a matter of comparative indifference what place a man may have at a dinner table; but I do wish to secure facilities in business and respect for the representatives of my country to the largest degree possible.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 18, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Cowan, Cragin, Dixon, Foster, Guthrie, Harris, Henderson, Johnson, Morgan, Norton, Pomeroy, Sherman, Sprague, Sumner, Wade, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Chandler, Clark, Davis, Edmunds, Fessenden, Grimes, Hendricks, Howard, Howe, Kirkwood, Lane of Indiana, Ramsey, Riddle, Trumbull, and Wiley—16.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Conness, Creswell, Doolittle, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Morrill, Nesmith, Nye, Poland, Saulsbury, Stewart, Van Winkle, and Wright—15.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I move an amendment on page 2, line twenty-nine of section one, to strike out the word "eighty" and insert "fifty."

Mr. JOHNSON. Does that reduce the amount of the secret service fund? Let it be read.

The Secretary read the amendment, which was to strike out "eighty" and insert "fifty;" so that the clause will read:

For contingent expenses of foreign intercourse, $50,000.

Mr. BUCKALEW. This covers the secret service fund.

Mr. SUMNER. I wish the Senator would be good enough to give some reason for the change. If he has any facts to present I should like to hear them.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. President, this is a time of peace, and an extraordinary appropriation which was proper during the war I suppose is no longer necessary. That is my only reason for moving the amendment.

Mr. TRUMBULL. In looking at the appropriation for the fiscal year 1860-61, which was the last year before the war, I notice that the appropriation for contingent expenses of foreign intercourse was $40,000. In this bill it is $80,000. The Senator from Pennsylvania, as I understand him, moves to strike out $80,000 and insert $50,000, making the appropriation $10,000 more than it was before the war. My attention has been called to this appropriation and also to the appropriation immediately before it, "for contingent expenses of all the missions abroad, $60,000." The appropriation "for contingent expenses of all the missions abroad" for the fiscal year 1860-61 was $20,000. It is three times as much now. I do not know that the increase is not right; but it seems to me the explanation should come from those who treble the expenses for incidental expenses as they existed before the war. It is doubled with reference to the appropriation which the Senator from Pennsylvania has moved to reduce, and it is trebled in reference to the other one. Unless there is some explanation showing why it is necessary to have three times as large a contingent foreign mission fund now as there was in 1861, and twice as large a fund for contingent expenses of foreign intercourse, I shall be inclined to vote for the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator from Illinois has very frankly told us that he has no facts on the question; that he knows nothing, in short, about it, and that he really knows no reason for the reduction proposed. How does the case stand? Here is a bill which has come, in the first place, from the House of Representatives, where it was considered after having been reported by the proper committee there. When reported there it was founded upon estimates which I presume that committee had carefully considered. I know something of its habits of business, and I presume those estimates were carefully gone over. The bill then came to the Senate, and was referred to the Committee on Finance. To what extent they considered these items, which had already been considered by the committee of the other House, I have no means of knowing. I have not the honor of being a member of that committee. I presume, however, they were, to a certain extent, considered, or at least there is a habit on the part of our committee to recognize, to a certain extent, the labors of the kindred committee in the other House. And now the question is whether we here, having no knowledge on the subject, shall presume to open this appropriation which has already passed the House on the recommendation of the committee of that body having it properly in charge. I am free to say I have no special information on the subject; my attention has not been called to it. I did not imagine that there would be any proposal to change one of these estimates. I have made no inquiry at the Department of State on the subject, nor have I received any communication.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is this larger than the sum appropriated during the last three or four years?

Mr. FESSENDEN. The same as it was last year.

Mr. SUMNER. I supposed it was about the same.

Mr. FESSENDEN. One argument of the Senator from Massachusetts I was particularly struck with; that is that this matter had been considered by the committee of the other House. Well, the committee of the House considered very carefully the second section on a request made by the Department. The Department had given its reasons for that section, stated the necessity for it, and the committee of the House had considered it very carefully and put in the second section; but the Senate has struck it out on the idea that by and by we can change the Department of the Attorney General. I take it for granted that the honorable chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary will feel bound now to bring in a bill in which that matter will be all arranged, because that was what he predicated his motion upon. We are therefore in the habit sometimes of not being governed by the House when it advises a thing, even if it is indorsed by a committee of this body.

Now, sir, with reference to these two items, it is a fact unquestionably, as stated by my honorable friend from Illinois, that before the war the appropriation for one of these contingencies was $20,000, and for the other, $40,000. When the war came on it was represented, undoubtedly with truth, (I had something to do with raising these items,) that necessarily in time of war the communications abroad would be very great and very frequent, and that there would be a great many occasions when money must be spent; and I took the responsibility of advising that these estimates be raised for that reason. Now, I have taken a little pains to inquire what this means. The first provision is for the ordinary expenses of our missions—postages and little items of expense.

Mr. SUMNER. Sending the dispatch-bag.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is a considerable expense, but much less than it used to be, because the Department used to send special agents with those bags, but now they go by mail. That item of expense, as Mr. Hunter informed me this morning, is reduced instead of being enlarged. I took pains to inquire why this large appropriation should be kept up and I could not get any advice on that subject at the Department of State. The Secretary is not there. Mr. Hunter, who communicated very freely, said the money had been spent very carefully and cautiously under both these items of appropriation. The first item of $60,000 is confined to the ordinary expenses of our missions abroad; I suppose arrangements about books sent out, and things of that sort—I do not know what exactly. I cannot for the life of me understand why, if our missions abroad have not been increased largely, now that we have got back to a time of peace what used to cost $20,000 should now cost $60,000. I feel bound to say that I cannot understand why it should be.

With regard to the $80,000 item, the principal portion of it is for secret service. During the war they were obliged to have a great many agents in reference to blockade-running. That is all at an end. They were obliged to employ a good many spies; they were obliged to send messengers in different directions; and that made the expense large. I take it also that, as seems to be customary now the way the affairs of the world are conducted, something was spent to pay men for writing articles on our side in foreign newspapers. Then special agents were sent out; Bishop Hughes went once, Thurlow Weed went once, and divers other gentlemen.

Mr. JOHNSON. Counsel were sent out—Mr. Evarts, for example.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Yes, counsel were sent out to attend to some matters. That was during the war when questions arose which rendered these expenses necessary. I confess that I cannot understand, now that we have got back to a time of peace, why those expenses should be continued which were then represented to be necessary on account of the war, and which undoubtedly were. True, something may be required with reference to our troubles on the border, though those are principally revenue matters; with regard to our fishery difficulties there may be some special agents required, and also with regard to Mexican affairs. But when the main matter which increased the expenses so largely has been disposed of, I cannot see for myself why it is necessary to continue such large appropriations for these items. At the same time I confess that I have been unable to get any specific information on the subject why it should be so, because the Secretary himself is absent from the city.

As to the estimates acted upon by the House of Representatives, I suppose they were submitted to the Committee on Appropriations there just as they were to our committee here. I was not present when the committee acted on this bill; but I take it for granted they looked at these items and then at the estimates. They saw that the estimates came in, $60,000 and $80,000. They did not know why, and they passed the $60,000 and the $80,000. This is all the information we had.

Mr. GRIMES. I suppose it was made up from the bill of last year.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Yes, the amount appropriated last year was taken instead of going back to the year before the war.

Mr. COWAN. I suppose there is no mode by which anybody can ascertain the disposition made of this fund. I suppose it is not intended that there should be.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I suppose there is no committee, except perhaps the committee of the other House on the expenditure of the State Department, that could look into it. I was told by Mr. Hunter—and I have no doubt it is true—that the money we have appropriated heretofore for these purposes has been expended economically and carefully under the direction of the President. I have no doubt that whatever we appropriate now will be so expended.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I suppose we could ascertain how it is expended except the secret service money; the other contingencies are reported.

Mr. COWAN. The secret service money is what I referred to.

Mr. TRUMBULL. That is never inquired into. That is only a part of this appropriation.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It would undoubtedly be laid open to a committee of Congress, if a committee should inquire into it, but I do not think there is any necessity for that. The money is undoubtedly properly spent. Whatever complaints may be made in regard to the Secretary of State in other particulars, or in any particular by anybody, no one, certainly, pretends that he is a dishonest man in regard to money.

Mr. JOHNSON. Does the honorable member understand that the whole of these appropriations have to be expended?

Mr. FESSENDEN. I have no information on the subject. There has been no call for a deficiency at any rate. The fact stands before us, that in the year 1860–61, before the war, $20,000 and $40,000 were the appropriations that were deemed necessary for these expenses. We have got through with the extraordinary expenses of the war, and now, in time of peace, the estimates that come in for this service are just the war estimates. It is for the Senate to judge whether they will continue them or not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I think upon the same principle we had better reduce the $60,000 item, which is just three times what it was in 1860–61; it was $20,000. I will move now to reduce it one half, to $30,000. I move to strike out "sixty" and insert "thirty" in line twenty-seven of section one.

Mr. JOHNSON. Perhaps that does not stand on the same footing with the other. The other was the secret service fund, was it not?

Mr. TRUMBULL. This is "for the contingent expenses of all the missions abroad, $60,000." In 1860–61 the appropriation was "for contingent expenses of all the missions abroad, $20,000."

Mr. JOHNSON. I was about to say that I suppose none of the missions abroad have been diminished. There are just as many now as there were before, and that appropriation was necessary to meet them abroad.

Mr. CONNESS. Only during the war.

Mr. JOHNSON. They are all there now.

Mr. CONNESS. They were all there during the war.

Mr. JOHNSON. They have not been diminished that I know of; and that estimate was an estimate to meet the contingent expenses of the missions which were abroad; and it would not be advisable, perhaps, to reduce it now.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Twenty thousand dollars answered before the war. The expenses were put up in consequence of the war and in consequence of the difficulty of communicating, as I presume. It seems a large portion of this money has gone for arrangements in regard to the transmission of dispatches. Now, no reason is given for increasing this item to $60,000. The chairman of the committee gives no reason for increasing it from $20,000 to $60,000. I think it would be safe to put it at $30,000. I admit it is doing it very much at random, and I would not vote to reduce it at all if anybody could give a reason why it should be $60,000; but it seems to me if $20,000 answered before the war, $30,000 will do now.

Mr. JOHNSON. The chairman of the committee of course knows nothing but what he collects from the estimates. I suppose that when the State Department estimated $60,000 as necessary to meet expenses of this description, it was only because they knew that it would be required, and I think it would be perhaps hazardous to strike it down one half now without any information that the estimate made by the Secretary is an extravagant one.

Mr. SUMNER. It seems to me it is a leap in the dark. I do not think we should take it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is incumbent on the Senator from Massachusetts to show why it is increased, not for us to show why it should be diminished. Let him show the necessity for the increase; it is an affirmative proposition; and that is not shown; but then I only wish to say in regard to it, that if we reduce this item to $30,000 it will bring attention to it; the bill has to go back to the House of Representatives, and if any information comes in showing it to be necessary—

Mr. FESSENDEN. I can now give my friend a little information on the subject. My clerk has taken the pains to go back to 1851 to find out the appropriations annually. In 1851 the appropriation for the contingent expenses of all the missions abroad was $40,000. So it went along. In 1854 there were two appropriations, both amounting to $82,000; in 1856, $96,000; in 1857, $75,000; in 1858, $75,000; in 1859, $50,000; in 1860, $50,000; and in 1861, $20,000; and then it went up to $40,000, $50,000, and $60,000. If we put it now at $60,000, it is not so high as it was in 1857 and 1858; but I presume there was included, probably, in some of these appropriations the loss by exchange. For contingent expenses of foreign intercourse the appropriation was $60,000, from the year 1856 down to 1860 inclusive. In 1861 it was reduced to $40,000, and in 1862 it was $40,000. In 1863 it was put up to $100,000; that was on my motion; and since then it has been $80,000.

This shows that the year 1860–61 was an exceptional year, for what reason I do not know.

I think, therefore, that it would not be safe under the circumstances to go below $40,000 in this particular clause, and perhaps we ought not to go below $60,000 in the clause which my friend from Pennsylvania moved to reduce to $50,000.

Several SENATORS, (to Mr. TRUMBULL.) Say $40,000.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I will modify my amendment, and move to strike out "sixty" and insert "forty," so as to make this appropriation $40,000.

Mr. SUMNER. Again I say the Senator leaps in the dark. He does not know why he reduces it to $40,000. The Senator from Maine has already given us estimates for preceding years showing that sometimes it has gone even above the estimates for this year. The estimate before us is one that has been supplied to the committee in the other House from the Department. They had a reason for it. We do not know what the reason is. I am not informed of it. My attention has not been directed to this subject. Had it been, I should have looked into it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I would suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania whether he had not better raise the other item, which he moved to strike down, to $60,000 instead of $50,000.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I move, then, to reconsider the vote adopting my amendment.

The motion to reconsider was rejected; there being, on a division—ayes 9, noes 18.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate concur in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. FESSENDEN. I ask for a separate vote on the amendment striking out section two.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will take the question on the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole collectively, except that which the Senator from Maine has asked to have excepted.

The amendments were concurred in.

The excepted amendment was to strike out the second section, as follows:

And be it further enacted, That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, an officer in the Department of State to be called "Solicitor to the Department of State," at an annual salary of $3,000, to commence on the 1st of July, 1866, and the amount necessary to pay the same is hereby appropriated.

Mr. SUMNER called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 21, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chandler, Clark, Conness, Davis, Edmunds, Grimes, Guthrie, Hendricks, Howard, Howe, Johnson, Kirkwood, Morrill, Poland, Ramsey, Riddle, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Trumbull, and Wade—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Cowan, Cragin, Dixon, Fessenden, Foster, Harris, Morgan, Norton, Pomeroy, Sumner, Van Winkle, Williams, and Yates—13.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Buckalew, Creswell, Doolittle, Henderson, Lane of Indiana, Lane of Kansas, McDougall, Nesmith, Nye, Saulsbury, Willey, Wilson, and Wright—15.

So the amendment was concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. LLOYD, Chief Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed without amendment the joint resolution (S. R. No. 61) to extend the time for the construction of the Western Pacific railroad, and the bill (S. No. 186) amendatory of an act to provide for the reports of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bill and joint resolutions, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 597) to authorize the use in post offices of weights of the denomination of grammes;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 140) to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish to each State one set of the standard weights and measures of the metric system; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 141) to authorize the President to appoint a special commissioner to facilitate the adoption of a uniform coinage between the United States and foreign countries.

The message also announced that the House of Representatives had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 563) to regulate the time and fix the place for holding the circuit court of the United States in the district of Virginia, and for other purposes, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WILLIAM LAWRENCE of Ohio, Mr. FRANCIS THOMAS of Maryland, and Mr. JOHN L. DAWSON of Pennsylvania, managers at the same on its part.

MILITARY ACADEMY BILL.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the West Point Academy appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 37) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the year ending the 30th of June, 1867, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Finance with amendments, the first of which was in line seventeen to increase the appropriation "for increase and expense of the library" from $1,000 to $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line twenty-four to increase the appropriation "for repairs of officers' quarters" from $1,500 to $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert these items after line thirty:

For reflooring academic buildings and barracks, $6,000.

For the purchase of fuel for warming mess-hall, shoemakers' and tailors' shops, $2,000.

For materials for quarters for subaltern officers, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the following provisos at the end of the bill:

Provided, That no part of the sums appropriated by the provisions of this act shall be expended in violation of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to prescribe an oath of office, and for other purposes," approved July 2, 1862; And provided further, That no part of the moneys appropriated by this or any other act shall be applied to the pay or subsistence of any cadet from any State declared to be in rebellion against the Government of the United States, appointed after the 1st day of January, 1866, until such State shall have been returned to its original relations to the Union under and by virtue of an act or joint resolution of Congress for that case made and provided.

Mr. WILSON. I hope we shall have an explanation of that amendment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The first proviso is entirely unnecessary:

That no part of the sums appropriated by the provisions of this act shall be expended in violation of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to prescribe an oath of office, and for other purposes," approved July 2, 1862.

That is the law now, and we propose to strike the proviso out, because it is a mere repetition of the existing law. The next proviso, "that no part of the moneys appropriated by this or any other act shall be applied to the pay or subsistence of any cadet from any State declared to be in rebellion against the Government of the United States," &c., if it should stand, would prevent the President from appointing any cadet from those States even though nominated by loyal Representatives. It can apply to only a very few individuals, and it was thought to be invidious and unwise to insert such a provision. Most of the vacancies in the rebel States have been filled up by the nominations of cadets from the free States. I suppose there are some from Iowa appointed for Virginia, and some from Massachusetts appointed for Mississippi. There are but a few of them left; how many I do not know, but the number is very small. It looked to the committee to be rather small business to say, while there are more or less loyal people down there, that the President should not have the power, on the nomination of a Representative who may be loyal, to fill up these places. It is throwing very small stones at the object we propose to hit. We thought it best to reach that object directly.

Mr. WILSON. I have certainly no objection to striking out the last proviso, but the proposition to strike out the first struck me as rather strange.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We have struck it out in all the bills, and the Senate have agreed to it, because it is only repeating what the law now is.

Mr. WILSON. With the Senator's explanation I am entirely satisfied.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. HOWE. In reference to the amendment just made touching the appointment of cadets from the southern districts the proviso was struck out, I understand. I wish to inquire if there is any authority under the law for appointing cadets from those districts until there are Representatives here to nominate them.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not know that there is. If not, they will not be appointed at all. If there is nobody to nominate they cannot be appointed.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Will not the practice of appointing be continued unless we stop it? Why not make it certain that it cannot be done?

Mr. FESSENDEN. When some have been appointed from the free States during the war it would be very invidious to refuse a few appointments on the nomination of loyal Representatives.

Mr. RAMSEY. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee having this bill in charge whether there is any provision prohibiting the appointment of a cadet at West Point who has served in the rebel army. There is a case of that kind in the Naval Academy where a young man was appointed who had served in that army. I think that at this time probably it would be well to put in a provision against such an appointment.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not think it is to be presumed that that will be done. If it was done in one case by misunderstanding probably it will not be done again. I do not think it worth while to take it for granted such a thing will occur. I do not think there is any danger of it.

Mr. RAMSEY. What is to prevent it?

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think we have some law on the subject preventing payment to any such persons. It is a matter that I care nothing about. The Finance Committee came to the conclusion that it was not worth while to interfere with the matter, but that it was better to let it stand as it now is.

The amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

Mr. WILSON. Is it too late to move an amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is not amendable after it has been ordered to its third reading.

Mr. WILSON. I move a reconsideration of the last vote for the purpose of allowing me to offer an amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. What is it proposed to offer?

Mr. WILSON. I wish to add a provision that nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize or permit the appointment as a cadet of any person who has served in any capacity in the military or naval service of the so-called confederate States during the late rebellion; but any such appointment shall be held to be illegal and void.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There is no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I now move to amend the bill by adding as a new section the following:

And be it further enacted, That nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize or permit the appointment as a cadet of any person who has served in any capacity in the military or naval service of the so-called confederate States in the late rebellion, but any such appointment shall be held illegal and void.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator from Massachusetts will not accomplish his purpose by that. His amendment is that nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize this. There is nothing in this act about it. He wants to put in a provision that nobody who has served in the rebel service shall be appointed a cadet, but this amendment would simply limit appointments under this act.

Mr. WILSON. I will put it in this shape:

And be it further enacted, That no person who has served in any capacity in the military or naval service of the so-called confederate States during the late rebellion shall hereafter receive an appointment as a cadet at the Military Academy.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am inclined to think that there were a good many young men of some fifteen or sixteen years of age who were employed as clerks in the military or naval service of the rebels who, perhaps, ought not to be excluded. They were most of them in a state of starvation; they were obliged to take some employment in order to live; and I think it would be better to leave the matter to the Government. The cadets are appointed by the members of Congress, I believe, except some fifteen or twenty who are appointed by the President at large. I think it would be better to leave it to the Government.

Mr. WILSON. We educated at West Point some young men that turned traitors. Now, I am against educating at West Point any men who have been traitors. I think any person who has served in the rebel army or navy should never enter West Point, or the Naval Academy, never be educated by this Government.

Mr. SHERMAN. I would ask my friend from Massachusetts why he does not extend his amendment to the Naval Academy. I produced testimony here of the most conclusive character that a young man in the Naval Academy had served willingly in the rebel service, and yet he is now being educated at the Naval School. I think the provision ought to extend both to the Army and the Navy. The joint resolution which I introduced and sent to the Committee on Naval Affairs relative to the case to which I allude I have not heard of since.

Mr. GRIMES. I will state to the Senator from Ohio that that testimony which he introduced before the committee, and which he thought was so conclusive, turned out, upon a more thorough investigation, to be somewhat more doubtful than he imagined, and the young man alluded to was appointed upon the recommendation of the very men who wrote the letters to the Senator from Ohio on the subject.

Mr. SHERMAN. The testimony was very conclusive that the young man had been in the rebel service.

Mr. GRIMES. The case has not been acted on yet; and it is due to the young man that I should say, as he is still in the Academy, that he was never in the rebel service proper. He joined in the State of Kentucky a home guard, was never sworn into service, and very shortly after he found out the way in which the guard was to be used he abandoned it entirely and never took service under the rebel flag.

Mr. SHERMAN. He was in Backner's guard, and the testimony was that he and all his family were against the Government all the time during the war.

Mr. GRIMES. When all the testimony shall be presented I think the Senator will be satisfied that the ex parte testimony upon which he pronounces judgment here against that young man may possibly be erroneous.

Mr. SHERMAN. It may be. I do not vouch for it.

Mr. CLARK. We need not try that case; but it seems to me very proper that the amendment should apply to the naval as well as to the military department of the Government.

Mr. GRIMES. I am perfectly willing that it should be applied to the Naval Academy.

Mr. JOHNSON. This is the West Point bill.

Mr. CLARK. The naval bill has gone through. There is no other bill to come on which we can put it. I will move that amendment, "Military or Naval Academy."

Mr. WILSON. I accept that amendment. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment, as modified, will be read.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

And be it further enacted, That no person who has served in any capacity in the military or naval service of the so-called confederate States during the late rebellion shall hereafter receive an appointment as a cadet at the Military or Naval Academy.

Mr. CONNESS. That would leave such a person in, if now there. It says, "shall hereafter."

Mr. JOHNSON. Do you want to turn them out?

Mr. CONNESS. Yes, turn out anybody of that kind, certainly. I should like to know whether the Senator from Maryland would not turn such a person out.

Mr. JOHNSON. No, I would not. I can imagine a great many boys that I would not turn out, boys in the situation in which I suppose a good many of them to have been. If they had gone in when they were seventeen or eighteen years of age, with knowledge on their part, it would be a different thing; but I can very readily believe there were boys of twelve, thirteen, or fourteen years of age who went into that service without having any idea at all that they were offending against the Government, and who may be just as true and loyal now as our own sons.

Mr. CONNESS. I can very readily believe that there were thousands and tens of thousands who went into the rebellion that did not know what they were about. I think the leaders did not know what they were about. If they did they never would have gone in.

Mr. JOHNSON. They did know what they were about.

Mr. CONNESS. We differ about that. But while it may be true, as stated by the Senator from Maryland, that there are many boys who participated in the rebellion who ought not to be held to a very strict responsibility for it, or punished for it, I think this country has a great many boys in it who are more worthy than they, and who ought to be promoted in preference. If the fact be as stated that there is a boy in the Naval Academy or at West Point of the class referred to, he should not remain there, in my judgment. We have had enough experience of furnishing talent, organized and educated talent, to the enemies of the country at the expense of the national Treasury. There ought to be an end to it. I hope that those who offered the amendment will change it in that respect.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I suggest to my friend that I do not think you can carry it on this bill so far as to legislate for an individual case; and there is only one, and about that there is great doubt whether it would apply to him or not.

Mr. CONNESS. If the form were changed it would apply to the case.

Mr. FESSENDEN. But it is not pretended that there is more than one case about which there is any question, and that is very doubtful. I hope this bill may not be incumbered any further.

Mr. CONNESS. I have no strenuousness about it.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I observe from the reading of the amendment that there is no distinction taken between those who voluntarily went in and those who were forced into the rebel service. There ought certainly to be a distinction. Some boys may have been conscripted in against their will, forced in at the point of the bayonet, and who ought not to be held responsible to any such rule as this.

Mr. GRIMES. They were not conscripted at the age alluded to.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Suppose they were forced into the service, are they to be excluded for that reason? It is one thing as to those that went in voluntarily; it is another as to those that were forced in. I think there certainly ought to be a distinction. The amendment ought to say that those who voluntarily engaged in the service should be excluded. I move to amend it by inserting that word "voluntarily."

Mr. FESSENDEN. I hope not. If you put in "voluntarily," they will prove, every one of them, that they went in involuntarily. To exclude all is the only way to keep them out.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I ask the Senator from Maine if he desires to keep out those who were forced to go in.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I would rather not run the risk of getting rebels in by putting in the word "voluntarily."

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I think that there is a great difference in engaging in a service, whether one goes in voluntarily, of his own free will, or whether he is forced in at the point of the bayonet. In the one case I should feel very different toward the individual than I would in the other.

Mr. GRIMES. It cannot apply to this case, because nobody was conscripted in the rebel lines under the age of eighteen, and no conscription has been made within the rebel confederacy within two years. No one can go to the Naval Academy after he is eighteen years of age.

Mr. JOHNSON. I thought they conscripted those of fourteen toward the close.

Mr. GRIMES. I think not. They went in voluntarily, if they went in at the age of fourteen, I think.

Mr. JOHNSON. Of course, many went in voluntarily at fourteen; but my recollection is that the conscription was as low as fourteen toward the close.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is no great hardship in excluding any of these persons; there are plenty left from whom to make a choice.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I will take the sense of the Senate on the question I suggested, by moving to insert the word "voluntarily" before "served;" and I ask for the yeas and nays on that amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As I am to go on the record and am very sensitive on this question, I wish to state the reason why I shall vote "nay." It may be, possibly, that those who have been involuntarily in the rebel service are not as bad as those who went in on their own motion; but the country is full of boys, the sons of heroes who have fought on the right side of this rebellion, who are deserving of these places if anybody in the world is; and without going into the question of the precise degree of consideration that ought to be accorded to involuntary rebels, if I may use such a term, there are enough who are not open to suspicion to fill all these places. That is my reason for voting against the amendment.

Mr. HOWARD. I beg to inquire in what way the question is to be settled whether a person was in the rebel service voluntarily or involuntarily, and who is to settle it.

Mr. CLARK, and others. Let us settle it here by a vote.

Mr. HOWARD. I think we had better settle it here, and leave no question of that kind to be adjudicated by anybody else.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. It is not very long since I was reading over the report of the reconstruction committee, and one of the articles of amendment to the Constitution which they provided was that those men who voluntarily adhered to the rebellion should not vote until a certain time. How is that to be settled?

Mr. HOWARD. By law.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. But it is a fact whether they went in voluntarily or involuntarily; you cannot settle it by a law. It is a question of fact, and upon that question of fact whether they went in voluntarily or involuntarily depends the guilt or the innocence, just as in the commission of any other offense. The idea of holding a person responsible for what he does under compulsion, by force, at the point of the bayonet, driven by a squad of men who perhaps took a young man and forced him into the army at the peril of his life, is a very different thing from what it is when he voluntarily goes in of his own accord.

Now, Mr. President, in relation to these appointments to the Naval Academy, and to the Military Academy, they are appointments, so far as I understand, that are generally apportioned throughout the country to each congressional district. The various congressional districts of the country claim the right to have these scholars or cadets sent from the districts, and in order to select the one most proper to be put at the Academy, the right has been given by law to the members of Congress to select them. Now, the right being given by law to the members of Congress to select, suppose there is a member of Congress from Kentucky, or Tennessee, or Maryland, or Virginia, or any of those States where some of the boys have gone into the rebellion, who has an appointment to make. It becomes a question for this Representative to determine, and determine for himself; he has the right to make the selection, and we by law now assume to declare, if this amendment is adopted, that he shall not select any young man who has been in the rebel service, who went in voluntarily, but he may select one if he has been conscripted and forced to go in. I do not see any injustice in it, and I think that we ought to draw the distinction between the voluntary and involuntary rebels, between the rebels who of their own intent made this rebellion, and those who were forced into it when military authority or power was established over them. I would carry that distinction out in very many ways, holding those responsible who moved in it, who voluntarily went into it, not those who were forced into it.

Mr. CLARK. We have had in this matter a bitter experience. We had a great many young men educated at the Military Academy and at the Naval School who, in the country's emergency, turned enemies to the country. I do not want that that experience ever should be repeated, or that there should be a possibility of its being repeated if there should be again another war. "Then," suggests the Senator from California, [Mr. CONNESS,] "we had better be careful." That is what I desire to do; and I desire to say to those gentlemen who may have the appointments from those districts which are located in the rebel or confederate country, "You shall not appoint anybody who has ever been in that service," and I would not leave to any such member to say whether the service had been voluntary or involuntary, but I would make the fact that he had been in that service conclusive against him. It is a very different thing to give a vote to a man who has been voluntarily or involuntarily in the service of the confederacy from what it is to put a boy who has been in that service in the Army or Navy, where he may do you mischief.

I do not want, as I said in the beginning, that our experience should be repeated. I think for the present we had better keep our Academies, Naval and Military, pure from any such influence, and if by and by, as years roll around, we find the loyalty of the country returning, so that circumstances will warrant it, then it will be time enough to extend the law; but now we should make the exclusion final.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think my friend from New Hampshire rather exaggerates what has heretofore occurred at the Military Academy. I had occasion some time ago, with the aid of the gentleman who is now at the head of the Academy, to look at the number who had joined the rebellion, among those who had been educated at the Academy, and it was comparatively a very small percentage; and I think it may be safely said now, looking to the experience that those who joined it have had, that no man who will ever be educated there in the future will be found raising his arm against the Government. If there are men who have suffered more, perhaps, than any others during the rebellion, it is those who have forfeited their claim to public confidence by having joined the war against the Government by whom they were educated. And when my friend from New Hampshire speaks of the experience we have had in the past, I think he misapplies the term as applicable to the question before the Senate. We have had no such experience as to teach us how to act in the particular case now before us. When those who were educated there and who did join the rebellion were sent to the Military Academy we were at peace with each other; no man dreamed at that time that there would be such a war as afterwards unfortunately turned out; and I suppose no boy ever was sent to the Academy who during the period of his education or for years afterward thought of raising his hand against the Government; and those who were most conspicuous in the service of the rebellion were men who had fought very gallantly and with great skill, and had contributed in a great measure to raise the military reputation of the country in defense of the United States in the war with Mexico. Their fault has been (and it is a fault which I do not think the Senate exactly appreciate) that they were educated in that part of the United States where the doctrine of secession was taught as a constitutional doctrine, really believed in. The effect of that teaching was not confined to the South; a great many men at the North entertained the same opinion; a great many at the North before the rebellion and during the rebellion avowed the same opinion. At the time the fugitive slave act was pending before Congress, and more strikingly after it had become a law and it was called in question in some of the States, a great many men who have been thoroughly true to the Union except in that particular, were resolved to resist by force the execution of that law, and avowed that determination.

Mr. CLARK. Does the Senator allege that as any excuse for these men who were false to the Government?

Mr. JOHNSON. Not at all. I am excusing them from ignorance. The reason I referred to it was merely for the purpose of palliating in some measure what had been done. No one is further from justifying it than I am. Nobody regretted it or condemned it more than I did; but while regretting it and condemning it, I could not help feeling upon my own judgment the influence of the considerations to which I have alluded, that although they committed a crime, in my judgment, against the United States, and were guilty of the offense of treason, the highest of all crimes provided against in the Constitution, yet they were made to believe, and I have no doubt in hundreds of instances did conscientiously believe, that it was no crime. But they have waked up now—that I have no doubt of—to a conviction that in the past they committed a great blunder. Now, without mentioning names, and no question that any Senator can put to me can induce me to mention the name, because it would be indecorous, and therefore no Senator will ask me, I met a southern gentleman who was a member of the Peace Convention, of which I happened to be one, in the cars here the day before yesterday; he was a southern man, very warm, very decided, very zealous, and, as I thought and told him at the time, if he succeeded in controlling the deliberations of the convention war would certainly be the result, and that their institution of slavery, to which they were so much attached, would necessarily fall. He looked careworn when I saw him the day before yesterday only. I recognized him and he recognized me, and he immediately took his seat by me, and said, quite in a sorrowful tone, and I have no doubt in great sincerity, "You were right, and I was wrong; I admit that I was wrong; God forgive me." I have no doubt he spoke with as much sincerity as a man can feel; and that he was sincere, equally sincere, when he was a member of that convention I have no doubt, not the slightest.

I only refer to these things for the purpose of showing that there are circumstances which should induce us to grant some little indulgence to our brethren of the South, and especially to the boys of the tender age of some twelve, thirteen, or fourteen, who were led away by the example of those around them, upon whose judgment it was very natural that they should rely.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, supposing the facts and considerations to be as stated by the Senator from Maryland, supposing these people did go into secession from false notions of education, nevertheless the fact is so that many men who were educated at the Military Academy engaged in the rebellion. They had the benefit of an education which qualified them all the more to do mischief toward this Government. So in the Naval Academy. Now, does not that experience teach us to be cautious? And would it be wise to appoint young men who have been engaged in the rebellion into these places to be educated, when, as said by the Senator from Vermont, there are so many young men who have been engaged on the other side, or who are the children of heroes on the other side, who would desire these places? I desire to say nothing in disparagement of any person who repents of the evil he has done, but I certainly would not give a man who had committed treason an opportunity to commit it again, and make that treason all the more effectual, by educating him in the service of the United States. Treason committed once is enough for all time to come; there should be no opportunity of renewing it. I think we should not put these boys into these schools.

Mr. HOWE. If the question were whether one of these young men should be sent to the penitentiary for life or should pay the forfeit of his life upon the scaffold, the inquiry whether their service in the rebellion had been voluntary or involuntary I think would be a pertinent one, and it would be proper for us to examine and determine that fact before executing either of those sentences. That is not the question. Undoubtedly, as the Senator from Maryland has said, this rebellion originated in a faulty education. Undoubtedly he is quite correct in saying that that education was not all obtained in the districts in which the rebellion had its origin; that we participated, were to some extent responsible for that education. Let us get rid of that responsibility hereafter. The only part we ever had in that education was in sitting and hearing the "right" asserted and the threat made year after year and never taking any steps to guard against it. And now we are in danger of perfecting that education by showing the world that we cannot to-day, with all we have seen of the fruits of that education, bring our minds to discriminate between loyalty and disloyalty, between fidelity to the Government and treason against the Government.

Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland thinks that they have got over the effects of that education; that they have now been brought to see that they have committed, not a crime—he does not say that—but a blunder; and in evidence of that he recites a conversation that he had a day or two since with one who participated in that blunder, which I prefer to call a crime. It suggested to me the fact that this morning I received a newspaper which contained a notice of a demonstration made I think in the city of Raleigh in commemoration of the life and services of General Jackson of the rebel army, known as Stonewall Jackson. It also contained quite a lengthy account of a similar demonstration made, if I recollect aright, in the city of Lynchburg, in Virginia, where the whole city formed a procession, the city authorities, all the societies, the fire companies, everything like an organization in the city turned out into the street to do honor to the memory of General Jackson; and who was General Jackson? One of the renowned chiefs in the perpetration of that which the Senator from Maryland characterizes as a blunder—

Mr. JOHNSON. I did not say so.

Mr. HOWE. I so understood.

Mr. JOHNSON. The honorable member is generally so fair that I am sure he will do me justice. I did not say it was a blunder alone; I said it was a crime—the offense of treason. That may be called a blunder in one sense, but not a blunder as contradistinguished from the blunder of a crime—a pretty fatal blunder.

Mr. HOWE. I certainly did not mean to misquote the Senator from Maryland; I prefer his own language. Then he was the man who took a leading part in the perpetration of that crime. While they are doing honor in this way to these men whom the Senator from Maryland and myself agree in characterizing as criminals, have we any reason to suppose that they have learned really to regard that conduct even as a blunder? They think it an honor, they think it a credit, they think it a glory, and by all these demonstrations they are trying to teach us that it is a glory; and while they are so careful to shower these honors upon all those who have died in that cause what are we doing?

Sir, I saw not long since a statement in the papers which I cannot help but credit, that an application was made to one of the officers in this Government, on the part of the cadets in the Military Academy at West Point, for permission to inscribe upon the guns there, which had been captured from the rebels, the names of the fields on which they had been captured, and that permission was refused for a very amiable motive, I have no sort of doubt. The argument was, that as these gentlemen were coming back, we must leave nowhere any mementoes that could taunt them with, what? With the fact that there had been a difference, that there had been a war, that they had been criminals. I recollect of hearing that statement read from the papers one morning at a table where were sitting two crippled soldiers, each one of whom had lost part of a hand; and I recollect very distinctly, and shall recollect a great while, the manner with which one of them said to the other, "Well, my friend, it is time for you and me to go and bury ourselves; if we remain here on the earth these crippled hands of ours will forever be a reproach to these returning brothers that are coming back." We cannot allow the fact that the people of the United States captured a gun from their enemies to be inscribed on the gun for fear those enemies will have their feelings hurt! And when it is suggested here that cadets shall not be educated at this school of ours from districts which have no Representatives in the other House, objection is made to that. We object to it in the face and eyes of the fact that notwithstanding the law requires every one of those cadets to be nominated by the member from the district, these appointments are being made constantly from the districts where there is no Representative to make the nomination. When it is proposed to correct that, we strike it out. We say it is too small a matter for the Senate, and we strike it out.

Now, here is a proposition to prohibit the appointment of an individual to receive the advantages of that school who has been in this traitorous service, and it is proposed that we shall discriminate anew; that we shall not adopt that in those broad terms, but that we shall raise another question, whether his service was voluntary or involuntary, a question which we cannot try, which we cannot determine. As I said in the outset, if we were determining the question whether we would hang one of these men, I would stop and cavil on the question whether his crime was the result of choice or the result of force; but when we are determining only as to what class of young men shall be educated at the expense of the United States and for the military service of the United States, I think we shall run no risk of doing wrong to anybody if we say we will take those pupils from the class who have heretofore been loyal and true to the Government.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 8, nays 33; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cowan, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Guthrie, Hendricks, and Johnson—8.

NAYS—Messrs. Chandler, Clark, Conness, Cragin, Creswell, Edmunds, Fessenden, Foster, Grimes, Harris, Henderson, Howard, Howe, Kirkwood, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Morrill, Norton, Nye, Poland, Pomerooy, Ramsey, Sherman, Sprague, Stewart, Sumner, Trumbull, Van Winkle, Wade, Wiley, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—33.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Lane of Indiana, McDougall, Nesmith, Riddle, Saulsbury, and Wright—8.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I offer the following as an amendment to the amendment, to come in at the end of it:

Nor shall any vacancy in the Military Academy, from any congressional district, be filled while said district remains unrepresented in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Senator if that will not affect the appointments of soldiers that have been made from our Army to fill up these vacancies. During the war vacancies from the southern States were filled up by soldiers selected from the ranks.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is intended, and that is the design of the amendment, to take away from the President the authority to fill up these vacancies. It has been a question of construction, whether there was authority to fill vacancies where there was no Representative to make the recommendation. I think the general understanding of the law is that the President has no authority to fill up these vacancies; but still it has been exercised to some extent, and I believe we should make it certain.

Mr. SHERMAN. Does it go back?

Mr. TRUMBULL. No, sir; it is merely for the future. If there is any question about that, I will put in the word "hereafter."

Mr. WILSON. The word "hereafter" is in the preceding amendment.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Very well; then it is not necessary here. I do not intend it to go back. If the Senate concur in it, the object of the amendment is simply this: that the vacancies from the unrepresented districts in the rebellious States shall not be filled by appointment by the President.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is simply reenacting the proviso we struck out substantially. We struck it out on a vote of the Senate. I stated the reason that actuated the committee in advising the Senate to strike out that proviso. The greater portion of these appointments have already been made, and the vacancies filled up by President Lincoln, and taken from the several free States. Some from the State of Illinois were appointed for Mississippi, or some State down there. There are a few left, which it is for the advantage of the community, if we want to keep our Academy full, should be filled up. I will state one single thing that operated in the minds of the committee. We thought after allowing—if there was any such authority—President Lincoln to fill up the biggest part of them from the free States, it was rather small game to undertake to say that Mr. Johnson, being President, should not fill up the residue of them, if he had the power, from these States themselves. This is saying the same thing over again. I shall not vote for the amendment to the amendment for the reason that that is my opinion about it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator from Maine misunderstands the spirit of the amendment that I have offered. He attributes it—that would be the inference—to a desire to take from Mr. Johnson, because he is President, the power to fill up these vacancies, having allowed the power to be exercised by the President heretofore. Now, I say in all sincerity that I did not have Mr. Johnson in my mind in reference to it, as to his being President, or anybody else. My understanding of the law has been that these appointments should only be made on the recommendation of the Representative from the district. However, the law is not very clear on that subject. I think it ought to be specific, and that is the object of my amendment. I would have offered it just as quickly if Mr. Lincoln were President as I do now that Mr. Johnson is President. It is not intended as a reflection upon the present President, and I did not have such a thing in view.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is precisely the effect of it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I think Mr. Lincoln did wrong in filling up these vacancies, because in my judgment that was not the intention of the law. I will not say that he violated the law, for the law is not very clear upon the subject. I once looked into it and had some doubts as to whether the President was bound to appoint on the recommendation of a Representative in Congress. That has been the practice, and I think it should be made certain. I do not regard it as such a small matter. If we undertake to fill up the Military Academy on the recommendation of the Representatives from the congressional districts we should abide by it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. There either is authority in the President, or there is not. If there is not, he cannot appoint.

Mr. HOWE. He does appoint.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Very well. Now I say those appointments were made without complaint on our part, without raising the question of authority at all.

Mr. TRUMBULL. We did raise it before.

Mr. FESSENDEN. No, sir, the question was not raised; no complaint whatever was made about it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It has been discussed in the Senate heretofore.

Mr. FESSENDEN. It was not discussed until after the appointments were made, and after the State of Illinois and the State of Iowa and the State of Maine, for aught I know, had the advantage of sending young men to West Point as representing southern districts; and we submitted to it with a good grace, at any rate. Now, there are a few left; and it is proposed to take away the power, if it exists, just at this time. If it does not exist, the President will not exercise it; at least, it is to be presumed that he will not. We have got a full corps of professors in the Academy, and there are a few places in it vacant. It is important to the country that they should be filled up. Now that peace has returned, it would be a mean thing, in my judgment, to fill up those, in addition, from the northern States, if there are those who are not rebels that can be found in what were lately the confederate States; and we have already inserted a provision that they shall not be taken from anybody who served in the rebel army. I suppose we have power to put this provision on; but I am opposed to it for the reason that it looks, as I said before, as if we were just aiming it at the President with reference to the exercise of this power, if he has it; and if he has not got it, it is not to be presumed that he will exercise it; and therefore I am opposed to the amendment.

Mr. COWAN. It has just struck me that if we were to read in history now, after a lapse of one hundred and twenty-one years, that a member of the English Parliament, after the battle of Culloden, had moved in that Parliament that no Highland youth who had engaged in that rebellion should be educated in English colleges, what would we think of it? When Hoche suppressed the rebellion in La Vendée, what would we think if a member of the French Convention had got up and moved that no La Vendean who had taken part in that rebellion should have entrée into the Ecole Polytechnique?

Why, Mr. President, I should think the part of wise men would be to get the young men of the South educated with our young men in the colleges of the North, in the national schools. What is to be the effect of a contrary policy? Are we to make these young men patriots, defenders of the country, and attached to its institutions by exclusions of this kind? Mr. President, I fear me much for this policy.

I had a conversation to-day with a Senator of this body. At one time in my life, in my youth, I was wise enough, foolish enough, enterprising enough to project an expedition into Texas to aid General Houston in liberating Texas from the yoke of Mexico. I am free to-day to say that at that time, at the age of twenty years perhaps, I did not know what the quarrel was about. I did not stop to inquire what the quarrel was about. I had a notion that our people were fighting with some other people; that this blood of ours was in contest either with Indians or Mexicans or some other race for domination in Texas; and I was with our own people. My friend with whom I had this conversation said to me, "I was a soldier in the Mexican war; I went into it at the age of sixteen; and I am free to say that at that time I did not know what the precise point of quarrel was between this country and Mexico; I did not stop to inquire; my country was at war; and although sixteen years of age I volunteered, and I was present at the battles of Monterey and Buena Vista."

Mr. President, think of it, and Senators think of it! Would you exclude young men of that age, because they engaged in a contest in which all their neighbors and all their people were more or less involved, from the advantages which are extended to other young men of the country, and embitter and make more hostile to our institutions those young men? I think the true policy would be to endeavor, so far as we can, to get the young men of the South, those who have been misled and carried away into the rebellion, to come to the North, to come to our schools, and intermingle with our people, now that the great bone of contention has been gnawed to pieces in the struggle, that we may all harmonize together and feel that we have a common interest in defending a common republic.

I am satisfied from all the lessons of history that this policy of proscription, this policy of imposing punishments not fixed and regulated by law, not following upon conviction in a court of justice, is not only bad policy, not only a blunder, but a crime. I have no sympathy for the leaders of the rebellion; I have no sympathy for the bad men who fomented it, and who taught the various sections to hate each other; but for the people, for the youth of the people, I have no condemnation, particularly after what has taken place, and after they have suffered the calamities of war. That I take to be the just penalty, and they stand acquitted when it is paid.

Now, as was said by the Senator from Maine, and better said than I can say it, the idea that this remnant which belongs to the South by the Constitution and the laws, that the chances which remain to her since she has submitted should be taken away is painful; a melancholy example, I fear, of how far the passions of men may lead them to disregard, not only their true interests, but those of the country.

Mr. WILSON. The speech the Senator from Pennsylvania has just made, and the statement he has made to us in regard to his campaign in Texas, gives to me a key to his line of policy here, and I think I now know him a great deal better than I did. I will say to the Senator that it seems to me a very strange thing that we are discussing in the Senate of the United States to-day whether we shall send men who have fought in the rebel armies to West Point to educate them at the public expense with the sons of men who have given their lives in the defense of the country. What will the young men of this country, whose fathers and brothers and friends have fallen in this war, think of the Congress of the United States if we send men who have fought in the rebel armies, and perhaps shot down their fathers and brothers and friends, to West Point to be educated with them? I am surprised that any Senators here should advocate a policy of that character. I am willing that the young men of the South should be educated, and educated in our colleges and schools, anywhere and everywhere, at their own expense. I hope they will be educated, and taught better than they have been taught in the years of the past; but for the Government of the United States to permit the men who have served in the rebel armies to be educated at West Point at the public expense seems to me to be to elevate treason and to put a mark of dishonor upon fidelity to the country. It is a fact everywhere manifest about us that every effort is being made that can be made to make rebellion and treason respectable.

As to the amendment just moved by the Senator from Illinois, I agree with the Senator from Maine that we had better keep it off this bill. I am willing to do anything that is liberal and fair toward the people of the rebel States; but, sir, to take the men from their armies and put them with the young men of this country to be educated at West Point, or at the Naval School, seems to me little less than elevating treason at the expense of loyalty to the country.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the proposed amendment to the amendment.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I ask for the yeas and nays upon it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. POMEROY. This amendment prevents the doing of a thing which I think would be very commendable if it could be done. There are in all the districts of the South some very loyal young men who have been in our Army. This amendment would prevent the President from appointing those young men to the Military Academy. I do not know that they would stand the ghost of a chance to get appointed; but it would prevent their being appointed if they stood a chance. I would like to see some of the young men in the South, who have suffered the loss of all things, who have been truer to our cause than the needle to the pole, because they would not turn even in the presence of the metals, appointed to our Military Academy; but this amendment prevents that.

Mr. TRUMBULL. If the Senator from Kansas will allow me, I will ask him whether he is for changing the law, and taking away from the member of the House the right to recommend the appointment from his district. The object of this amendment is to execute the law as it has been understood, I believe, ever since this Academy was established. These whole forty appointments, if there are so many vacant, if you will not adopt some such measure as this, may, under the practice that is prevailing, every one of them be made from the District of Columbia. Is the Senator for leaving the law in that way? When we have established an institution and undertaken to fill it up by students from each congressional district in the United States, is he now for throwing it open, and telling the President to appoint, if he pleases, from the District of Columbia fifty persons? He will not, by voting this amendment down, give the appointments to these congressional districts. The President has a certain number, ten, at large, that he can appoint annually. The object of this amendment is to prevent the appointment in vacancies from congressional districts until there is a Representative to recommend somebody from the district.

Mr. GRIMES. How does this amendment change the law as it now stands?

Mr. TRUMBULL. According to my understanding of it, perhaps not at all; but there is a dispute about the law. It is contended by some that the Secretary of War or the President has the right to appoint every single person to West Point irrespective of the recommendations of the Representatives in the congressional districts. This fixes the law.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish to ask the Senator from Illinois if that is not in fact the law, and if it is not a matter of usage simply that appointments are made upon the nominations of members of the House?

Mr. TRUMBULL. I think it is partly a matter of usage; but there is some color of law for it. I think there is a statute that rather recognizes this as the law; if not, a regulation.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I have understood that it was a matter of usage simply. I never investigated the law myself.

Mr. GRIMES. Mr. President, two years ago General Sherman, when in command at Vicksburg, directed an inquiry to be made among the various regiments that composed his army for the young men who had most distinguished themselves and were best qualified to make soldiers, and he instituted an examining board who investigated as to their merits, and among the young men thus selected were four very good young men from my own State. They were selected and are now at West Point. Now, as I understand it, the proper, legitimate, and logical sequence of the adoption of this proposition is that they will be turned out.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Not at all.

Mr. GRIMES. I know this proposition does not do that; but the logical sequence would be that they ought to be turned out, and that we should adopt an amendment to-morrow to turn them out, because there was no law by which they could have been appointed. I am not going to place them in any such category as that.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 14, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chandler, Clark, Conness, Cresswell, Edmunds, Harris, Howard, Howe, Kirkwood, Nye, Sprague, Sumner, Trumbull, and Wade—14.

NAYS—Messrs. Buckalew, Cowan, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Fessenden, Foster, Grimes, Guthrie, Henderson, Hendricks, Johnson, Lane of Kansas, Morgan, Norton, Pomeroy, Sherman, Stewart, Van Winkle, Willey, Williams, Wilson, and Yates—23.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brown, Cragin, Lane of Indiana, McDougall, Morrill, Nesmith, Poland, Ramsey, Riddle, Saulsbury, and Wright—12.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the fortification bill. I merely desire to take it up so as to have it as the order of the day for to-morrow.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I desire to suggest to the Senator that to-morrow has been assigned by a resolution of the Senate for the consideration of the business of the Committee on Pensions, after one o'clock.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I desire to finish this bill this week, if it be possible, to get it out of the way. It is an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 255) making appropriations for the construction, preservation, and repairs of certain fortifications and other works of defense for the year ending June 30, 1867.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not think the chairman of the Committee on Finance ought to call up the bill that he now proposes to take up, with a view of making it the order for to-morrow, or to have it before the Senate so as to exclude the special order, in the absence of my colleague, the chairman of the Committee on Pensions, because, as I understand, the business of that committee has been made the order for to-morrow at one o'clock. I think he ought to postpone his motion until my colleague is in the Senate. I believe he is not well to-day, and is not here now.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I think that matter can be arranged perhaps; but I do not know.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I dare say, if my colleague were here, he would not interpose any objection.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Let us take it up, and if the Senator is here in the morning I will leave it to the Senate to decide upon the two bills. I only want this to take precedence of anything else, and it is absolutely necessary now, as the business is laid out, to get through with the appropriation bills.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not question that.

Mr. FESSENDEN. We shall probably not sit on Saturday, and I should like to have this bill taken up, and then we can arrange the matter to-morrow.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Do you expect a session on Saturday?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Probably not.

Mr. SHERMAN. The bill to fund the public debt ought to be taken up at some time; and I desire now to have some understanding about it. The appropriation bills are matters of course, and will pass of course—the fortification bill with the rest. There is no question about that. The funding bill is from the same committee. The very weight of the appropriation bills will carry them through. Now, I submit it to the Senate, as I cannot agree with the Senator from Maine on the subject, whether we ought not to take up the bill with regard to funding the public debt, so as to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to determine upon the loan which he intends to put upon the market. I say to the Senate it is a matter of vital importance that that question should be settled one way or the other as speedily as possible. If the Senate shall vote down the proposition, the Secretary will pursue another course. The fortification bill is a matter of no moment. I say that, knowing the condition of public business. There is ample time to consider it. It is a bill that will pass at any time, on its own merits and weight. Now, I submit whether as Monday is set aside for the report of the reconstruction committee, which will probably take a long time, whether we ought not to take up the funding bill, which I regard as the most important now pending, and on which there ought to be some action. I shall, therefore, contrary to the general usage in these matters, vote against the motion of the Senator from Maine, because I think the funding bill, from the same committee, ought to have the preference at this time.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not know of anybody but the Senator from Ohio who regards this funding bill as of any consequence to be taken up.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am not to be put off by remarks of that kind. The Senator may have his opinion. I have mine. I have just as good a right to my opinions as he has to his. He knows that the fortification appropriation bill is not of any importance, and it is brought up for the purpose of preventing the vote on the funding bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is not so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators must observe order, and not interrupt each other in debate.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator has already displayed too much feeling. The other day, when I reported the bill, he said he would prevent it from coming up at all times. We are accustomed somewhat to his impatient remarks; but at the same time I have my duty to perform, and I say here now, representing a majority of the Finance Committee, that I have the right to have this question heard, at least, unless he should outvote me. Upon questions of this kind I do not like to have any personal feeling. I desire that the funding bill should be brought to the consideration of the Senate. It is a matter of vital importance, and therefore I intend, representing the majority of the committee, to antagonize that bill against the bill now proposed to be taken up. This fortification bill is a matter of no moment whatever. The Senator knows as well as I do that it will pass. It cannot operate until the 1st of July next, and can have no effect and no influence whatever until then, while this funding bill, if it is to pass at all, ought to be passed promptly. That is the condition of the public business, and I therefore shall vote against the motion. If there is a special order to-morrow that overrides both, we have got to submit.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It is manifest that we are accomplishing no business to-night, and I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to have the Senator withdraw that motion for a moment until I make an explanation. I must reply to the Senator from Ohio, and then he may renew it if he pleases.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I will withdraw it at a personal request, if the Senator wishes to say anything; but I think we had better adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to adjourn is withdrawn.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Mr. President, I gave notice early this week that I should call up the appropriation bills during this week—three of them—in order to dispose of them; that we were getting to a period of the session when they ought to be taken up and disposed of, those of them that we intended to dispose of at this period; and I did it quite as much for this reason as for any other, that the Senator from Ohio had been at me continually to take up the appropriation bills and get them out of the way.

Mr. SHERMAN. That was long enough ago, when you could have done it then.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Exactly; and the longer the time was deferred, the more necessary it was to get at them some day or other. While I was detained from my seat in the Senate by illness the Senator from Ohio took up one or two of those bills in order to pass them; he deemed it so important. I gave notice early in the week that I should take up the bills, if I could, this week, because next week is set aside for the consideration of other business.

Now the Senator regards his funding bill as of importance. I do not. The remark that I made the other day was simply this: that he reported it with the consent of the Committee on Finance, not that the majority agreed to it, as he knows very well.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know any such thing.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If the Senator had listened to the remarks that were made and the reasons that were given by members of the committee why they allowed it to be reported, he would have known it.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator is out of order in making such an allusion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators will address the Chair, and not interrupt each other while debate is proceeding.

Mr. FESSENDEN. When the Senator reported the bill I made the remark that I was opposed to it because I had given notice in the committee that I should oppose it, and I deemed it quite as much my duty to say that in order that it should not go to the country that that bill met with the entire concurrence of the Committee on Finance, and I made the remark because I knew the use that would be made of the report if that statement had not accompanied it.

Now, sir, the Senator regards that bill as of great importance. I made the remark that I did not know anybody else that did regard it of so much importance to be taken up immediately. Perhaps he can make out that it is, and perhaps there are others who think so; but still my remark is a correct one, that I do not know anybody else who regards its being taken up immediately as of much consequence.

I do not doubt that the appropriation bill which I have mentioned will pass at some time or other before we adjourn; but it is necessary to have these things in progress. We have the Army bill behind. That has not passed. We have the principal appropriation bill behind, the executive and legislative bill, which has not yet been taken up; and we have the question of reconstruction to dispose of, which will take some considerable time.

My view of the matter, therefore, as having charge, in some degree, of the business of the Senate in connection with these measures that must be passed at some time, was that, at this late period of the session, some of those bills should be swept out of the way. I have been continually met with this funding bill.

Well, sir, I do not think myself, and the Senator will pardon me for expressing it again, that it is of so much consequence, because I am opposed to it. I take it that I had a right to say I was opposed to it, and to say that I was not in favor of it, because I was opposed to it in every shape. The remark, I take it, was pardonable. And now I really do not think that the Senator had the right, after I gave notice so long ago as Monday that I wanted to take up these bills, and after he has been urging me continually to take them up and get them out of the way, to interpose the bill to which he seems so much attached. That is my notion with regard to it. I may be wrong, but still I entertain that opinion.

Mr. COWAN. Now, let us adjourn.

Mr. SHERMAN. Just one word. I undoubtedly did say to the Senator, expressing my opinion, that he should have taken up the appropriation bills some time ago when all these formal bills, about which there is little debate, could have been acted upon and got out of the way, leaving the important bills until the close of the session, as is usual. Undoubtedly I did say that, and undoubtedly that was the proper course.

But here is the trouble: the Senator and I differ in regard to an important bill. He has undertaken to say what has occurred in committee. I think that that was improper; certainly it was in violation of the rule. I take it that every person who votes in committee votes his sentiments; and therefore, as I was authorized to report this bill, it was reported by the majority of the committee. I do not controvert with the Senator about what occurred there. The members are here present; and they know very well whether or not they gave their assent to the bill. I only wish to say that that bill is considered, not only by myself, but by others, as of the highest importance. The Senator must have seen two or three letters from the Secretary of the Treasury on the subject, asking us to pass that bill. I state to the Senate, now, the fact that the question as to the loan that will be put upon the market is waiting for our action upon that bill. That is a fact that my honorable friend must know as well as myself.

Under these circumstances, to bring up the fortification appropriation bills just at this time, when the Senator has blocked out the business for next week and the week after, crowding out this important bill which he does not happen to agree with, against the report of the committee, of which he is chairman, and therefore the most influential member, and crowding in these little bills that have laid on our table for weeks, did seem to me to justify the remark I made, that it was done for the purpose of crowding off that funding bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator must recollect that I gave notice on Monday of this week that I should take up these bills in order to pass them, and his bill was not decided on in committee until Tuesday.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will state further that the Senator spoke about two bills, the diplomatic and consular bill and the West Point bill. The fortification bill is a matter of no moment, and will take no time. Under these circumstances, I have a right to say, from the evidence before us, that the Senator desires, as a part of his parliamentary opposition to this bill, to interpose other bills to prevent it coming up, because when else can we take it up if we do not take it up now? Under the circumstances, I say, I am justified in saying it. All I desire is to submit this proposition, which I can demonstrate to be not only extremely important but a measure which in my judgment will save the Government in a short time $20,000,000 a year, to the deliberate judgment of the Senate. If the Senate shall vote the bill down, I shall have no regrets. It is only a question of public economy. It is not a question that affects me in the slightest degree either way. That is the feeling I had, and I felt in interposing now that I was performing an unpleasant duty. I desire to bring that bill (even against the opposition of the Senator from Maine) to the consideration of the Senate, and after it is heard and debated—it will be debated by me very briefly—I am willing to take the judgment of the Senate upon it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I renew the motion to adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, May 17, 1866.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOYNTON.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

HENRY PACKARD.

Mr. BANKS, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution authorizing the settlement of the accounts of Henry Packard, deceased, late assistant paymaster of the United States Navy; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

CONTESTED ELECTION.

Mr. DAWES. I submitted a few days ago a report from the Committee of Elections, in the case of Follet vs. Delano. I desire to call up that case to-morrow immediately after the morning hour and have it disposed of without debate. I trust that members meanwhile will send for the report and read it; and I will, in compensation, relieve the House from any debate on my part.

Mr. SPALDING called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER announced, as the first business of the morning hour, the call of committees for reports, beginning with the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

COINAGE, WEIGHTS, AND MEASURES.

Mr. KASSON. The Committee on a Uniform System of Coinage, Weights, and Measures have prepared a report which needs some slight revision before it is sent to the printer; and I therefore propose that while the report shall be considered as presented now, I may retain it for revision, with the understanding that it may be handed to the Clerk after revision and be printed.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, it will be so ordered.

METRIC SYSTEM OF WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

Mr. KASSON, from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, reported a bill to authorize the use of the metric system of weights and measures; which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, proposes to enact that, from and after the passage of the act, it shall be lawful throughout the United States to employ the weights and measures of the metric system; and no contract or dealing or pleading in any court shall be deemed invalid or liable to objection because the weights or measures expressed or referred to therein are the weights and measures of the metric system.

The second section provides that the table in the schedule annexed to the bill shall be recognized in the construction of contracts and in all legal proceedings as establishing in terms of the weights and measures now in use in the United States the equivalents of the weights and measures expressed therein in terms of the metric system; and said table may be lawfully used for computing, determining, and expressing, in customary weights and measures, the weights and measures of the metric system.

Mr. KASSON. I suppose it is not necessary to read in detail the tables giving those equivalents.

The committee have deemed it wise to frame a bill which in its terms is simply permissive and initiative of this great reform. In England, though a compulsory act was at first proposed, it was finally resolved to adopt a mere permissive measure; and under the present circumstances of this country the committee considered it best to frame a bill of the same nature. After some popular acquaintance with the system the Congress will be better able to fix the time for its ultimate exclusive adoption.

As the facts connected with this subject and the reasons for the measure proposed are fully stated in the report, I will not, in the present pressure of business, detain the House with any additional remarks, though I will cheerfully explain any point on which any gentleman may desire information. The committee, after very patient and elaborate investigation, have agreed unanimously on their report. If no gentleman desires to discuss the bill I will call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. KASSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. Mr. Speaker, I also report from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, a joint resolution to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish to each State one set of the standard weights and measures of the metric system. This resolution is necessary to carry into effect the bill which we have just passed, and conforms to the former resolution of Congress providing for the distribution of the common standards.

The joint resolution was read a first and second time.

It proposes to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish to each State, to be delivered to the Governor thereof, one set of the standard weights and measures of the metric system for the use of the States respectively.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. KASSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

POST OFFICE WEIGHTS.

Mr. KASSON, from the same committee, reported a bill to authorize the use in post offices of weights of the denomination of grammes; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. KASSON. Mr. Speaker, this is to carry into effect the policy already adopted by the Post Office Department in connection with its foreign correspondence in the use of gramme weights. The bill has been submitted to the Post Office Department and no objection has been taken to it.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. KASSON moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

METRIC SYSTEM—AGAIN.

Mr. NIBLACK. I desire to ask the gentleman from Iowa whether the bill for a metrical system proposes to go into effect immediately, or designates some future day when it is to go into effect.

Mr. KASSON. It proposes to go into effect as a permissive measure immediately; that is to say, all the arts, trades, corporations, and individuals who may desire to adopt it can do so. It is not now made compulsory at any time, as the committee did not feel authorized to make any such provision prior to its introduction by law, and the beginning of its use. We only desired to legalize it so that those who desired to use it might be able to do so without violating the laws now in force in some of the States, which this measure will to that extent repeal.

Mr. NIBLACK. The gentleman's explanation is satisfactory to me.

UNIFORM COINAGE COMMISSIONER.

Mr. KASSON, from the same committee, reported a joint resolution to authorize the President to appoint a special commissioner to facilitate the adoption of a uniform coinage between the United States and foreign countries; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. KASSON. Mr. Speaker, I will say in explanation of the joint resolution that it is in execution of the recommendations of the report of the committee, as well as of Mr. Jefferson, Mr. Adams, and the other distinguished men who have taken part in this movement of reform. They all recognize the necessity of international action to arrive at the proper result.

Congress a few years ago passed a joint resolution that only partially carried out the object. A commissioner was authorized to be appointed for the purpose of consulting with the Government of Great Britain. He went there with indefinite instructions. The English Government expressed a willingness to entertain any proposition, but there was no authority sufficiently certain to give it force and effect. It therefore failed to produce any practical benefit. The committee thought that, in connection with the meeting of the commissioners next year at Paris, from various foreign Governments, if we appointed a special commissioner expressly charged with this matter we might at least pave the way for the result so much desired. That is the whole effect of the joint resolution.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I believe this to be totally unnecessary. I cannot understand why all this business cannot be performed by our diplomatic representatives abroad. This special commissioner seems to me to be an unnecessary officer, entailing an unnecessary expense. I only desire to call attention to the fact, and I hope the joint resolution will not pass.

Mr. KASSON. I think the gentleman's objection can be answered conclusively. In the first place the questions involved are those of science and art, referring to the basis of coin and the relations it shall bear to weights and measures. I know of but one minister of the United States abroad at this time who would be personally competent to undertake the necessary negotiations. In the second place, it will be impossible to take away any of our ministers from their respective capitals to attend to this special duty in meeting these commissioners from foreign Governments. We have hardly ever been able to effect any special reform through general diplomatic officers. In every instance, so far as I know, the initiative has been taken here and elsewhere by special commissioners. It is done for postal and for commercial conventions.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. Have foreign nations appointed commissioners with whom our commissioner is to negotiate?

Mr. KASSON. They are all appointing commissioners to meet at the Industrial Exhibition of next year.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. Are any of them authorized to negotiate upon this subject?

Mr. KASSON. If the gentleman had heard the resolution read he would have found that it provided for the appointment of a special commissioner with reference to this subject, to act in conjunction with commissioners to be appointed by all nations which are invited to join for this express purpose. The whole object of the resolution is practical—to secure one single commissioner from each country who shall be specially charged with that function. I certainly can see no objection to it. The resolution expressly provides that there shall be no salary paid to the commissioner, and I think it will commend itself to the judgment of every member that a special commissioner is indispensable for this purpose. I call the previous question.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I hope the gentleman will allow me a word.

Mr. KASSON. I withdraw it.

Mr. CONKLING. I call for the reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was again read.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that here is a proposition to appoint another commissioner to the Paris Exhibition. We have already authorized the appointment of ten, and before they get through with that Exhibition I do not know but we shall have a congress of American citizens sent there to represent all the great interests of this country. Now, if we cannot get along with ten commissioners I think we had better dispense with the commission entirely. This is simply an appendix to what has already been commenced, and I hope we will stop the appointment of further commissioners to this Exhibition.

Mr. KASSON. I have done my best to enable my friend from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] to understand this resolution. I hope now I shall enable him really to comprehend its purpose. If he had spent weeks and months in the examination of the history of this question in this country, the report of Jefferson, the recommendation of Madison, the action of scientific bodies at home and abroad, the action of foreign Governments upon the subject, all of which have been considered by the committee that instructed me to report this resolution, he would then know that there is no one subject that can come before an international or other congress that has more important relations to the commercial and social intercourse of the world than this one; and that it is a question whether money shavers shall actually accumulate enormous fortunes in every country of the world, at the unnecessary cost of travelers and traders, and whether we shall be able to know when we draw a bill on a foreign country how much we are paying for it and how much we get by it. I assure him and the members of this House that the question is one the importance of which increases every hour with the increasing intercourse of the world.

Secondly, I say that we have not a solitary commissioner yet appointed to Paris, nor a law authorizing one. That measure may fail. God forbid that it should fail; but whether it fails or succeeds it is absolutely necessary that there should be authority of law to designate a special commissioner who shall have what these other special commissioners have not, diplomatic authority to negotiate upon this subject with which he is charged. The commissioners to be appointed by the bill that formerly passed the House are to be selected among manufacturers and agriculturists and all practical classes of the community; but we want to send some one who is acquainted with the general history of coinage of this country and of the world, who knows the proper proportion between the precious metals and alloy, who knows the systems prevailing in different countries, and who can properly negotiate, and by authority, with the several Governments concerned. This the other commissioners are not and ought not to have authority to do.

Now it becomes a question whether we shall take the recommendation of Jefferson and Adams and all the distinguished men who have sought this great desideratum, as regards the commercial intercourse of the world, and appoint a special commissioner without salary, or whether this most important object shall be defeated by a single objection.

Mr. BANKS. In reference to the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LAWRENCE,] I desire to say that the proposition presented by the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, as I understand it, is distinct entirely from that embodied in the proposition for a representation of our industry at the Paris Exposition. I do not desire to go into a discussion of that question at all; but in reference to this measure let me say to the gentleman from Ohio and to the members of the House that its object is to pave the way for the establishment of reforms that will enable every man who travels in any country to carry in his own pocket an exact representation of the values of weights and of measures that exist in any civilized country. Whenever this system shall be established a man may carry in the coin he has in his pocket an exact test of the measures, weights, and values that exist in other countries through which he travels. That is certainly an object of great importance to the people of this country, and if this be an inquiry only, costing little or nothing, I hope the joint resolution will be passed.

I have seen this morning very intelligent persons from England who say that in a brief visit to this country they have given as much time and trouble to learn the relative values of our fractional and other currency as to study of institutions of greater importance. I suppose that every man who has traveled knows the inconveniences and the losses that result from the difficulty in comprehending the different standards of weights and measures and money values in other countries. I hope the joint resolution will pass.

Mr. KASSON. The gentleman is perfectly right in his suggestion of the unnecessary expense and inconvenience that attend the present system. So long as every Government and principality in Europe has a local and peculiar coinage, the traveler must undergo a shave at every frontier, and merchants are liable to perpetual mistakes in the rendition of their accounts.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. The gentleman does not seem to comprehend exactly the point of the objection which I make to this resolution. I do not object so much to the purpose sought to be attained as to the means by which it is sought to be attained.

Now, we have already, so far as this House is concerned, authorized the appointment of ten commissioners. They are to be scientific men, the representatives of all the interests of this country. Why not clothe one of those representatives with the powers contemplated by this resolution? Why add another commissioner? That is the point I make. Now, we have been a little slow to see the absolute necessity of this system which my friend says has been so ably presented by Jefferson and Adams and others. We seem to have got along very well without it.

I should not object that one of those ten commissioners should be clothed with all the authority contemplated by this resolution, but I do object to the unnecessary expense of an additional commissioner for this purpose.

Mr. KASSON. Let me add once more, so as to be distinctly understood by the House, that there is no salary attached to this office. These special commissioners to whom the gentleman has referred have no special charge of this subject, and have no power whatever to negotiate with foreign Governments, and it is absolutely necessary that the commissioner charged with this question should have the power to negotiate. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. KASSON demanded the previous question on the passage of the joint resolution.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I demand the yeas and nays on the passage of the joint resolution. If this joint resolution shall be voted down, I hope the House will understand that the committee can be directed to move that some one of the ten commissioners already authorized shall be clothed with all the necessary power.

Mr. KASSON. Mr. Speaker, I cannot refrain from expressing some surprise at the obstinacy of my friend from Ohio in a matter to which I see clearly he has not given a personal examination. Let me say again that the reasons for providing for the appointment of this commissioner are that the Senate may not concur in our measure providing for representation at the Industrial Exposition. Even if the Senate should concur in that, no one of the commissioners thus appointed can possibly perform the duties of this commission under that act. The third reason is that if the effort is worth the enterprise of an entire century—for it is an enterprise of an entire century—I think the great American Republic will not very much injure its dignity or its honor in that direction, if it should allow to the commissioner who shall contribute to this great result his personal expenses. Nothing more than that is proposed by this measure.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 65, nays 38, not voting 80; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Ancona, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Banks, Baxter, Bergen, Bidwell, Boutwell, Brandegee, Reader W. Clarke, Conkling, Cullom, Davis, Dawes, Dawson, Eliot, Griswold, Hart, Higby, Holmes, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbard, Hulburd, Jenckes, Julian, Kasson, Kelley, Kelso, Knykendall, Laffin, Latham, George V. Lawrence, Longyear, Lynch, Marvin, McClurg, McKuer, Mercer, Miller, Morris, Myers, Newell, Niblack, Nicholson, O'Neill, Paine, Phelps, Pike, Sawyer, Schenck, Stevens, Strouse, Taber, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Burt Van Horn, Welker, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, Winfield, and Woodbridge—65.

NAYS—Messrs. Ames, Baldwin, Benjamin, Brewster, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Denison, Dumont, Eggleston, Eldridge, Farnsworth, Finck, Goodyear, Aaron Harding, Abner C. Harding, John H. Hubbard, Kerr, Ketcham, William Lawrence, Le Blond, Marston, McCullough, McKee, Orth, Perham, Plants, Price, Ritter, Rollins, Seefeld, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Spalding, Stilwell, Trimble, Ward, and Henry D. Washburn—38.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Allison, Anderson, James M. Ashley, Barker, Beaman, Bingham, Blaine, Blow, Boyer, Broomall, Buckland, Bundy, Chanler, Coffroth, Culver, Darling, Defrees, Delano, Deming, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Driggs, Eckley, Farquhar, Ferry, Garfield, Glossbrenner, Grider, Grinnell, Hale, Harris, Hayes, Henderson, Hill, Hogan, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, James R. Hubbard, James Humphrey, James M. Humphrey, Ingersoll, Johnson, Jones, Loan, Marshall, McIndoe, Moorhead, Morrill, Moulton, Noel, Patterson, Pomeroy, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rogers, Ross, Rousseau, Shanklin, Shellabarger, Smith, Starr, Taylor, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Robert T. Van Horn, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Wentworth, Whaley, and Wright—80.

So the joint resolution was passed.

Mr. KASSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PAY OF COMMITTEE CLERK.

Mr. KASSON. I am directed by the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures to report the following resolution:

Resolved, That the clerk of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures be allowed six dollars per diem for the forty days during which he has been employed as such.

The services of the gentleman who has acted as the clerk of the committee have been exceedingly valuable. His time night and day has been devoted exclusively to the work of the committee. He is a gentleman coming from New Haven, being a learned mathematical professor in the college at that place. Four dollars per day, the usual compensation to a committee clerk, would scarcely pay the hotel bill of this gentleman, putting out of view his traveling expenses.

On agreeing to the resolution, there were—ayes 40, noes 30; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER, under the rule, ordered tellers; and appointed Messrs. Kasson and BERGEN.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes forty-seven, noes not counted.

Mr. WARD. I demand the yeas and nays. I desire that gentlemen who are in favor of increasing salaries at this time shall go on the record.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. EGGLESTON asked leave of absence for Mr. HAYES for ten days.

Leave was granted.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was delivered to the House by Mr. EDWARD COOPER, his Private Secretary, who also informed the House that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 511) to impose a duty on live animals;

An act (H. R. No. 397) to authorize the coinage of five-cent pieces;

An act (H. R. No. 567) to amend an act to establish the grade of vice admiral in the United States Navy;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 66) relative to the courts and post office of New York city; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 123) relative to the attempted assassination of the Emperor of Russia.

UNIFORM BANKRUPT LAW.

Mr. JENCKES, from the select committee on a bankrupt law, reported a bill to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States; which was read a first and second time.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. JENCKES. The bill which was referred to the select committee on bankrupt law, on the motion of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CONKLING,] was the bill that was formerly reported by that committee, without any of the amendments ingrafted upon it during its consideration by this House.

The bill now reported is the bill originally reported as amended in the House, with some other amendments to meet the objections then made to it. With the permission of the House I will briefly explain what those additional amendments are, and take up no time in explaining the other portions of the bill, as the bill has already been fully discussed with these exceptions.

The principal of the amendments now proposed is one relating to the duties of the officers styled messengers. By the original bill, in cases of voluntary bankruptcy, these messengers were required to take possession of the property belonging to the bankrupt, and retain it until the appointment of the assignee. By the bill as now reported, these messengers have no such duties to perform with regard to the property of the petitioner. The custody of the property remains in the possession of the petitioner until an assignee is regularly appointed by the court, when he takes possession of it and has full and final control over it. The responsibility of the care and custody therefore remains with the bankrupt, as the owner of the property, in the intervening time. As a check upon any waste of the property in the mean time, or of any disposition of it adverse to the provision of the law, the bankrupt is required to satisfy the court, and of course to satisfy the creditors, who watch over the proceedings until the discharge is granted, that he has made no such waste or fraudulent disposition of his property, before he can obtain his discharge.

Mr. CONKLING. We are very anxious on this side to hear what the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. JENCKES] is saying, but at present we are unable to do so. I would suggest to him, therefore, that he take a place nearer the center of the Hall, so that we can hear him.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from New York [Mr. CONKLING] will not insist upon the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. JENCKES] going over to that side of the House to make his speech. We very rarely have an opportunity to hear what is going on upon that side, or taking any part in the business of the House, however much we may desire it, and I trust we shall not be denied the pleasure of hearing the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. JENCKES] on this occasion.

Mr. JENCKES. If the House were more quiet I could easily be heard in all parts of the Hall.

Mr. Speaker, the whole of this explanation may be summed up in one sentence. The duties of these messengers are dispensed with in all cases of voluntary bankruptcy. The responsibility thrown upon them by the bill as originally reported is now thrown upon the petitioning debtor. And unless the debtor satisfies the court that he has acted honestly in every respect in regard to his property between the time of his application and the time of receiving his discharge, then he is not to receive the benefit of this act.

I will explain another amendment made in this bill. It is in regard to the payment of the officers called registers. By the original bill those officers were to be paid a salary, to be raised from the fees to be paid in each case. By the proposed amendment they are to be paid according to the services they render. And there is a provision inserted in the bill giving the commissioners power to reduce these fees in certain classes of cases, so that no exorbitant compensation can be received by any one of these officers.

It is also required that one or more of these officers shall be appointed in each county of the United States, so that it shall be convenient for every party transacting business in this court to have one of those officers as accessible as the county clerk now is. It is also provided that these officers shall be appointed upon the nomination and recommendation of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. That officer is designated because he is to have the supervision, confirmation, and establishment of the rules of practice which are to form the code of practice in the courts of bankruptcy, if this bill shall become a law.

These, I believe, are all the respects in which the bill now reported differs from the bill formerly before the House.

Mr. PAINE. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. JENCKES] whether he alludes to the bill which was last voted on by the House as amended or to the bill formerly reported from the committee.

Mr. JENCKES. I refer to the bill which was last voted on by the House, containing all the amendments incorporated into it by a vote of the House. I have been explaining the additional amendments reported by the committee. I will state to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PAINE] that the bill now reported embraces the amendment in which I suppose he is particularly interested, protecting the homesteads in all the northwestern and other States where there is a homestead law.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a few words in favor of the passage of this bill. Among the powers lodged in Congress by the Constitution of the United States is one to establish uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcy. I suppose it was intended that these laws should not only be uniform but enduring. Congress hitherto has failed to carry out the duty enjoined on it by the Constitution in establishing uniform and permanent laws on the subject of bankruptcy.

Now, sir, the experience of this country ever since its organization is like the experience of every other civilized country. There are times and emergencies when men require the interposition of the Government to relieve them from misfortunes where their energy and enterprise have involved them in liabilities to which they are unable to respond.

In 1842 Congress passed a bankrupt law which was for the benefit of the debtors almost entirely. Yet in the purview of the Constitution it was the duty of Congress to pass a law for the creditors as well as for the debtors. When that law was passed thousands and tens of thousands of men whose energy and enterprise added to the aggregate wealth of the country were struck down by the revulsion of 1836 and 1837. They availed themselves of the benefit of that law and again applied their energies to the development of the resources of the nation. The country has become richer from their labor.

Unfortunately, however, that was not continuing legislation. Since then Congress has done nothing either for the benefit of debtor or creditor. Session after session bankrupt laws have been introduced and have been defeated, and in the mean time the men who have met with misfortune, against which they could not struggle, have gone down under the pressure of liabilities. They have remained idle, as they can do nothing with the heavy hand of the creditors upon them. In many States the debtors were liable to be put in prison for debt; but advancing civilization has either obliterated entirely or materially modified that law. But while debtors may not be imprisoned for debt, yet the country will lose the benefit of the energy and enterprise of these men because of the pressure of their liabilities. We ought at once to relieve them.

I believe there is no measure before Congress which is entitled to a more careful consideration than this one for the relief of men who have been borne down by various disasters which have swept over the country since 1836. By the passage of this measure we relieve these unfortunates, and at the same time provide means by which the creditors may collect from the debtors. I do not suppose this law is perfect. I do not suppose any law we can pass will be perfect. It is, however, the basis upon which we can erect a more perfect superstructure, and I hope it will receive the favorable consideration of the House.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Speaker, it is well known that when this bill was before the House a few weeks ago, I voted against it. I did not do so because I was opposed to a bankrupt law, but for reasons peculiar to this bill in the form in which it then was. My objections were to the details, and not the principles of the bill. These objections have been entirely removed in the bill as it now stands.

The most important objection, as I regarded it, was to the unnecessary and expensive provision by which the marshal was required to take charge of the property of the bankrupt on the presentation of the petition, and hold it until an assignee was appointed, receiving mileage and his expenses, in addition to a reasonable compensation for the custody of the property. This, in my judgment, was unnecessary, and in the district in which I reside would have been very expensive. This feature of the bill has been entirely removed, and the property remains in the hands or custody of the bankrupt until an assignee is appointed, and a provision has also been inserted that if he is guilty of fraud or negligence in the custody of it, or in failing to deliver it to the assignee when appointed, his discharge shall not be granted.

The expenses necessarily incurred in taking the benefit of the former bill were too high, I thought; and, as one of my colleagues truthfully suggested, it would cost a man more to take the benefit of it than to pay his debts. The fees to officers for specific services have also been reduced, and the entire costs and expenses of the proceedings are reduced, in my judgment, not less than one third. A register is provided in every county, so that parties and their attorneys will easily and readily be accommodated in the preliminary proceedings, which can be taken before that officer. In the form in which the bill now is I shall cheerfully vote for it and hope it will pass.

Mr. JENCKES. I move that the bill be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired; the bill will come up again on Tuesday next in the morning hour.

SUPREME COURT DECISIONS.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on the Judiciary, Senate bill No. 186, amendatory of an act to provide for the reports of decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States.

The bill was read. It allows eight months instead of six for the publication of the reports.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. LE BLOND asked and obtained leave of absence for his colleague, Mr. FINCH, for two weeks from to-morrow.

WESTERN PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. PRICE, from the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, by unanimous consent, reported back Senate joint resolution No. 61, to extend the time for the construction of the first section of the Western Pacific railroad.

The joint resolution was read. It extends the time for the construction of the first twenty miles to the 1st of January, 1867, on certain conditions named.

The joint resolution was read the third time and passed.

Mr. PRICE moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CALIFORNIA LAND GRANTS.

Mr. JULIAN, from the Committee on Public Lands, by unanimous consent, reported back House bill No. 441, to confirm the selection and location of certain lands granted to the State of California by the United States, and for other purposes; which was ordered to be printed, and recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. ALLISON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was recommitted; and also moved to lay that motion on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TAX BILL.

Mr. MORRILL moved that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. DAVES in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being a bill of the House (No. 513) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof.

The pending paragraph, as amended, was as follows:

30. Auctioneers whose annual sales do not exceed $10,000 shall pay ten dollars, and if exceeding $10,000 shall pay twenty dollars. Every person shall be deemed an auctioneer within the meaning of this act whose business it is to offer property at public sale to the highest or best bidder: Provided, That the provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to judicial or executive officers making auction sales by virtue of any judgment or decree of any court, nor public sale made by or for executors, administrators, or guardians of any estate held by them as such.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I move to amend the paragraph by adding these words:

Nor to attorneys in the ordinary prosecution of their business.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on this.

The question being taken on the amendment, no quorum voted.

Mr. CONKLING. I understand the chairman of the committee does not object to this amendment. I think it can be adopted without a quorum.

The amendment was accordingly adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

31. Manufacturers shall pay ten dollars. Any person, firm, or corporation who shall manufacture by hand or machinery any goods, wares, or merchandise, not otherwise provided for, exceeding annually the sum of $1,000, or shall be engaged in the manufacture or preparation for sale of any articles or compounds, or shall put up for sale in packages with his own name or trade mark thereon any articles or compound, shall be regarded as a manufacturer under this act.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

32. Peddlers shall be classified and rated as follows, to wit: when traveling with more than two horses or mules, the first class, and shall pay fifty dollars; when traveling with two horses or mules, the second class, and shall pay twenty-five dollars; when traveling with one horse or mule, the third class, and shall pay fifteen dollars; when traveling on foot, the fourth class, and shall pay ten dollars. Any person, except persons peddling only newspapers, Bibles, or religious tracts, who sells or offers to sell at retail goods, wares, or other commodities, traveling from place to place, in the street or through different parts of the country, shall be regarded a peddler under this act: Provided, That any peddler who sells or offers to sell dry goods, foreign or domestic, by one or more original packages or pieces at one time, to the same person or persons, or who peddles jewelry, distilled spirits, fermented liquors or wines, shall pay fifty dollars: Provided further, That manufacturers and producers of agricultural tools and implements, garden seeds, fruit and ornamental trees, stoves and hollow ware, brooms, wooden-ware, and powder, delivering and selling at wholesale any of said articles, by themselves or their authorized agents, at places other than the place of manufacture, shall not therefor be required to pay any special tax.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to insert after the word "only" in line twelve hundred and thirty-six the words "charcoal or;" also, after the words "wooden-ware" in line twelve hundred and forty-seven to insert "charcoal."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to insert after "wooden-ware" the words "stone-ware."

Mr. ALLISON. I would like to know why that amendment is offered.

Mr. DAVIS. I wish simply to include earthen or stone-ware, so as to give the manufacturers the same privilege that is extended to the manufacturers of wooden-ware.

Mr. MORRILL. Stone-ware is never peddled; and I hope the gentleman will not press his amendment.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. PIKE. I move, on page 59, line twelve hundred and forty-three, to strike out the words "distilled spirits."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PIKE. I move to strike out, in the next line, the words "fermented liquors or wines."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LOAN. I move to insert in line thirteen hundred and thirty-six, after the word "newspapers," the word "magazines."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Have the words "distilled spirits" been stricken out?

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment has been adopted, and no debate upon it is in order.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I move to insert in line twelve hundred and thirty-four, after the words "on foot," the words "or by public conveyance."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THAYER. I move to insert in line twelve hundred and forty-one, after the word "sell," the words "distilled spirits, fermented liquors, or wines."

Mr. GARFIELD. That is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BERGEN. I move to insert in line twelve hundred and thirty-seven, after the word "commodities," the words "or the produce of his farm or garden;" so that the clause will read:

Any person, except persons peddling only newspapers, magazines, Bibles, or religious tracts, or the produce of his farm or garden, who sells or offers to sell at retail, goods, wares, or other commodities, traveling from place to place, in the street, or through different parts of the country, shall be regarded a peddler under this act.

Farmers and gardeners travel through the cities and sell the produce of their farms and gardens. As the law now stands, without this amendment they would be compelled to pay for a license. I think they ought not to be compelled to pay it, and I therefore offer this amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope that amendment will not pass. If a man goes peddling his own produce, he ought to be considered a peddler and to pay a tax.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to insert in line twelve hundred and forty-eight before the word "powder" the word "gun;" so as to make it read "gunpowder."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

33. Apothecaries shall pay ten dollars. Every person who keeps a shop or building where medicines are compounded or prepared according to prescriptions of physicians, or where medicines are sold, shall be regarded as an apothecary under this act. But wholesale and retail dealers who have paid the special tax therefor shall not be required to pay a tax as an apothecary, anything in this act to the contrary notwithstanding; nor shall apothecaries who have paid the special tax be required to pay the tax as retail dealers in liquor in consequence of selling alcohol, or of selling or of dispensing, upon physicians' prescriptions, the wines and spirits official in the United States and other national pharmacopeias, in quantities not exceeding half a pint of either at one time, nor exceeding in aggregate cost value the sum of $300 per annum.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I move to amend by inserting in line twelve hundred and sixty-two after the word "alcohol" the words "for medical purposes."

Mr. STEVENS. There is a great deal of the article used for mechanical purposes as well as for medical purposes.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to strike out in lines twelve hundred and fifty-eight and twelve hundred and fifty-nine the words "anything in this act to the contrary notwithstanding."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

34. Photographers shall pay ten dollars. Any person or persons who make for sale photographs, ambrotypes, daguerreotypes, or pictures, by the action of light, shall be regarded a photographer under this act.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

35. Tobacconists shall pay ten dollars. Any person firm, or corporation whose business it is to sell at retail cigars, snuff, or tobacco, in any form, shall be regarded as a tobacconist under this act. But wholesale and retail dealers, and keepers of hotels, inns, taverns, and eating-houses, having paid the special tax therefor, shall not be required to pay the tax as tobacconists, anything in this act to the contrary notwithstanding.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

36. Butchers shall pay ten dollars. Every person whose business it is to sell butchers' meat at retail shall be regarded as a butcher under this act: Provided, That no butcher having paid the special tax therefor shall be required to pay the tax as a retail dealer on account of selling other articles at the same store, stall, or premises: Provided further, That butchers who sell butchers' meat exclusively by themselves or agents, and persons who sell shell-fish or other fish, or both, traveling from place to place, and not from any shop or stand, shall be required to pay five dollars only, any existing law to the contrary notwithstanding; and shall not be required to pay the tax as a peddler for retailing butchers' meat or fish. And no special tax shall be imposed for selling shell-fish or other fish from hand-carts or wheelbarrows.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend the first proviso by inserting before the words "tax as a retail dealer" the word "special."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend the last proviso by striking out the words "and shall not be required to pay the tax as a peddler for retailing butchers' meat or fish."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

37. Proprietors of theaters, museums, and concert halls, receiving pay as entrance money, shall pay $100. Every edifice used for the purpose of dramatic or operatic or other representations, plays, or performances, not including halls rented or used occasionally for concerts or theatrical representations, shall be regarded as a theater under this act: Provided, That when any such edifice is under lease at the passage of this act, the tax shall be paid by the lessee, unless otherwise stipulated between the parties to said lease.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

38. The proprietor or proprietors of circuses shall pay $100. Every building, tent, space, or area where feats of horsemanship or acrobatic sports or theatrical performances are exhibited, shall be regarded as a circus under this act: Provided, That no special tax paid in one State shall exempt exhibitions from the tax in another State. And but one special tax shall be imposed under this act for exhibitions within any one State.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

39. Jugglers shall pay twenty dollars. Every person who performs by sleight of hand shall be regarded as a juggler under this act. The proprietors or agents of all other public exhibitions or shows for money, not enumerated in this section, shall pay ten dollars: Provided, That a special tax in one State shall not exempt exhibitions from the tax in another State. And but one special tax shall be imposed under this act for exhibitions within any one State.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend the last section of this paragraph by striking out the word "imposed" and inserting the word "required."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NIBLACK. I move to amend by inserting after the words "sleight of hand" the words "including spirit rappings and other kindred manifestations."

Mr. THAYER. I wish to remind the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. NIBLACK] that by a judicial decision in the State of New York that is embraced in the terms "jugglery" and "sleight of hand."

Mr. NIBLACK. I think my amendment better be inserted here.

Mr. THAYER. It will be mere redundancy.

Mr. NIBLACK. I want to make it certain. The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

40. Proprietors of bowling-alleys and billiard rooms shall pay ten dollars for each alley or table. Every place or building where bowls are thrown or billiards played, and open to the public with or without price, shall be regarded as a bowling-alley or billiard room, respectively, under this act.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to amend the first sentence of this paragraph by striking out the words "alley or," so that it shall read, "proprietors of bowling-alleys and billiard rooms shall pay ten dollars for each table."

Mr. THAYER. I would suggest that ten-pins are not played on a table. [Laughter.]

Mr. DAVIS. I withdraw my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

41. Proprietors of gift enterprises shall pay fifty dollars. Every person, firm, or corporation who shall sell or offer for sale any article of merchandise of any description whatsoever, or any ticket of admission to any exhibition or performance, with a promise, express or implied, to give or bestow, or in any manner to hold out to the public the promise of gift or bestowal of any article or thing for and in consideration of the purchase by any person of any other article or thing, shall be regarded as a proprietor of a gift enterprise under this act: Provided, That no such proprietor, in consequence of being thus taxed, shall be exempt from paying any other tax imposed by law, and the special tax herein required shall be in addition thereto.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to amend the first sentence of this paragraph by striking out the words "pay fifty dollars" and inserting "be put in the penitentiary."

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I move to amend by striking out "fifty dollars" and inserting "one hundred and fifty dollars" in the first line of the paragraph.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move to amend by inserting the words "real estate or" after the words "the promise of gift or bestowal of any," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to amend by striking out the words "to the public" before the words "the promise of gift or bestowal," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

42. Owners of stallions and jacks shall pay ten dollars. Every person who keeps a male horse or a jack for the use of mares, requiring or receiving pay therefor, shall be regarded as the owner thereof, and shall furnish a statement to the assessor or assistant assessor, which shall contain a brief description of the animal, its age, and place or places where used or to be used: Provided, That all accounts, notes, or demands for the use of any such horse or jack, the owner or keeper thereof not having paid the tax as aforesaid, shall be void.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I move to amend the first sentence in this paragraph by striking out "ten dollars" and inserting "five dollars."

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

43. Lawyers shall pay ten dollars. Every person who for fee or reward shall prosecute or defend causes in any court of record or other judicial tribunal of the United States or of any of the States, or give legal advice in relation to any cause or matter whatever, shall be deemed to be a lawyer within the meaning of this act.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I move to amend by striking out in line thirteen hundred and fifty-four the word "ten," and inserting in lieu thereof the word "fifteen;" so that the clause will read: "Lawyers shall pay fifteen dollars."

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

44. Physicians, surgeons, and dentists shall pay ten dollars. Every person (except apothecaries) whose business it is, for fee and reward, to prescribe remedies or perform surgical operations for the cure of any bodily disease or ailment, shall be deemed a physician, surgeon, or dentist, within the meaning of this act.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

45. Builders and contractors shall pay ten dollars. Every person whose business it is to construct buildings, or ships, or bridges, or canals, or railroads by contract, whose receipts from building contracts exceed $2,500 in any one year, shall be regarded as a builder and contractor under this act.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

46. Assayers, assaying gold and silver, or either, of a value not exceeding in one year $250,000, shall pay $100, and $200 when the value exceeds $250,000 and does not exceed $500,000, and $500 when the value exceeds $500,000. Any person or persons or corporation whose business or occupation it is to separate gold and silver from other metals or mineral substances with which such gold or silver, or both, are alloyed, combined, or united, or to ascertain or determine the quantity of gold or silver in any alloy or combination with other metals, shall be deemed an assayer for the purpose of this act.

Mr. McRUER. I move to amend by inserting "shall pay fifty dollars" after the words "assayers, assaying gold and silver or either;" and by striking out the following words:

Of a value not exceeding in one year $250,000, shall pay $100, and $200 when the value exceeds $250,000 and does not exceed $500,000, and $500 when the value exceeds $500,000.

So that the clause will read:

Assayers, assaying gold and silver, or either, shall pay fifty dollars.

I see no reason, Mr. Chairman, why the large tax proposed in this paragraph should be imposed upon this branch of manufacturing industry called assaying. This business is frequently carried on by persons of very small capital. It is here provided that where more than $500,000 is assayed, a tax of $500 shall be paid. I see no reason why this branch of industry should be taxed at this exorbitant rate. We have already passed by a section in which manufacturers are taxed ten dollars—no more; and I do not know why a scientific man engaged in assaying or refining gold or silver should pay this heavy tax. I believe that this bill provides for no other tax analogous to this. I hope that my amendment may be adopted, and that the tax will be reduced to the sum of fifty dollars, without any regard to the amount of gold and silver assayed.

Mr. MORRILL. In reply to the gentleman from California [Mr. McRUER] I will say that in addition to the license or special tax which is paid by manufacturers, they are required to pay a tax on their products. This tax paid by assayers is about all the tax that we get on these products, gold and silver. In addition to the tax in this form we get only a fraction of one per cent.

Mr. McRUER. I beg leave to say in reply to the gentleman, that all this gold and silver is liable to a tax of one half of one per cent. upon its total value, whenever it is assayed, which tax must be collected by the assayer and paid over to the Government. The same principle does not apply to anything else which is really a raw product of industry. I do not object to this small tax of one half of one per cent., because it is not a great burden; but I object to the principle, because it is not applied to any other product of industry. The man who delves from the earth by the sweat of his brow and the force of his muscle gold or silver to the value of $1,000 should not be taxed for that any more than the man who produces $1,000 worth of some industrial product. Still I do not propose a change in the law in this respect. But, sir, I see no reason why an assayer, if he does a certain amount of business, should pay a tax of $500 a year, while a manufacturer doing business to the extent of millions, pays only ten dollars. This tax on assayers must operate as a serious burden upon a class of men employed in a legitimate branch of scientific pursuits. I trust that my amendment will be adopted.

Mr. MORRILL. This tax, it will be seen, is, comparatively speaking, very small. Where the party assays $250,000 annually, he pays $100; where the amount is more than $250,000, and not more than $500,000, the tax is $200; and where the amount assayed exceeds $500,000, a tax of $500 is required to be paid. The amount of the tax is not exorbitant, and it is imposed upon parties who can easily pay it. The product itself is subject to a very small tax. I trust that the amendment will not be adopted.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

47. Miners shall pay ten dollars. Every person, firm, or company who shall employ others in the business of mining for coal, or for gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, zinc, spelter, or other minerals, not having paid the tax therefor, as a manufacturer, and no other, shall be regarded as a miner under this act: Provided, That this shall not apply to any miner whose receipts from his mine shall not exceed annually $1,000.

Mr. MERCUR. I move to strike out the words "employ others in" and insert "carry on."

Mr. Chairman, I do not know how it is in the mines where the precious metals are procured, but in the coal mines this phraseology would result disastrously to the miners. "Miners" is a technical term. Persons are called miners who have no interest in the mines at all. A is put in with one or two laborers. He is called a miner, though he has no interest in the sale of the coal. It may be thought the proviso to the bill would exempt him from the effect of this tax, but on looking it will be seen it does not apply to any person who is a miner.

Mr. STEVENS. I am opposed to this or any other amendment of the paragraph. I think the paragraph ought to be stricken out. I think there ought to be no notice taken of miners, and I therefore move to strike out the whole paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is not now in order.

Mr. MERCUR. I withdraw my amendment for the present, so that my colleague may make his motion to strike out.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to strike out the whole paragraph.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know how many this would embrace. Every man who mined limestone for his farm, every man who mined a little coal for his furnace, all these men, and ten thousand others like them, would be embraced. It would be a most vexatious thing to embrace so many persons. As these things are all taxed when manufactured, I hope there will be no objection to striking the paragraph out.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not prevail. I am not sure that the amendment of his colleague may not be a proper one.

This matter has been debated in this House heretofore. When adopted and incorporated into the present law it was fully and carefully considered, and it was acceptable to the House on all sides.

It will be noticed that it does not apply to any persons except those who employ others in mining. It is also restricted to those whose receipts shall exceed $1,000. If any go beyond that they ought to be taxed.

Mr. MOORHEAD. The gentleman says it only taxes those whose receipts shall be $1,000. The receipts of these men are not from the mines but from labor; and the proposition really is to tax labor.

Mr. MORRILL. I will obviate that objection by moving to strike out "his mine" and insert "mining."

Mr. BIDWELL. I move to strike out "gold, silver, and copper."

Mr. Chairman, I hope an interest so important will not be stricken down without giving the members who represent it, and those who are most deeply concerned, full opportunity to be heard. The business of mining for precious metals in this country is but imperfectly understood. There appears to me to be an anxiety to place a tax on this interest which, in my judgment, is improper and onerous, and which can only lead to defeating the purpose which it is intended to accomplish.

Mining, as I have said, is a different business from all others. You cannot carry on mining alone. There was a time in California when a man could start out with pick and shovel and pan. But that time has passed, and it may be forever. You cannot carry on mining alone, at least you cannot carry it on alone successfully on the Pacific slope. What if you make thousands or hundreds of thousands if you are the loser when the balance is struck? I will say that the vast majority of those who carry on the business of mining find their aggregate expenses exceed their aggregate receipts.

As to coal lands in California, while there have been some operations, in nine cases out of ten they have failed. They have to go very deep; the veins are very thin and narrow, and the coal of very poor quality. You have imposed upon them a tax of twenty dollars an acre for the coal lands, which they have to explore at great expense to know whether the lands are underlaid with coal. While I do not wish to misrepresent the mining interest in the least, and while I desire that every productive industry shall be taxed as nearly equally, fairly, and equitably as possible to maintain this Government, I do say that a tax of ten dollars as provided in this bill will be a great wrong, an absolute wrong. The gross receipts cannot be the measure of the taxation the mining interests can bear. I do hope that the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania will prevail, and that the section will be stricken out, and I do it with no purpose to escape any just responsibility in the proportioning of the public debt.

Mr. BLAINE. I do not think the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, from the Pittsburg district, ought to prevail.

I think that during the whole progress of this bill, with all due respect to the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from California, I have seen no motion made more groundless than this. We place a tax upon every trade and calling we can find out, and I undertake to say that it is a fact that the miners, whether in the Pennsylvania coal mines or in the California gold mines, are infinitely better able to pay taxes than the builders, contractors, lawyers, physicians, and surgeons. It is especially provided that there shall not be a tax unless the receipts exceed $1,000 per annum, and then the tax is only ten dollars.

Mr. CULLOM. Suppose you insert the words "who shall be proprietors."

Mr. BLAINE. That raises the question who are proprietors. That gets up a difficulty between those who own the coal lands and those who lease them.

Mr. CULLOM. Say then "the proprietor or lessee."

Mr. BLAINE. Let me make a motion to strike out.

The CHAIRMAN. No amendment is now in order.

Mr. MORRILL. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. BIDWELL. I will withdraw my amendment also, and accept the amendment of the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. BLAINE. I move to strike out in line thirteen hundred and ninety-three the words "from his mine;" so that it shall read:

Provided, That this shall not apply to any miner whose receipts shall not exceed annually $1,000.

Mr. MOORHEAD. What does the gentleman mean by receipts amounting to $1,000, when a man employs two or three men whom he has to pay?

Mr. BLAINE. That would not be included in his receipts.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I think it would. I think a man employing two or three men would be taxed under this section.

Mr. BLAINE. So would a builder or contractor. I repeat that you cannot well go back and relieve every other trade, calling, and business, and I do not believe that there is any class so well able to pay a tax as the miners in the coal mines of Pennsylvania or in the gold mines of California; and I only wonder that the tax upon them has not been increased.

Mr. McRUER. I wish to say, in reply to the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. BLAINE,] that there is not a single tax in this whole bill analogous to this. This is a direct tax upon the labor employed in producing the raw material.

Mr. BLAINE. What is the tax upon cotton?

Mr. McRUER. This is a tax on the gold. There is a tax on cotton; but I beg leave to say that with these two exceptions there is not a tax imposed on any product of labor, being the raw material. Cotton is an exception to all the other agricultural products of the country, and this is an exception, as it taxes the labor employed in producing the raw material. [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KELLEY. I feel that there is not a gentleman in the House who, if he properly understands this subject, will vote for this amendment. The tax proposed is a direct tax upon wages and labor, at least so far as Pennsylvania is concerned.

Mr. BLAINE. The gentleman will allow me to correct him. This refers "to every person, firm, or company who shall employ others in the business."

Mr. KELLEY. I was coming to that. The miner, being a skilled hand, who employs an unskilled laborer to assist him, is to pay a tax first upon the wages, and next, should he reach the point of an income, on his income. In nineteen cases out of twenty, if not in ninety-nine out of one hundred, you will make him pay ten dollars on his earnings. I do not want to exclude any man from taxation who owns or rents a mine, or works it as a capitalist; I simply want to guard the laboring men in our mines from having to pay, first, a tax of ten dollars for the privilege of laboring there, and then an income tax.

Mr. MORRILL. If the gentleman will withdraw his amendment, I will renew it.

Mr. BLAINE. I withdraw it.

Mr. MORRILL. I renew the amendment. Sir, it is not my purpose to advocate any tax in this bill that does not appear to my judgment to be just. I think that if we are to make any exemptions it would not be just for us to do it on this subject of mining. There have been more favors distributed in this bill to the interests of miners than to any other class whatever. We propose entirely to exempt such raw materials as lead and copper and iron and zinc and tin and gold, &c., from any tax, and if we are to derive anything at all from these various interests it must be by levying a special tax in this way.

Now, let us see whether the laborer is more oppressed in this business than in any other. It deny it. I say that when you come to the manufacture of boots or shoes, or to the carpenter, or blacksmith, or tailor, we do not employ the same terms we do in this paragraph; we do not say that he shall only be taxed if he employs others, but we say that if he manufactures goods or articles exceeding $1,000, even if he employ only his own family, he shall be taxed. I must say that this attempt to get an exemption for miners strikes me as being uncalled for. These men are engaged in, perhaps, a business the most profitable in the country. We find all over the country that men are anxious to obtain investments in enterprises of this sort, and the wages paid to those employed are higher than hardly any other kind of business will allow.

Mr. KELLEY. A single suggestion. I am as anxious as the gentleman can be that the proprietors of mines shall be taxed. I want the same thing that he does.

Mr. MORRILL. I cannot yield to the gentleman for a speech. He will have his chance hereafter.

Now, I think that this will present itself to the House as a legitimate subject for a special tax, and I agree with my friend from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] that if this tax is abandoned we ought to abandon many others. I trust we shall not abandon it. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. SCHENCK. I renew it. It strikes me that there is an attempt to make an invidious distinction between this class of proprietors and others in relieving them from taxation. The committee has been careful to define the character and description of the persons who should constitute miners, and thus, it appears to me, they remove, by doing so, such objections as that which is made to this system of taxation of that particular class.

There might be some objection if it was simply proposed to tax every miner ten dollars. But as the paragraph goes on to define that no person shall be held to be a miner except one who employs others, for the life of me I cannot see the distinction between the man so employed because he also employs others and a carpenter who builds a scaffold and undertakes to construct a house. It is said that a miner employs another to work for him and works himself with him, and is as much a laboring man as the one he employs; and therefore this is but taxing labor.

So does a carpenter. A carpenter, in our portion of the country at least, whatever may be the case in other parts of the country, climbs a scaffold and nails boards or shingles on a building in company with one or more journeymen or apprentices whom he employs, and therefore he is in precisely the same category as the description of persons in this paragraph called "miners."

The object is to reach the contractor, as it were. The man may or may not work himself, but he employs others to work for him, and thus induces capital to be employed in the business, out of the profits of which he is to pay those he employs. Now, unless the gentleman can draw a distinction between the man who mounts toward heaven and the man who goes down in the other direction, then I cannot understand why the miner in the shaft should be relieved from this tax any more than the carpenter on the scaffold or ladder.

By reference to paragraph thirty-one, it will be found that every manufacturer is required to pay a special tax of ten dollars. Who is the manufacturer? He may be a shoe-maker or a blacksmith, who works on his bench or at his forge, and has no apprentice or journeyman in his employ or person employed with him to be paid out of the proceeds of the capital he has invested in the business and his labor. If he be a sole laborer you define him to be a manufacturer and compel him to pay a tax.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. What is the effect if the employer employs the men and each is taxed as a manufacturer?

Mr. SCHENCK. We do not propose to tax the hands, but the man who employs them. What I speak of is the attempt to make a difference in principle between the man who employs hands and works with them and the man who employs hands but does not work with them. In the western country most of our manufacturers, our shoe-makers, carpenters, and blacksmiths work with the hands they employ. While we place no tax upon the laborer himself by the definition here, we impose it upon the man who invests capital along with his labor.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I move to amend this paragraph by adding to it the following:

Nor to laborers actually working at mining in the employ of another.

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment is not in order at this time, not being germane to the pending amendment.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I understand there will be no objection to it.

The CHAIRMAN. Still it is not in order at this time. The pending question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SCHENCK.]

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I rise to oppose that amendment. I think the committee misunderstands the objection that is raised to this paragraph as it now stands. When it was introduced last year, it was expressly understood that it should not apply to the working miner, to the laborer who worked in the mine, but only to the proprietor of the mine. And it was thought then that sufficient provision had been made in the law to guard against any misconception of it.

I hold here in my hand a petition from some fifty laboring miners, who state that the tax of ten dollars is imposed upon them, because by the custom of mining coal it is usual for a miner to have with him a laborer, the miner being paid so much a ton for the coal he raises, out of which he pays the laborer. The assessor claims that the miner employs others, and charges him with the tax of ten dollars.

Now, if this paragraph shall be stricken out, and I may be allowed to go back to the paragraph imposing a tax upon manufacturers, I would propose an amendment there which should include miners who are by this paragraph intended to be taxed. In no case is the journeyman in any manufactory taxed. There may be cases where a man carrying on business alone pays tax as a manufacturer; but when he extends his business and employs others, those whom he employs are not required to pay tax as manufacturers. By no part of this bill except this section are workmen required to pay the tax.

After all, Mr. Chairman, the whole tax derived from this source is scarcely worth the time we have consumed in its discussion; for the total amount raised in this way throughout the country does not reach $4,000.

Mr. MORRILL. That has been in consequence of an imperfect administration of the law, and the returns, I think, of 1864, were only for part of the year. This year the tax will amount to much more.

Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of terminating debate on this paragraph I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DAWES reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being bill of the House No. 513, to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof, and had come to no resolution thereon.

REORGANIZATION OF THE ARMY.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
WASHINGTON, May 17, 1866.

SIR: I have the honor to submit herewith a communication from the Secretary of War, inclosing one from the Lieutenant General, relative to the necessity for legislation upon the subject of the Army.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

Hon. SCHUYLER COLFAX,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move that this message, with the accompanying documents, be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and be ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I ask that the letter of General Grant be read.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the communication of the Lieutenant General will be read.

There was no objection, and the Clerk read as follows:

HEADQUARTERS ARMIES OF THE UNITED STATES,
WASHINGTON, D. C., May 16, 1866.

SIR: In view of the long delay in the lower House of Congress in agreeing upon a plan of reorganization of the Army suitable to our present requirements, and the urgent necessity for early action, I am induced to present the matter to you officially, and to ask the attention of Congress to it, believing that when they have the matter fairly before them they will do what should be done speedily.

At the present time settlements are springing up with unusual rapidity in the district of country between the Missouri river and the Pacific ocean, where heretofore the Indian was left in undisputed possession. Emigrants are pushing to those settlements and to the gold fields of the Rocky mountains by every available highway. The people flocking to those regions are citizens of the United States and are entitled to the protection of the Government. They are developing the resources of the country to its great advantage, thus making it the interest as well as duty to give them military protection. This makes a much greater force west of the Mississippi necessary than was ever heretofore required.

A small military force is required in all the States heretofore in rebellion, and it cannot be foreseen that this force will not be required for some time to come. It is to be hoped that this force will not be necessary to enforce the laws, either State or national; but the difference of sentiment engendered by the great war which has raged for four years will make the presence of a military force necessary to give a feeling of security to the people. All classes disposed to obey the laws of the country will feel this alike. To maintain order the Government has been compelled to retain volunteers. All white volunteers have become dissatisfied and claim that the contract with them has been violated by retaining them after the war was over. By reason of dissatisfaction they are no longer of use, and might as well be discharged at once, every one now remaining in service. The colored volunteer has equal right to claim his discharge, but as yet he has not done so. How long will existing laws authorize the retention of this force, even if they are content to remain?

The United States Senate passed promptly a bill for the reorganization of the Army, which, in my opinion, is as free from objection as any great measure could possibly be, and which would supply the minimum requisite force. It gives but a few thousand additional men over the present organization, but gives a large number of additional battalions and companies. The public service guarding routes of travel over the plains and giving protection in the southern States demands the occupation of a great number of posts. For many of them a small company is just as efficient as one with more men in it would be. The bill before Congress, or the one that has passed the Senate, gives increased number of companies, by diminishing the number, rank and file, of each company. It is an exceedingly appropriate measure in this particular, for it provides for the increase when occasion requires more men. The company is the smallest unit of organization that can be used without materially injuring discipline and efficiency.

The belief that Congress would act promptly on this matter, if their attention was called to it, has induced me to respectfully ask your attention to it. If you agree with me in this matter, I would also ask, if you deem it proper, that this, with such indorsement as you may be pleased to make, be laid before Congress, through the Speaker of the House.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
U. S. GRANT,
Lieutenant General.

Hon. E. M. STANTON, Secretary of War.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Speaker, I should like to move that this communication be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, with instructions to report for the consideration of the House the military bill which passed the Senate, and which is now in the hands of that committee.

The SPEAKER. This communication has already been referred to that committee, on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SCHENCK.] It was afterward read by unanimous consent. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. THAYER] can only attain his object by moving to reconsider the vote by which the communication was referred. If the motion to reconsider should prevail, the question would recur on the motion to refer, and then the motion to add instructions would be in order.

Mr. THAYER. I move, then, to reconsider the vote by which the communication was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. STEVENS. I move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The motion of Mr. STEVENS was agreed to—ayes seventy-two, noes not counted.

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, asked leave of absence for Mr. DELANO and Mr. HUBBELL, of Ohio, for one week.

Leave was granted.

CLOSE OF DEBATE.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that when the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union shall resume the consideration of House bill No. 513, all debate upon the pending paragraph and the amendments thereto terminate in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

TAX BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. DAWES in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being a bill of the House (No. 513) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof.

The CHAIRMAN stated the pending question was on Mr. SCHENCK's amendment.

Mr. BLAINE. The gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SCHENCK,] consents to modify the amendment so it will read "whose receipts as such shall not exceed annually $1,000."

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I move to strike out the word "laborer" and to insert the word "person."

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. BIDWELL. I move to strike out "gold."

Mr. Chairman, mining for gold and silver is very different from mining for other metals, and I think there should be a distinction between them. In one case, men can employ their capital with an almost certain prospect of being repaid, while those who engage in mining for silver and gold are differently situated. They have to go into wild and almost inaccessible mountain regions without any certainty of any return. You may ask why men will do this. It is almost inexplicable. It lies as deep as human nature itself. The poet tells us,

"Hope springs eternal in the human breast."

These men travel forty miles a day and suffer all manner of hardships, and they not only lose all their time but very often all their money. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania will prevail. I withdraw my amendment.

The question recurred on Mr. STEVENS's amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 33, noes 40; no quorum voting.

The CHAIRMAN, under the rule, ordered tellers; and appointed Messrs. BIDWELL and THAYER.

The committee was again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 57, noes 38.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

48. Express carriers shall pay ten dollars. Every person, firm, or company engaged in the carrying or delivery of money, valuable papers, or any articles for pay, or doing an express business, whose gross receipts therefrom exceed the sum of $600 per annum, shall be regarded as an express carrier: Provided, That but one special tax of ten dollars shall be imposed upon any one person, firm, or company in respect to all the business to be done by such person, firm, or company on a continuous route, and the payment of such tax shall cover all business done upon such route by such person, firm, or company anywhere in the United States, and such tax shall be required only from the principal in such business, and not from any subordinate.

Mr. ALLISON. I move in line thirteen hundred and ninety-nine to strike out "$600" and to insert "$2,000."

I do this for the purpose of protecting a class of honest, industrious poor people who are engaged in the business of teaming and draying. They are compelled to take out a license of ten dollars when their receipts exceed $600. It compels every man who drives a team in the county or a dray in the town to take out a license. It in effect taxes labor. It seems to me to be straining at a gnat while we are swallowing a camel. The committee were willing that some larger sum should be inserted, but could not agree on the particular sum. I think $2,000 is as small as it should be.

Mr. MORRILL. I object to $2,000 as too large, but I will not object to making it $1,000. I move to amend the amendment by inserting $1,000 instead of $600.

Mr. ALLISON. I rise to oppose the amendment. If the committee will turn to paragraph forty-five they will see that builders and contractors are exempt to the extent of $2,500. Now, these teamsters are compelled to pay out a considerable sum of money during a year for the purpose of taking care of their horses, wagons, &c., so that $1,000 will be entirely too small a sum. And then many of them, as my colleague suggests, are compelled to pay a local license. Now, it seems to me we ought to give this class of persons an exemption such as mechanics have, namely, $1,000 after paying their expenses. A man who employs simply one team will earn more than $1,000 a year, nearly one half of which he will be compelled to pay out during the year. I think we ought to increase the exemption certainly to $1,500, if not $2,000.

The question being put on the amendment to the amendment, to strike out "$2,000" and insert "$1,000," no quorum voted.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Messrs. MORRILL and ALLISON.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes sixty, noes not counted.

So the amendment to the amendment was adopted.

The amendment, as amended, was then adopted.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I move to amend by inserting after the word "carriers," in the first line of paragraph forty-eight, the words "and agents;" so that it shall read, "express carriers and agents shall pay ten dollars." Express agents now do not pay any license. This bill proposes to tax the drayman who hauls goods from express offices if his income exceeds $1,000 a year. It also taxes manufacturers of every description. It did propose to tax miners also. Now, these express companies derive an immense revenue from their business. It is a very profitable business, and I know of no reason why their numerous agents and collectors all over the country should not pay a license or tax as well as the draymen who haul goods for the agency or as artisans or manufacturers in their several occupations. I hope the amendment will prevail.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move to amend by striking out the words "or any articles" in line thirteen hundred and ninety-seven. I offer this for the purpose of confining this provision to express carriers and express agents doing an express business, and leaving out entirely draymen and teamsters. I think this tax should only be levied on those doing an express business either as express companies or as agents of express companies. These draymen and teamsters are quite as worthy of our favor as those who have been exempted by the striking out of the forty-seventh section.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the amendment will not prevail, and for the reason that I indulge the hope that on the second sober thought the House will reinstate paragraph forty-seven when the bill comes before the House; and for the further reason that the proposition of the gentleman from Iowa will be found to include, as I think, more than he intends. There are express agents who do a large amount of business in carrying packages containing articles of merchandise and who rarely carry anything else, and to exempt these would be entirely wrong. It would diminish the receipts so that there would be but very few companies in the whole country that would be liable to any tax at all. If we confine express companies to what they receive from carrying money and valuable papers we should derive scarcely any revenue at all.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the amendment.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the word "article," for the purpose of replying to the gentleman from Vermont.

The gentleman says if my amendment should prevail only those who are engaged in carrying or delivering money or valuable papers would be required to pay a special tax by this section. Now, if the gentleman had read the section he would have found that all the persons to whom he alludes would be brought within the provision of the section by the terms "or doing an express business." That is a complete answer to his argument in opposition to the amendment. It will include all persons carrying "money or other valuable papers or doing an express business;" but it will relieve persons who are not engaged in that business, namely, teamsters and draymen, from this special tax. And they certainly, I repeat, are as much entitled to relief as those embraced in the forty-seventh paragraph, which the gentleman says he hopes on a sober second thought the House will replace. It will be quite as easy to replace the language of this paragraph after the adoption of my amendment as to replace the forty-seventh paragraph.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to remind the committee that the constant effect of our action is to reduce the amount of revenue to be received under this bill. That is all I have to say.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken on the amendment proposed by Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, and it was disagreed to—ayes fifteen, noes not counted.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to add at the end of the paragraph another proviso, to which I think the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] will not object. It is as follows:

Provided, That draymen and teamsters who drive their own drays or teams shall not be required to pay such tax.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I propose to modify the amendment or to offer it in a new form, so as to read as follows:

Provided further, That draymen and teamsters, who drive their own drays or teams, or employ others to drive them, shall not be required to pay this tax.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. At the end of line fourteen hundred and eight I move to insert the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That draymen or teamsters owning one dray or team shall not be required to pay such tax.

Mr. MORRILL. I have no objection to that. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of the paragraph just considered:

That section eighty be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

Manufacturers of ground coffee and spices shall pay $100. Any person who manufactures or prepares for use and sale by grinding or other process coffee, spices, or mustard, or adulterated coffee, spices, or mustard, or any article or compound intended for use in the adulteration of or as a substitute for coffee, spices, or mustard shall be regarded as a grinder of coffee or spices under this act: Provided, That any person who shall roast coffee shall be required to pay the special tax hereby imposed on grinders of coffee and spices.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I omitted to make a verbal amendment. In lines fourteen hundred and seventeen and fourteen hundred and eighteen I move to strike out the words "or estimated amount."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. In line fourteen hundred and twenty-three I move to strike out the words "or is liable to be increased."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That section eighty be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that the special tax shall not be imposed upon apothecaries, confectioners, butchers, keepers of eating-houses, hotels, inns, or taverns, tobacconists, or retail dealers, except retail dealers in spirituous and malt liquors, when their annual gross receipts shall not exceed the sum of $1,000, anything in this act to the contrary notwithstanding; the amount, or estimated amount, of such annual receipts to be ascertained or estimated in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall prescribe, and so of all other annual sales or receipts where the tax is graduated by the amount of sales or receipts, and where the amount of the tax has been increased, or is liable to be increased by law above the amount paid by any person, firm, or company, or has been understated or underestimated, such person, firm, or company shall be again assessed, and pay the amount of such increase: Provided, That when any person, before the passage of this act, has been assessed for a license, the amount thus assessed being equal to the tax herein imposed for the business covered by such license, no special tax shall be assessed until the expiration of the period for which such license was assessed.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

That section eighty-one be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that nothing contained in the preceding sections of this act shall be construed to impose an additional tax upon any person as a dealer for the sale of goods, wares, and merchandise made or produced and sold by the manufacturer or producer at the manufactory or place where the same is made or produced, and at the public office or place of business, as provided in this act; nor upon any vintners who sell wine of their own growth at the place where the same is made; nor upon apothecaries, as to wines or spirituous liquors which they use exclusively in the preparation or making up of medicines; nor shall any provisions be construed to tax physicians for keeping on hand medicines solely for the purpose of making up their own prescriptions for their own patients; nor shall farmers be taxed as manufacturers for making butter or cheese, or for any other farm products.

Mr. MORRILL. I move, in line fourteen hundred and forty-one, to strike out the words "business as provided in this act" and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

Provided, That no goods, wares, or merchandise shall be kept for sale at such office.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend this paragraph by adding to it the following proviso:

Provided, That the payment of any tax, by this act levied or provided, shall not be held or construed to exempt any person carrying on any trade, business, or profession herein specified from any penalty or punishment provided by the laws of any State for carrying on such trade, business, or profession within such State; nor in any manner to authorize the commencement or continuance of such trade, business, or profession contrary to the laws of such State, or in places prohibited by municipal law; nor shall the payment of any tax herein provided be held or construed to prohibit or prevent any State from placing any duty or tax for State or other purposes on any trade, business, or profession taxed by this act.

Mr. SPALDING. I move to amend this paragraph by inserting after the words "for making butter or cheese" the words "with milk from their own cows." I move this amendment for the reason that in my section of country there are manufacturing establishments—"cheese factories" as they are called—where the proprietors buy up large quantities of milk and curd and manufacture large amounts of cheese. I think they ought to be taxed.

Mr. MORRILL. I see no objection to that amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. I would ask my colleague [Mr. SPALDING] if he better not make his amendment to the next line, and insert after the words "or for any other farm products" the words "of their own farms." Will not that accomplish what the gentleman desires?

Mr. SPALDING. Not quite.

The amendment of Mr. SPALDING was then agreed to.

Mr. VAN HORN, of New York. I move to amend this paragraph by adding to it the following:

Provided further, That no manufacturer who has paid one or more special taxes shall be required to pay any additional special tax for peddling the surplus goods of his own manufacture.

I had intended to move this amendment to the paragraph in relation to peddlers, and if the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means [Mr. MORRILL] will consent to turn back to that paragraph so that I can move the amendment to it, I will do so; otherwise I will offer it here.

Mr. MORRILL. I have no objection to the amendment being offered and considered; but I shall oppose its adoption whenever and where ever it may be offered.

Mr. VAN HORN, of New York. Then I withdraw the amendment at this point, and move to amend the paragraph relating to peddlers by adding to the following sentence—

Any person, except persons peddling only newspapers, magazines, Bibles, or religious tracts, who sells or offers to sell at retail, goods, wares, or other commodities, traveling from place to place, in the street, or through different parts of the country, shall be regarded a peddler under this act—a proviso in the following words:

Provided, That no manufacturer who has paid one or more special taxes shall be required to pay any additional special tax for peddling the surplus goods of his own manufacture.

I believe that this is a very proper amendment, and I hope the committee will adopt it. There are a great many small manufacturers in the country who pay one or perhaps more special taxes; and if they have a surplus of goods of their own manufacture they ought to be allowed to peddle it out without being required to pay any additional special tax.

Mr. MORRILL. I trust this amendment will not be adopted. We have provided a uniform system for manufacturers, requiring that they shall have fixed places, and fixed places only, where they may keep their goods, and an office or place where they may sell them. If the committee shall adopt the proposed amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. VAN HORX] you will render the whole subject indefinite. What is the surplus manufacture? Anybody who chooses will be able to go about and peddle, and who can say whether what he peddles is or is not the surplus of his manufacture? Then, again, the tax placed on the peddler is for a specific kind of business. A man who finds it profitable to go about the country and seek a market for his goods can afford to pay a special tax. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. As we have concluded the portion of this bill relating to special taxes I ask leave to go back to the paragraph in relation to manufactures, which is as follows:

31. Manufacturers shall pay ten dollars. Any person, firm, or corporation who shall manufacture by hand or machinery any goods, wares, or merchandise not otherwise provided for, exceeding annually the sum of $1,000, or shall be engaged in the manufacture or preparation for sale of any articles or compounds, or shall put up for sale in packages with his own name or trademark thereon any articles or compounds, shall be regarded as a manufacturer under this act.

I desire to move, for the purpose of accomplishing the object I had in view in the paragraph relating to miners, to insert after the words, "one thousand dollars" the words "or carry on the business of mining."

Mr. MORRILL. I must object to that.

The Clerk read as follows:

That section eighty-six be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause, and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that any person, firm, company, or corporation manufacturing or producing goods, wares, and merchandise, sold or removed for consumption or use, upon which duties or taxes are imposed by law, shall, in their return of the value and quantity, render an account of the full amount of actual sales made by the manufacturer, producer, or agent thereof, and shall state whether any part, and if so, what part, of said goods, wares, and merchandise, has been consumed or used by the owner, owners, or agent, or used for the production of another manufacture or product, together with the market value of the same at the time of such use or consumption; whether such goods, wares, and merchandise were shipped for a foreign port or consigned to auction or commission merchants, other than agents, for sale; and shall make a return according to the value at the place of shipment, when shipped for a foreign port, or according to the value at the place of manufacture or production, when removed for use or consumption, or consigned to others than agents of the manufacturer or producer. The value and quantity of the goods, wares, and merchandise required to be stated as aforesaid shall be estimated by the actual sales made by the manufacturer, or by his, her, or their agent, or person or persons acting in his, her, or their behalf. And where such goods, wares, and merchandise have been removed for consumption or for delivery to others, or placed on shipboard, or are no longer within the custody or control of the manufacturer or his agent, not being in his factory, store, or warehouse, the value shall be estimated at the average of the market value of the like goods, wares, and merchandise at the time when the same became liable to tax.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend by striking out in line fourteen hundred and seventy-five the words "her or their;" and also by striking out after the word "agent" in the same line the words "or person or persons acting in his, her, or their behalf;" so that the clause will read thus:

The value and quantity of the goods, wares, and merchandise required to be stated as aforesaid shall be estimated by the actual sales made by the manufacturer, or by his agent.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That section eighty-seven be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause, and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that any person, firm, company, or corporation who shall now be engaged in the manufacture of tobacco, snuff, or cigars, or who shall hereafter commence or engage in such manufacture, before commencing, or, if already commenced, before continuing, such manufacture for which they may be liable to be assessed under the provisions of law, shall, in addition to a compliance with all other provisions of law, furnish to the assessor or assistant assessor a statement, subscribed under oath or affirmation, accurately setting forth the place, and, if in a city, the street and number of the street where the manufacturing is, or is to be, carried on, the name and description of the manufactured article, and, if the same shall be manufactured for or to be sold and delivered to any other person or party, the name and residence and business or occupation of the person or party for whom the said article is to be manufactured or delivered, and generally the kind and quality manufactured or proposed to be manufactured; and shall, within the time above-mentioned, give a bond to the United States, with one or more sureties to be approved by the collector of the district, in the sum of $3,000 for each cutting machine kept in use, in the sum of $1,000 for each screw-press used for making plug or pressed tobacco, in the sum of $5,000 for each hydraulic press used, in the sum of $1,000 for each snuff mill used, and in the sum of $100 for each person employed by said person, firm, company, or corporation in making cigars, conditioned that he will comply with all the requirements of law in regard to any persons, firms, companies, or corporations, engaged in the manufacture of tobacco, snuff, or cigars; that he will not employ others to manufacture cigars who have not obtained the requisite permit for making cigars; that he will not engage in any attempt, by himself or by collusion with others, to defraud the Government of any duty or tax on any manufacture of tobacco, snuff, or cigars; that he will render truly and correctly all the returns, statements, and inventories proscribed for manufacturers of tobacco, snuff, and cigars; that whenever he shall add to the number of cutting machines, presses, snuff mills, or cigar-makers, used or employed by him, he will immediately give notice thereof to the collector who holds the bond, and will pay to the collector of the district all the duty or taxes which may or should be assessed and due on any tobacco, snuff, or cigars so manufactured, and that he will not knowingly sell, purchase, or receive for sale any such tobacco, snuff, or cigars, which has not been inspected, branded, or stamped as required by law, or upon which the tax has not been paid if it has accrued or become payable. And the said bond may be renewed or changed from time to time, in regard to the amount and sureties thereof, according to the discretion of the collector, under the instructions of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. And every person, firm, company, or corporation aforesaid shall obtain and exhibit, whenever demanded by any officer of internal revenue, a certificate from the collector, setting forth the kind and number of machines, presses, snuff mills, and number of cigar-makers for which the bond has been given. And if any person or agent of any firm, company, or corporation shall manufacture for sale tobacco, snuff, or cigars of any description without first obtaining the certificate aforesaid, and furnishing the bond herein required, such person or agent shall be subject, upon conviction thereof, to a penalty of $300, and in addition thereto shall be liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding one year, at the discretion of the court.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend by inserting after the word "or" in line fifteen hundred and two the words "to whom it is."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move further to amend by striking out the words "within the time above mentioned," in line fifteen hundred and four.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move also to amend by striking out in line fifteen hundred and seven the word "in," between the words "kept" and "use," and inserting in lieu thereof the word "for."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move further to amend by striking out the words "used for," in line fifteen hundred and eight, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "kept for use in."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend by striking out in line fifteen hundred and ten the word "used," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "kept for use."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend by striking out in line fifteen hundred and eleven the word "used," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "kept for use."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend by striking out in lines fifteen hundred and fifteen and fifteen hundred and sixteen the words "any persons, firms, companies, or corporations engaged in."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend by striking out "and," in line fifteen hundred and twenty-seven, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "that he."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend by striking out "has," in line fifteen hundred and thirty-two, and inserting "have" in lieu thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend by striking out the words "amount and," in line fifteen hundred and thirty-six.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move further to amend by striking out "obtain and," in line fifteen hundred and forty.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend by inserting after "collector," in line fifteen hundred and forty-one, the words "who is hereby authorized and directed to issue the same."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move further to amend by striking out the following:

And if any person or agent of any firm, company, or corporation shall manufacture for sale tobacco, snuff, or cigars of any description without first obtaining the certificate aforesaid, and furnishing the bond herein required, such person or agent shall be subject, upon conviction thereof, to a penalty of $300, and, in addition thereto, shall be liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding one year, at the discretion of the court.

And inserting in lieu thereof the following:

And any person, firm, or corporation manufacturing tobacco, snuff, or cigars of any description, without first furnishing the bond in the cases herein required, shall be subject to a fine of $300, and in addition thereto, upon conviction thereof, shall be liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding one year, at the discretion of the court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That section eighty-eight be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause, and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that it shall be the duty of the assistant assessor of each district to keep a record, in a book or books to be provided for the purpose, to be open to the inspection of any person upon reasonable request, of the name of any and every person, firm, company, or corporation who may be engaged in the manufacture of tobacco, snuff, or cigars in his district, together with the place where such manufacture is carried on and place of residence of the person or persons engaged therein; and the assistant assessor shall enter in said record, under the name of each manufacturer, an abstract of his monthly returns; and each assessor shall keep a similar record for the entire district.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

That section eighty-nine be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause, and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that in all cases where tobacco, snuff, or cigars of any description are manufactured, in whole or in part, upon commission or shares, or where the material from which any such articles are made, or are to be made, is furnished by one party and manufactured by another, or where the material is furnished or sold by one party with an understanding or contract with another that the manufactured article is to be received in payment therefor or any part thereof, the duty or tax imposed by law thereon, when paid by the manufacturer, may be collected at the time, or at any time subsequently, of the party for whom the same was made or to whom the same was delivered, as aforesaid, or of the person or party who made the same, as the assessor shall deem best for the collection of the revenue. And in case of any fraud or collusion by which the Government shall be defrauded, or attempted to be defrauded, by a party who furnishes the material and by the maker of any of the articles aforesaid, such material and manufactured articles shall be liable to forfeiture; and such articles shall be liable to be assessed the highest rates of tax or duty imposed by law upon any article belonging to its grade or class.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to strike out all after the word "revenue" in line fifteen hundred and eighty-three down to and including the word "forfeiture" at the end of line fifteen hundred and eighty-seven, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

And in case of any fraud on the part of either of said parties in respect to said manufacture, or of any collusion on their part with intent to defraud the revenue, such material and manufactured articles shall be liable to forfeiture.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That section ninety be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause, and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that any person, firm, company, or corporation, now or hereafter engaged in the manufacture of tobacco, snuff, or cigars of any description whatsoever, shall be, and hereby is, required to make out and deliver to the assistant assessor of the assessment district a true statement or inventory of the quantity of each of the different kinds of tobacco, snuff, or cigars, tin-foil, licorice, and stems held or owned by him or them on the 1st day of January of each year, or at the time of commencing business under this act, setting forth what portion of said goods was manufactured or produced by him or them, and what was purchased from others, whether chewing, smoking, fine-cut, shorts, pressed, plug, snuff, or prepared snuff, or cigars, which statement or inventory shall be verified by the oath or affirmation of such person or persons, and be in manner and form as prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; and every such person, company, or corporation shall keep in books an accurate account of all the articles aforesaid thereafter purchased by him or them, the quantity of tobacco, snuff, snuff-flour, or cigars, of whatever description, sold, consumed, or removed for consumption or sale, or removed from the place of manufacture; and he or they shall, on or before the 10th day of each month, furnish to the assistant assessor of the district a true and accurate abstract of all such purchases, and sales or removals, which abstract shall be verified by oath or affirmation; and in case of refusal or neglect to deliver the inventory, or keep the account, or furnish the abstract aforesaid, he or they shall forfeit the sum of $500, to be recovered with costs of suit; and he or they shall, on or before the last day of each month, pay to the collector the taxes on the said tobacco, snuff, or cigars of whatever description, sold, consumed, or removed for consumption or sale, or removed from the place of manufacture during the preceding month, as aforesaid; and in case the taxes shall not be paid within five days after demand thereof, the said collector may, on one day's notice, distrain for the same, with ten per cent, additional on the amount thereof, subject to all the provisions of law relating to licenses, returns, assessments, payment of taxes, liens, fines, penalties, and forfeitures, not inconsistent herewith in the case of other manufacturers; and such tax shall be paid by the manufacturer or the person who furnished the materials or was otherwise interested in said business, as the assessor may deem best for the collection of the revenue. And it shall be the duty of any manufacturer or vendor of tin-foil or other material used in manufacturing tobacco, snuff, or cigars, on demand of any officer of internal revenue, to render to such officer a correct statement, verified by oath or affirmation, of the quantity and amount of tin-foil or other materials sold or delivered to any person or persons named in such demand; and in case of refusal or neglect to render such statement, or of cause to believe such statement to be incorrect or fraudulent, the assessor of the district may cause an examination of persons, books, and papers to be made in the same manner as provided in the fourteenth section of this act: Provided, That manufactured tobacco, snuff, or cigars, whether of domestic manufacture or imported, may be transferred, without payment of the tax, to a bonded warehouse established in conformity with law and Treasury regulations, under such rules and regulations and upon the execution of such transportation bonds or other security as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, said bonds or other security to be taken by the collector of the district from which such removal is made; and may be transported from such a warehouse to any other bonded warehouse established as aforesaid, and may be withdrawn from bonded warehouse for consumption on payment of the tax, or removed for export to a foreign country without payment of tax, in conformity with the provisions of law relating to the removal of distilled spirits, all the rules, regulations, and conditions of which, so far as applicable, shall apply to tobacco, snuff, or cigars in bonded warehouse. And no drawback shall in any case be allowed upon any manufactured tobacco, snuff, or cigars, upon which any tax has been paid either before or after it has been placed in bonded warehouse.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to strike out after the word "suit" in line sixteen hundred and twenty-two down to and including the word "revenue" in line sixteen hundred and thirty-seven, that being a provision contained in another section.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to insert before the word "provided" in line sixteen hundred and forty-nine, the following:

And all the provisions of law relating to manufacturers generally, so far as applicable to and not inconsistent herewith, shall be held to apply to the manufacture of tobacco, snuff, and cigars: Provided, That the tax imposed upon the manufacture of tobacco, snuff, and cigars shall be assessed on or before the time of removal from the place of manufacture, and shall be payable at the time of such removal, unless removed to a bonded warehouse. But nothing herein shall exonerate the manufacturer of tobacco, snuff, and cigars from liability to tax in case of sale before such removal.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. It will now be necessary to insert the word "further" after the word "provided."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THAYER. I move to add to the paragraph the following:

In any port of entry within which is embraced more than two collection districts the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to place all the bonded warehouses in said port under the charge of one collector of internal revenue to be by him designated; and the collector so designated shall have entire charge and control of all matters connected with said bonded warehouses and the property stored therein.

I offer this to obviate what is represented to me to be a very great inconvenience to the business interests of that class of persons who have occasion to deposit goods in those bonded warehouses. But, sir, instead of making a speech on the subject myself, I will ask the Clerk to read a communication which I hold in my hand signed by over fifty firms in the city of Philadelphia, setting forth the particular inconvenience which this amendment is proposed to remedy.

The Clerk read the letter, as follows:

PHILADELPHIA, March 9, 1866.

DEAR SIR: We beg leave to address you upon a subject which we regard as important to the business men of this city generally, but especially to those who are engaged in the trade of manufactured tobacco, distilled spirits, and refined petroleum. You are aware that the existing internal revenue laws give to the owners of such property the right to place it in bonded warehouse, whence it can be removed for exportation free from tax, and for consumption upon payment of same.

Bonded warehouses established for such purpose are located, we believe, in every district of this city or port, and are by law placed under the supervision of the collector of internal revenue of the particular district in which so located. Before any property can be placed in bonded warehouse the owner or consignee is required to pass an entry, and give bond to the collector of the district having charge of the warehouse in which it is designed to store the property; and upon its removal either for export or consumption the same form has to be again complied with.

Understanding, as you do, the location of the several congressional districts of this city, you will readily perceive the great trouble and delay which must necessarily occur in having to visit almost daily the several collectors' offices, situated, as they are, so distant from each other. It not unfrequently happens that parties desirous of exporting such articles are required on the same day to go to three or four collectors' offices for the transaction of the required business for a single operation. The inconvenience, trouble, loss of time, together with the pecuniary sacrifices which must occasionally occur, when prompt and immediate action is necessary, must be obvious; and such promptness of action is not attainable under the present system.

We assume that the policy of the Government is to afford all possible facilities to trade not inconsistent with a proper fulfillment of the laws; and hence we beg leave to suggest to you a modification of the internal revenue law, which, without injuriously affecting the rights of the Government, will remedy the evils to which we have adverted, and which are obstacles in the way of constantly increasing business operations. The modification of the law which we would propose is, that all the bonded warehouses in this port shall be put under the supervision of one collector, who shall be chargeable with all matters connected with the property stored therein, and that such collector shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Under such regulations all the requirements of the law in reference to such business could be fulfilled at one office. The advantage of the arrangement must be apparent to every one.

If your judgment in this matter is in accord with the views herein expressed we will feel greatly obliged if you will adopt such course as in your judgment is best calculated to secure the object in view.

We are, sir, very respectfully, yours.

Hon. RUSSELL THAYER,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. THAYER. The committee will perceive that the amendment simply gives authority to the Secretary of the Treasury to put these several bonded warehouses in a port of entry in the charge of a single officer, if, in his opinion, the public convenience requires it.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. It seems to me that that amendment would introduce a good deal of confusion into the Department. There is, already, under the law, an officer designated in all ports of entry for the conduct of all business connected with the exportation of goods. That, it seems to me, covers this difficulty; and I think it would be decidedly objectionable to place all the warehouses under the control of one collector.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Chairman, the object of this amendment is to remedy the very confusion to which the gentleman refers. In large ports of entry, like Philadelphia or New York, there is one of these bonded warehouses in each congressional district; and every consignee, or owner of vessels, who has, perhaps, a cargo or consignment arriving every day, has to go about to these bonded warehouses; has to run far and near, corresponding with the area of these congressional districts, in order to transact his business, instead of going to one officer, as the gentleman intimates he may. The law requires him to go to the collector of internal revenue for that district in order to transact his business; and in my city he is often obliged to go to five different offices, situated many miles apart, in order to do business relating to a single transaction.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. The business of a single transaction must surely be with a single collector.

Mr. THAYER. It is not. It is with five collectors. That is the difficulty. It is with the collector of internal revenue for the particular congressional district, and must be so by law.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. Why should he go to five collectors?

Mr. THAYER. Because he is obliged to go to the collector of the particular district in which the bonded warehouse is situated, and there is a bonded warehouse in every collection district in the city of Philadelphia.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I do not see the necessity of his going to more than one.

Mr. THAYER. Perhaps the gentleman does not; but the law requires him to do it; in point of law he is obliged to go to five. Now, my amendment simply proposes to give the Secretary of the Treasury discretionary authority to place these bonded warehouses under the care of a single officer in such cases as in his opinion the public convenience may require, and that is all.

Mr. STEVENS. I would like to hear that amendment read again. I want to see how extensive it is.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. STEVENS. Is that all? It does not affect my people, and I have no objection to it. We have got only one collector.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That section ninety-one be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause, and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that all manufactured tobacco, snuff, or cigars, whether of domestic manufacture or imported, shall, before the same is used or removed for consumption, be inspected by an inspector appointed under the fifty-eighth section of the act to which this is an amendment, who shall mark or affix a stamp upon the box or other package containing such tobacco, snuff, or cigars, in a manner to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, denoting the kind, quantity, or number contained in each package, with the date of inspection and the name of the inspector and the collection district. The fees of such inspector shall in all cases be paid by the owner of the manufactured tobacco, snuff, or cigars so inspected. And the penalties for the fraudulent marking of any box or other package of tobacco, snuff, or cigars, and for any fraudulent attempt to evade the taxes on tobacco, snuff, or cigars so inspected, by changing in any manner the package or the marks thereon, shall be the same as are provided in relation to distilled spirits by existing laws. And all cigars manufactured after the passage of this act shall be packed in boxes. And any manufactured tobacco, snuff, and cigars, whether of domestic manufacture or imported, which shall be sold or pass out of the hands of the manufacturer or importer, except into a bonded warehouse, without the inspection marks or stamps affixed by the inspector, unless otherwise provided, shall be forfeited, and may be seized where ever found, and shall be sold, one half of the proceeds of such sale to be paid to the informer, and the other moiety to the United States. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall keep an account of all stamps delivered to the several inspectors; and said inspectors shall also keep an account of all stamps by them used or placed upon boxes containing cigars, and of all tobacco, snuff, and cigars inspected, and the name of the person, firm, or company for whom the same were so inspected, and return to the assessor of the district a separate and distinct account of the same, and also return to the said Commissioner, on demand, all stamps not otherwise accounted for, and shall give a bond for a faithful performance of all the duties to which he may be assigned, and to return or account for all stamps which may be placed in his hands.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to amend that paragraph by inserting in line sixteen hundred and ninety-two after the word "boxes" the words "or paper packages;" so that it will read:

And all cigars manufactured after the passage of this act shall be packed in boxes or paper packages.

Mr. MORRILL. That is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. In line sixteen hundred and ninety-eight I move to strike out "one half of" and to insert in lieu thereof "and;" and in lines sixteen hundred and ninety-nine and seventeen hundred to strike out the words "to be paid to the informer, and the other moiety to the United States;" and to insert in lieu thereof the following: "shall be distributed between the United States and the informer, if there be any, as provided by law;" so that the same will read:

Any manufactured tobacco, snuff, and cigars, whether of domestic manufacture or imported, which shall be sold, or pass out of the hands of the manufacturer or importer, except into a bonded warehouse, without the inspection marks or stamps affixed by the inspector, unless otherwise provided, shall be forfeited, and may be seized wherever found, and shall be sold, and the proceeds of such sale shall be distributed between the United States and the informer, if there be any, as provided by law, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to amend near the close of the paragraph by inserting the word "shall" before the words "return to the said Commissioner," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk then read as follows:

That section ninety-two be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause, and inserting in lieu thereof the following: that if any person other than the manufacturer shall sell, or consign, or remove for sale, or part with the possession of any manufactured tobacco, snuff, or cigars, upon which the taxes imposed by law have not been paid, with the knowledge thereof, such person shall be liable to a penalty of $100 for each and every offense. And any person who shall purchase or receive for sale any such tobacco, snuff, or cigars, which has not been inspected, branded, or stamped as required by law, or upon which the tax has not been paid, if it has accrued or become payable, with knowledge thereof, shall be liable to a penalty of fifty dollars for each and every offense. And any person who shall purchase or receive for sale any such tobacco, snuff, or cigars, from any manufacturer who has not paid the special tax, shall be liable for each and every offense to a penalty of $100, and, in addition thereto, a forfeiture of all the articles, as aforesaid, so purchased or received, or the full value thereof. And every person, before making any cigars after the passage of this act, shall apply for and procure from the assistant assessor of the district in which he or she resides, a permit authorizing such persons to carry on the trade of cigar making, for which permit he or she shall pay said assistant assessor the sum of twenty-five cents. And every person employed or working at the business of cigar making in any other district than that in which he or she is a resident shall, before making any cigars in such other district, present said permit to the assistant assessor of the district where so employed or working, and procure the indorsement of said assistant assessor thereon, authorizing said business in said district, for which indorsement the assistant assessor shall be entitled to receive from the applicant the sum of ten cents. And it shall be the duty of every assistant assessor, upon application of any person residing in his district, to furnish a permit, or to indorse upon the permit of the applicant, if resident in another district, authority to pursue the trade of cigar making within the proper district of such assistant assessor; and said assistant assessor shall keep a record of all permits granted or indorsed by him, showing the date of each permit, the name, residence, and place of employment of the party named therein, the name and district of the officer who originally granted the same, or who may have made any subsequent indorsements thereon, and the name or names of the party or parties by whom the person named in such permit is employed, or, if working for himself or herself, stating such fact; and every person making cigars shall keep an accurate account in a book of all the cigars made by him or her, for whom, and their kind or quality; and, if made for any other person, shall state in said account the name of the person or persons for whom the same were made, and his or their place of business, and shall, on the first Monday of every month, deliver to the assistant assessor of the district a copy of such account, verified by oath or affirmation that the same is true and correct. And if any person shall make any cigars without procuring such permit, or the proper indorsements thereon, or neglect to keep such account in a book, he or she shall be punished by a fine of five dollars for each day he or she shall so offend, or by imprisonment for such time as the court may order for each day's offense, not exceeding thirty days in the whole, upon any one conviction. And if any person making cigars shall fail to make the return herein required, or shall make a false return, he or she shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $100, or by imprisonment not exceeding thirty days. And any person furnished with such permit may apply to the assistant assessor or inspector of the district to have any cigars of their own manufacture counted; and on receiving a certificate of the number, for which such fee as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall be paid by the owner thereof, may sell and deliver such cigars to any purchaser, in the presence of said assistant assessor or inspector, in bulk or unpacked, without payment of the duty. A copy of the certificate shall be retained by the assistant assessor, or by the inspector, who shall return the same to the assistant assessor of the district. The purchaser shall pack such cigars in boxes or paper packages, and have the same inspected and marked or stamped according to the provisions of this act, and shall make a return of the same, as inspected, to the assistant assessor of the district, and, unless removed to a bonded warehouse, shall pay the duties on such cigars within five days after purchasing them, to the collector of the district wherein they were manufactured, and before the same have been removed from the store or building of such purchaser, or from his possession; and any such purchaser who shall neglect for more than five days to pack and have such cigars duly inspected, and pay the duties thereon according to this act, or who shall purchase any cigars from any person not holding such permit, the duties thereon not having been paid, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and be fined not exceeding $500, and be imprisoned not exceeding six months, at the discretion of the court, and the cigars shall be forfeited and sold, one fourth for the benefit of the informer, one fourth for the officer who seized or had them condemned, and one half shall be paid to the Government. And if any person, firm, company, or corporation shall employ or procure any person to make any cigars, who has not the permit or the indorsement thereon required by this act, he, she, or they shall be punished by a fine of ten dollars for each day he, she, or they shall so employ such person, or by imprisonment not exceeding ten days. And if any person shall be found making cigars without such permit, or the indorsement thereon, the collector of the district may seize any cigars, or tobacco for making cigars, which may be found in possession of such person, and the same shall be forfeited to the United States and sold; and one half of the proceeds shall be paid to the United States, one fourth to the informer, and the other fourth to the collector making the seizure.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to amend by striking out the words "or hers," "or she," "she or they," wherever they occur in this paragraph.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THAYER. I would ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] if the word "assistant" should not be stricken out before the word "assessor."

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman is right. I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THAYER. I move to amend by inserting the words "wherein the same were manufactured" after the words "shall make a return of the same, as inspected, to the assessor of the district."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend, at the close of the paragraph, by striking out the following:

And one half of the proceeds shall be paid to the United States, one fourth to the informer, and the other fourth to the collector making the seizure.

And inserting in lieu thereof the following:

And the proceeds of such sales shall be distributed between the United States, the informer, if there be any, and the collector making the seizure, as provided by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. One portion of this paragraph reads as follows:

And every person making cigars shall keep an accurate account in a book of all the cigars made by him or her, for whom, and their kind or quality; and, if made for any other person, shall state in said account the name of the person or persons for whom the same were made, and his or their place of business, and shall, on the first Monday of every month, deliver to the assistant assessor of the district a copy of such account, verified by oath or affirmation that the same is true and correct.

I move to amend by inserting, at the close of the sentence I have read, the following proviso:

Provided, That journeymen cigar-makers and apprentices who work for others shall not be considered as included within this proviso.

I will state briefly the object of this amendment. By the law as it now stands, and as it has been construed, a man may have twenty journeymen employed at making cigars. Not only the employer and his book-keeper are required to make out every night a full return of all the work done in the shop, but every journeyman and every apprentice working there must keep his book and make out his nightly return to be handed to the assessor.

Now, I suppose that construction of this provision was never intended; but it is a construction which has been put upon it. I know it may be said that this is a sort of check upon the employer: the workmen are all made spies upon the employer. It may have that effect in some instances, but it is so entirely perplexing that very few workmen will be found who are willing to work under this provision if so construed. I know that in my town last year the workmen refused to work, and turned out and paraded the streets until the assessors agreed to take the returns of the employers and book-keepers, and dispense with the returns of the workmen.

Now, I do not know anything more irritating than this very provision requiring every journeyman when he goes home at night to set down in his book and make out an account of his day's work to be returned to the assessor. This provision is very stringent upon the owners, employers, and book-keepers, and it should not, I think, impose this task upon the laboring classes.

Mr. MORRILL. I regret to be compelled to oppose the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS.] I have no doubt there is some hardship caused by this provision; but I cannot conceive that it is anything like the hardship that the gentleman has represented.

As I understand it, these parties are employed to make cigars by the thousand; and they have to keep an account with their employers to show what they have done, and what their wages amount to. The gentleman says that they must make these returns every night; but in point of fact they are not required to make the returns except once a month.

Experience has taught us that without such a provision as this in the law we have no clue by which to reach the manufacturer and find out whether he makes a true or a fraudulent return. The Government was formerly defrauded to a large extent by collusion between the manufacturer and the persons taking out tobacco to manufacture for him. This provision has been found a very effectual one thus far in the practical operation of the law. It has been found, I believe, to be a sure preventive of collusion such as I have referred to. I trust that the amendment will not be adopted.

The question being taken on the amendment, it was declared not agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I call for a division.

Mr. MORRILL. As there is evidently not a quorum present, I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DAVES reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being bill of the House No. 518, to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. WILLIAM J. McDONALD, its Chief Clerk, informed the House that the Senate had passed a joint resolution of the House (No. 103) to refer the petition of Benjamin Holliday to the Court of Claims, with an amendment, in which he was directed to request the concurrence of the House.

The message further informed the House that the Senate had passed bills and a joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (S. No. 313) regulating the transportation of nitro-glycerine or glynn oil;

An act (S. No. 316) to establish a post route from West Alburg, Vermont, to Champlain, in the State of New York, and for other purposes; and Joint resolution (S. R. No. 92) authorizing the appointment of examiners to examine a site for a fresh-water basin for iron-clad vessels of the United States Navy.

Mr. INGERSOLL moved that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at half past four o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule and referred to the appropriate committees: By Mr. CONKLING: The petition of citizens of Uden, New York, asking extension of time for State banks to retire their circulation.

By Mr. DUMONT: The petition of the board of trustees of the Indiana Agricultural College.

By Mr. GARFIELD: The petition of 65 citizens of Geauga county, Ohio, asking for increased protection on American wool.

By Mr. HARDING, of Illinois: The memorial of citizens of Oquawka, Illinois, against obstructive bridges across the upper Mississippi.

Also, the memorial of citizens of Rock Island, against the building of obstructive bridges across the upper Mississippi.

By Mr. INGERSOLL: Two petitions from citizens of Peoria county, Illinois, one praying an increase of duty on imported wool, and twenty-five cents per pound duty on foreign shoddy and woolen rags; and one praying a tax of two dollars per head on all dogs.

Also, two petitions from citizens of Knox county, Illinois, one praying an increase of duty on imported wool, and twenty-five cents per pound duty on foreign shoddy and woolen rags; and one praying a tax of two dollars per head on all dogs.

By Mr. LAFLIN: The petition of citizens of Jefferson county, New York, in favor of an increased tariff on imported flax and flax tow.

By Mr. LATHAM: The memorial of ladies of French Creek, West Virginia.

By Mr. LONGYEAR: The petition of William Clapp, and 56 others, citizens of Jackson county, Michigan, asking for an increased duty on wool.

By Mr. MARVIN: The petition of sundry citizens of Fulton county, New York, asking an ad valorem and an increased duty on imported wool.

By Mr. MARSTON: The petition of Joseph H. Graves, and 290 others, citizens of Portsmouth, New Hampshire, praying that Congress will fix eight hours for a day's labor.

By Mr. ROLLINS: The petition of Seth Eastman, and 35 others, citizens of Concord, New Hampshire; James A. Smith, and 34 others, citizens of Rhode Island; George H. Phelps, and 20 others, citizens of Lee, Massachusetts; A. P. Rand, and 31 others, citizens of Westfield, Massachusetts; Jacob Stone, and 32 others, citizens of Newburyport, Massachusetts; and Taylor, Symonds & Co., and 33 others, citizens of Providence, Rhode Island, severally praying for the passage of just and equal laws for the regulation of inter-State insurances of all kinds.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, May 18, 1866.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. H. GRAY. The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. TRUMBULL presented the petition of William M. Riggs, claiming compensation for services rendered as a scout and guide to the Union forces in the State of Tennessee during the years 1864 and 1865, accompanied with the evidence of the services which he performed; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WILSON. I present the petition of George W. Graham, and thirty-six others, watchmen in the Treasury building. They set forth that the whole number of watchmen in that building is thirty-seven, twenty-six of whom served in the Army, six were exempt by reason of age, and five for disability. They say they are on duty fifteen hours out of the twenty-four, while watchmen in the other public buildings are only on duty fifteen hours out of forty-eight, and they therefore ask for an increase of compensation. I move its reference to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND presented the petition of A. D. Prindle, and thirty-one others, citizens of Franklin county, Vermont, representing that the duty on foreign wool by the existing tariff is wholly insufficient to furnish proper protection to the wool-growers of this country, and praying that the same may be increased; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WADE presented the petition of William A. Otis and S. A. Mather and other officers of the savings bank at Cleveland, Ohio, praying that deposits in savings banks may be exempt from taxation; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SUMNER. I offer the petition of colored citizens of Baltimore, in which, among other things, they ask Congress to strike out the second clause of the proposed amendment to the Constitution, which has already passed the House of Representatives, and which is now pending before the Senate, and to substitute therefor these words: "No Congressman shall sit as such who is not elected by at least one half of all the loyal men of his party, without regard to color or race, if citizens of the United States and over twenty-one years of age."

As that subject is now before the Senate, the committee having made their report, I move that this petition be received and that it lie upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. I offer the petition of John J. Varannes, who calls himself "a soldier for the Union," wherein he represents that the arch-rebel Jefferson Davis should be punished for his many crimes; and he proceeds to say there is great danger that if tried by a civil court secessionists may get on the jury and consequently he may be acquitted or the jury may disagree. Accordingly, he asks that he may be tried by a court-martial, and prays that the Senate may direct his Excellency the President to convene a court-martial with powers to try Jefferson Davis. In offering this petition I desire to say that I express no opinion with regard to its prayer. I am willing, however, to add, as the subject is directly before us, that in my opinion a trial of Jefferson Davis at this moment by a jury at Richmond will be one of those great comedies which hereafter will excite the derision of history. I know of no committee to which this may more appropriately be referred than the Committee on Military Affairs; and I ask its reference to that committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That reference will be ordered.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CLARK. The Committee on Claims, to whom were referred two petitions of sundry voters in the State of Florida, praying for compensation for property destroyed by the rebel authorities, have had that matter under consideration and directed me to report that the prayer of the petitioners cannot be granted. I ask that it be disposed of at once. It is a very short matter.

The report was concurred in.

Mr. WILLIAMS, from the Committee on Claims, to whom were referred resolutions of the Legislature of New York, in favor of the payment of claims of the militia of that State who served in the war of 1812, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. SPRAGUE, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred a memorial of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Union of Washington, District of Columbia, praying for the passage of a law creating them a body politic and corporate, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia; which was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred a joint resolution (H. R. No. 134) relative to appointments to the Military Academy of the United States, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom the subject was referred, reported a joint resolution (S. R. No. 96) providing for the transfer of certain clerks to the office of the Quartermaster General; which was read and passed to a second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a joint resolution (S. R. No. 86) to provide for the publication of the Official History of the Rebellion, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report in writing; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. CRAGIN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 422) for the relief of Mrs. Ann E. Smoot, widow of Captain Joseph Smoot, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. NORTON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 354) for the relief of Edward P. McKinney, of Binghamton, New York, late captain and assistant commissary of subsistence, reported it without amendment.

BILL RECOMMENDED.

On motion of Mr. POMEROY, it was Ordered, That the bill (S. No. 224) to aid in the construction of a southern branch of the Union Pacific railway, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes, together with the amendments thereto, be recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands.

PRINTING OF A BILL.

On motion of Mr. POMEROY, it was Ordered, That the bill (S. No. 169) granting lands to make up deficiencies of former grants in aid of the completion of the Tomah and Lake St. Croix and the St. Croix and Lake Superior railroads, in the State of Wisconsin, be printed and recommitted to the Committee on Public Lands.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Finance:

A bill (H. R. No. 597) to authorize the use in post offices of weights of the denomination of grammes; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 140) to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish to each State one set of the standard weights and measures of the metric system.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 141) to authorize the President to appoint a special commissioner to facilitate the adoption of a uniform coinage between the United States and foreign countries, was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SUMNER. I think that last joint resolution should go to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SHERMAN. These bills ought to go together to the same committee. They were all reported from a special committee of the House and ought to go together; they are kindred bills. The metric system—that, I believe, is the name given to it—is a system proposed to be adopted in regard to coinage and weights and measures.

Mr. SUMNER. I have no wish certainly to draw them to the committee with which I am associated; only it seemed to me from the title that perhaps the latter resolution belonged to that committee.

Mr. CONNESS. They are financial measures.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think they had better go to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The original reference to the Committee on Finance will stand, no objection being made.

Mr. SUMNER afterward said: Several bills came from the House of Representatives this morning relating to the metric system. I thought at the time they should be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. One or two of them were referred without notice to the Committee on Finance. I understand from the Senator from Ohio that the Committee on Finance, so far as they have considered the question, are not disposed to proceed with those bills, and the Senator himself has suggested to me that a special committee would be more appropriate. It will be remembered that there is a special committee on this subject in the other House. I have therefore thought it advisable to move the appointment of a special committee on this subject, to which these bills—there are three already, and I think there is a fourth on your table—should be referred. I move that a special committee of five be appointed by the Chair, to which all bills and measures relating to the metric system shall be referred.

Mr. HENDERSON. It seems to me that the Finance Committee is the most appropriate committee for measures of this description. I scarcely see the necessity of raising a special committee on the subject. It will, perhaps, more appropriately go to the Committee on Finance than to any other, unless there be some special reasons that I have not heard.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The motion was agreed to.

CIRCUIT COURT IN VIRGINIA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A bill (H. R. No. 563) amended by the Senate is returned from the House of Representatives accompanied by the following resolution:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
May 16, 1866.

Resolved, That the House non-concur in the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 563) to regulate the time and fix the place for holding the circuit court of the United States in the district of Virginia, and for other purposes, and ask a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I believe it is in order to move to recede from the Senate amendment and agree to the bill as passed by the House originally. If so, I make the motion. The amendment which the House has disagreed to, I will state to the Senate, was striking out the latter part of the bill which gave to the judges of the court authority to appoint special terms and to adjourn the court from time to time. It was thought by the Committee on the Judiciary that the laws already conferred that power, and hence we struck out that provision in the bill as it came from the House. The House has disagreed to it, and I move that the Senate recede from its amendment and then the bill will be passed.

The motion was agreed to.

TRANSMISSION OF SOLDIERS' MEDALS.

Mr. SHERMAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 97) to authorize certain medals to be distributed to veteran soldiers free of postage.

Mr. SHERMAN. Perhaps the Senate are willing to pass the resolution now. The State of Ohio gave medals to veteran soldiers, and the Legislature adjourned at the last session without making an appropriation for their distribution. They are now on hand for distribution, and this simply provides that they may be sent through the post office free of postage. If any Senator desires a reference I have no objection to its being referred; but if not, as the medals are there, I should like to have it passed so that it may go to the other House.

Mr. WADE. Let it be passed at once; there can be no objection to it.

The joint resolution was read at length. It proposes to authorize the adjutant general of the State of Ohio to distribute through the mails free of postage to veteran soldiers enlisted in Ohio certain medals furnished by the General Assembly of that State, and to provide that in such case the envelope inclosing the medals shall be franked in the mode prescribed by the Postmaster General.

The joint resolution was read three times and passed.

BRIDGE AT WINONA.

Mr. NORTON. I move to take up Senate bill No. 263, which was laid aside the other day on the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. DOOLITTLE.]

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 263) to authorize the Winona and St. Peter's Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Mississippi river, and to establish a post route.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate concur in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. NORTON. I will state to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. HOWE] that the amendments that have been adopted were the amendments proposed by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. HOWE. There is one of those amendments that I thought there was a question about. I wish to call attention to the amendment to the first section. Is not that a new principle?

Mr. RAMSEY. It is embraced in all the other bills that have been reported here by the Post Office Committee. It is to avoid a difficulty that occurred in the litigation in regard to the Rock Island bridge. I believe the proceedings were first had in the district court of the United States for the State of Iowa; and I think it was there held that they had jurisdiction but to the thread of the stream, and hence had not jurisdiction of the whole matter of the bridge. This is to give that jurisdiction to the courts.

Mr. HOWE. I have no objection to it.

Mr. RAMSEY. The amendment was suggested by those who have in charge the interests of navigation at St. Louis.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will put the question on concurring in the amendments collectively, unless a division of them be asked.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. HOWE. I move to amend the first section of the bill by inserting after the word "Wisconsin" in the ninth line, the words "or between La Crosse, in the State of Wisconsin, and the opposite bank of said river, in the State of Minnesota, as may be agreed by the Legislatures of Minnesota and Wisconsin;" so that the section will read:

That the Winona and St. Peter's Railroad Company, a corporation existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Minnesota, be, and the same is hereby, authorized and empowered to erect, maintain, use, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi river, between the city of Winona, in the State of Minnesota, and the opposite bank of said river, in the State of Wisconsin, or between La Crosse, in the State of Wisconsin, and the opposite bank of said river, in the State of Minnesota, as may be agreed by the Legislatures of Minnesota and Wisconsin, subject to the conditions and limitations hereinafter provided.

Mr. NORTON. I hope this amendment will not be adopted for several reasons; chiefly from the fact that this company, the Winona and St. Peter's Railroad Company, has no authority to build a railroad to a point on the Mississippi river opposite the city of La Crosse. This company is building a road west from the city of Winona, and also has a charter authorizing it to construct a road on the east side of the river from a point opposite the city of Winona to intersect with the Milwaukee and La Crosse road. This company has no authority, nor is there any company in the State of Wisconsin incorporated that has authority to build a railroad from Winona to La Crosse. There is a road in process of construction from La Crosse, or opposite La Crosse, westwardly, running through Minnesota, now running perhaps twenty or thirty miles. To the construction of a bridge at that point to connect those two roads, there is no objection on the part of the people of Minnesota; certainly none on the part of the persons interested in the construction of this bridge at Winona.

The effect of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin is to inaugurate, or rather to continue, a local contest between the city of La Crosse and the city of Winona. The Senator from Wisconsin proposes to amend the bill by authorizing the construction of a bridge either at Winona or La Crosse as the Legislatures of Wisconsin and Minnesota may agree. The result of that would be that the Legislature of Wisconsin, consulting the interests of the city of La Crosse, would insist upon the construction of the bridge at La Crosse, and would not consent to the construction of a bridge at Winona; and the Legislature of Minnesota would withhold its consent to the construction of a bridge at La Crosse, and insist upon its being at Winona. The consequence would be, the Legislatures not agreeing, that there would be no bridge built.

Now, sir, the interests of the two States will be subverted and there will be no conflict of interest between these points if we allow the construction of a bridge at La Crosse when the railroad companies touching the river at that point and opposite to it shall desire it; and to that the State of Minnesota has no sort of objection; and we think that the State of Wisconsin ought to have no objection to the construction of a bridge at the city of Winona, where the Winona and St. Peter's Railroad Company now have some seventy miles of road, and are engaged in the construction of a road on the east side of the river. The effect of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin, if adopted, will be inevitably that there will be a disagreement between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota on this subject, and consequently no bridge will be built. I hope it will not be adopted.

Mr. HOWE. It seems to me the Senate will not refuse to agree to this amendment. There is a very large interest in the State of Wisconsin and in the State of Minnesota which is opposed to the bridging of this great natural highway at all; but it is very generally conceded that the interests of commerce tending between the East and the West do require bridges at certain points; and this necessity has been recognized in two or more instances by the Senate of the United States. But I think every Senator will agree that there is no commercial interest that requires a bridge, which is a sort of highway, to be constructed across that river except at points where the river is touched by railroads both from the West and from the East. Where there is a mere ferry across the river now, connecting two common roads, there can be no commerce over such a point of sufficient importance to warrant the building of a bridge; but where railroads, which are great highways, ministering to great commercial wants, touch the river on each bank there may be a just claim set up for furnishing a bridge connecting those two great artificial highways.

This bill proposes the bridging of the river at a point called Winona, in the State of Minnesota. There is a railroad touching the river at that point from the West, but there is no railroad in existence touching it from the East. It connects with no road on this side. It is alleged that if this bridge be authorized, a road will be built from the point opposite Winona, on the Wisconsin side, to connect with the roads east; but at La Crosse, which is about thirty miles below Winona, on the same river, there is a road touching the river from both sides.

Mr. NORTON. Will the Senator allow me, just here, to say that neither of the railroad companies touching at La Crosse, neither the Minnesota company nor the Wisconsin company, is now asking for the privilege of building a bridge there.

Mr. HOWE. No, Mr. President; neither of them is here asking for a bridge at this time.

Mr. NORTON. Nor are they asking it of the States.

Mr. HOWE. I state the fact that at that point, which is about thirty miles below Winona, there are three artificial highways already constructed and touching the river on both banks; and it would seem to me that if a bridge were to be built anywhere in that region, across the river, there is the proper place.

It is said that the company which has constructed the road touching the Mississippi at Winona is not authorized to go down to the river to the point opposite La Crosse and does not want to go down on that side. That is very likely to be the case with that company; but we understand that there is no difficulty in the way of their coming down there if they wish. But here is the fact: this company has sought permission of the State of Wisconsin to build this bridge at Winona, and the State has refused to give her assent. Whether she has acted wisely or not it is not for me to say. It certainly is not for me to say that she has acted unwisely. I am bound to suppose that her own Legislature knows her own interests and is truly subserving those interests. But the friends of this project insist upon it that it is of great service to the State of Wisconsin to have that traffic which they say is coming to the Mississippi from the West carried through the State of Wisconsin. If it is, Wisconsin knows it, and if it is, Wisconsin will consent to have the river bridged. But I must conceive that the State of Wisconsin knows better where she wants the bridge than I can know, and I think it is not unreasonable to suppose that she knows better than this Senate. If she wants that commerce enough to allow the bridge to be built at Winona, then the company owning the road on the other side have only to say, "We will not cross the river anywhere else," and Wisconsin will have the privilege of taking the traffic over the river at that point or not taking it at all.

I do not see anything unfair or unreasonable in this. Hitherto the State of Wisconsin has refused her assent to the building of a bridge at Winona, and now this very grave and serious question is presented to the Senate: will you compel the State of Wisconsin to consent to the building of a bridge at that point against her protest? I have heard it argued very gravely here, and insisted upon repeatedly, that Congress cannot impose any such obligation upon a State or any such burden upon a State; that it is absolutely beyond the constitutional power of Congress to authorize the building of a highway within the State, whether a bridge or a railroad, against the assent of the State. Here the State refuses, has refused, her consent. I really hope the Senate will not compel the State to give her consent. She has just as much interest in having this traffic pass through her borders, perhaps, as Minnesota has in sending it through. I do not doubt but that the two Legislatures can agree as to the point where the bridge shall be built; but I do think it is just as fair that Wisconsin should be consulted about it as that Minnesota should be allowed to dictate the point, and I hope the Senate will give her that privilege.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. President, the State of Minnesota certainly has no disposition to dictate to the State of Wisconsin upon this subject, or upon any other; and at the same time that she has no such disposition, she is certainly not disposed to allow the State of Wisconsin to dictate to her what shall be the system of railroads within her State. The road built by this Winona and St. Peter's Railroad Company is one of the land-grant roads built in pursuance of and in carrying out the general railroad system of Minnesota. The proposition of the Senator from Wisconsin is to compel Minnesota to change that railroad system and construct a road some forty miles to make an eastern connection which she can make in twenty-seven and a half miles. Neither the people of the city of Winona, nor this company, nor the State of Minnesota has any sort of objection to the construction of a bridge at La Crosse whenever the railroads at that point or the State of Wisconsin shall want it. We are entirely willing that they shall construct a bridge there, and we think that it is not asking too much that the State of Wisconsin should consent to the construction of this bridge at Winona.

As I said before, there is no railroad company in Minnesota authorized to construct a road from Winona to La Crosse on the west side of the river. There is a road through southern Minnesota touching the river opposite La Crosse. That is a land-grant road, and one being constructed in pursuance of the general railroad system of the State. The company constructing the road touching at Winona have authority from the State of Wisconsin to construct a road on the east side of the river a distance of twenty-seven and forty-seven one hundredths miles to a point on the Milwaukee and La Crosse road. Now if we should be compelled in Minnesota to construct a road on the west side of the river and cross at La Crosse we should be required to construct a road fifteen miles longer to reach the same point on the east side of the river, and at a cost estimated from surveys on the west side of the river of something nearly three quarters of a million dollars more than the cost of a road on the east side connecting at the same point with the Milwaukee and La Crosse road. It is true the road on the east side of the river is not yet constructed, but it is in process of construction, and I am assured will be constructed this summer. This company desire the privilege of building the bridge, so that by the time the road is constructed, or nearly by that time, the bridge may be completed and afford a continuous connection and communication with the lakes.

The Senator says that Wisconsin has refused to consent to the construction of this bridge. The Senator will allow me to say that he is misinformed. The truth is, that late in the session of the Legislature of Wisconsin application was made for the consent of that State to construct this bridge, that the bill in the House passed through the Committee of the Whole, but owing to the pressure of business, it being near the end of the session, it was not reached and was not acted upon, and in point of fact there was no refusal on the part of the Legislature of Wisconsin to consent to the construction of this bridge.

Now, I think I can explain to the Senate in a very few words the precise condition of this matter. La Crosse lies some forty miles below Winona. It is the terminus of the Milwaukee and La Crosse road on the east and of the Southern Minnesota railroad on the west side of the river. Winona is the terminus of the Winona and St. Peter's road on the west side and the terminus of the La Crosse, Trempealeau, and Prescott road on the east side of the river. I am informed, and I have had an opportunity to know something myself in regard to the fact, that the only interest in the State of Wisconsin that opposes the construction of this bridge at Winona is the local influence of the city of La Crosse. We are entirely willing that that local interest shall be subserved so far as it may be by the construction of a bridge at that point; and all we ask of them is that they will not object to the construction of this bridge at the city of Winona, which is certainly quite as much required and demanded by the business and commercial interests of the two States as is the construction of a bridge at La Crosse. I hope that the Senate will not, by the adoption of this amendment, place this matter in the position that it would be in of continuing a contest between those two States which must inevitably result in the failure to construct any bridge at all.

Mr. RAMSEY. I understand my colleague is willing to accept this bill with an amendment making it subject to the assent of the State of Wisconsin.

Mr. NORTON. Certainly; I have no objection to that. I do not understand the Senator from Wisconsin as urging that, but that it should be left to the States to choose between these two points. If the Senator from Wisconsin will propose an amendment requiring this company to obtain the assent of the Legislature of Wisconsin to the construction of this bridge at Winona I shall not object to it; but I do object to his leaving it in the alternative, for the Legislature to select one of these two points. If the Senator will propose an amendment to authorize the construction of both these bridges I have no objection to its being put on this bill, or I will favor a bill providing for the construction of a bridge at La Crosse.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, that would be partial justice, but not complete. The Senator from Minnesota says, that while he does not wish to dictate to the State of Wisconsin where bridges shall be built across this river, he does not wish the State of Wisconsin to dictate to the State of Minnesota her railroad system. We do not propose any such thing. When he crosses the thread of the Mississippi river he is in Wisconsin with his railroads, and not in the State of Minnesota. While they are constructing railroads and bridges in the State of Minnesota, of course they can take the direction of their own Legislature; but when they come into the State of Wisconsin, we think the State of Wisconsin ought to be consulted. So much for that point.

But the Senator says that he is willing, if I will propose such an amendment, to allow this bill to be amended so as that it shall not be operative except upon the consent of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin. I say that is partial justice, not complete, because then Congress says to the State of Wisconsin, "If you want that traffic to come through your State, and consent to the building of that bridge at Winona, you can take it, not otherwise." I ask Congress to say to the two States, "You may have the choice of allowing the river to be bridged at either of the two points." The bridge cannot be built at La Crosse without the consent of the State of Minnesota; it cannot be built at Winona without the consent of the State of Wisconsin. Both States are put upon an equal footing, and have equal authority over the question. Nothing can possibly be fairer than that, and then Congress does not coerce either of the States.

My friend from Minnesota says that this is a controversy between the cities of La Crosse and Winona. Not at all. If it be so, I do not represent La Crosse here in the controversy; I represent the State of Wisconsin. I only know—and I cannot concede that I am mistaken on the point—that the State of Wisconsin has hitherto refused to allow this bridge to be built at Winona; has refused to consent to it. The Senator says it was by reason of want of time.

Mr. NORTON. I will inquire of the Senator if he is informed that the Legislature of Wisconsin acted upon the proposition and refused to adopt it.

Mr. HOWE. No, sir. I am not informed that they rejected any such bill, but I am informed that they refused to assent to any such bill.

Mr. NORTON. Did they act upon the bill at all? Did they consider it?

Mr. HOWE. I understand they did consider it through the whole winter. I understand there was an active lobby there.

Mr. NORTON. If the Senator will allow me, I think he will find that he is mistaken. His information is as to an amendment of the charter of the La Crosse, Trempealeau, and Prescott Railroad Company. An amendment to that charter was the matter which was protracted there, but this subject was not acted upon.

Mr. HOWE. I make no affidavits here. I only state what is reported to me. I understand there was a lobby in attendance upon the Legislature during most of the session urging this project.

Mr. NORTON. Not upon this subject; it was upon the other.

Mr. HOWE. So I am informed. The Senator may be more correct than myself. The fact is—there is no denial of that—that Wisconsin has not assented to the building of this bridge.

Mr. NORTON. That is true; she has not.

Mr. HOWE. The Senator says that he is perfectly willing that a bridge shall be built at La Crosse, if they can have a bridge at Winona. That would put the commerce, up and down the river, to the necessity of encountering two bridges within thirty miles of each other.

Mr. NORTON. Forty.

Mr. HOWE. My friend says it is forty. I will not say that it is not forty miles by the course of the river, but, as I find by the map, Winona is just about two townships due north of the latitude of La Crosse.

Mr. RAMSEY. And just as many west.

Mr. HOWE. But La Crosse is about three townships further east than Winona; so that if a road were built along the west bank of the river, from Winona to La Crosse, it would make a southing of two townships, or twelve miles. It would make an easting, it would get on its way to the East, about three townships, and when it gets to La Crosse it is in connection with the railroad already striking the river at that point. Now, I am informed—I do not seek to enforce the truth of this upon the Senate, because it is not a question that I think the Senate has any particular interest in considering—that the bridge, supposing there is to be but one, would better accommodate the State of Minnesota—not the city of Winona [Mr. NORTON. That we will judge of]—but the State of Minnesota, better at La Crosse than at Winona. Why? Because all the commerce from every part of the State could strike the river at La Crosse, without going more than twelve miles south of Winona, and is all the time going east; but if the bridge be built at Winona, it is away north of some of the finest agricultural districts in Minnesota. This is what I am told; but, as my friend says, that is for Minnesota to consider, and not for me. I only ask that you will allow Minnesota to consider it, to consider it not for herself alone, but in conjunction with the State of Wisconsin; allow the two States to consider it, and let them determine.

The Senator says that that will defeat the bridging of the river at all. Why? Because the two States will not agree. Then will you impose upon either of the States the burden of having a bridge built within its borders where it does not want it? I do not ask you to impose the burden upon Minnesota in reference to La Crosse. Why should they ask you to impose it upon Wisconsin in reference to Winona?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, it becomes the duty of the Chair to call up the special order. By an order of the Senate, to-day, at one o'clock, is fixed for the consideration of bills reported by the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. NORTON. I hope we shall be allowed to get a vote on this bill. If this company are to be allowed to construct this bridge, it is very important that they should know it at once, so that they may enter upon its construction this summer; and if that privilege is not to be allowed them, we would like to know it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The special order can be laid aside only by unanimous consent, without a motion.

PENSION LAWS.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 863, supplementary to the several acts relating to pensions, this day having been specially set apart for the consideration of bills and reports from the Pension Committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate under the order.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. VAN WINKLE to add as an additional section the following:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That the fourteenth section of an act entitled "An act supplementing to an act entitled 'An act to grant pensions,' approved July 14, 1862," approved July 4, 1864, be, and the same is hereby, repealed, and that the widows and children of colored soldiers and sailors who have been or may be hereafter killed, or who have died or may hereafter die of wounds received in battle, or of disease contracted in the military or naval service of the United States, and in the line of duty, shall be entitled to receive the pensions provided by law, without other evidence of marriage than proof, satisfactory to the Commissioner of Pensions, that the parties had habitually recognized each other as man and wife, and lived together as such for a definite period, not less than two years next preceding the enlistment of the man; and the children born of any marriage so proved shall be deemed and taken to be the children of the soldier or sailor party thereto: Provided, however, That if any such soldier or sailor, and the woman alleged to be his widow, resided previously to the enlistment of the former in any State in which the marriage between them might have been legally solemnized, the usual evidence of marriage shall be required.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. When this bill was under consideration some five weeks since, or very nearly five weeks since, I endeavored to explain the object of this amendment to the Senate; but as that length of time has elapsed, I will do so again as briefly as I can. The amendment is printed and has been on the tables of Senators for that length of time. I will first read the section which it is intended to amend, and then I can point out easily the difference between the two propositions. Section fourteen of the act approved July 4, 1864, provides—

"That the widows and children of colored soldiers who have been or who may be hereafter killed, or who have died or may hereafter die of wounds received in battle, or who have died or may hereafter die of disease contracted in the military service of the United States, and in the line of duty, shall be entitled to receive the pensions now provided by law without other proof of marriage than that the parties had habitually recognized each other as man and wife, and lived together as such for a definite period next preceding the soldier's enlistment not less than two years, to be shown by the affidavits of credible witnesses: Provided, however, That such widow and children are free persons: Provided further, That if such parties resided in any State in which their marriage may have been legally solemnized the usual evidence shall be required."

I stated on a former occasion that this section which I have just read was drawn up by the late Senator from Vermont (Mr. Foot) at the third conference meeting upon the bill of which it is a part, and that it had seemed to prove satisfactory to all parties. Nevertheless, there are some additions, perhaps, that should be made to it, for it was considered at midnight and in a hurry, and there is also something in the change of circumstances since then which has induced me to offer the amendment now before the Senate. One difference is that this amendment is made to cover sailors as well as soldiers. Another is that this fourteenth section required the fact of marriage to be proved by the affidavits of credible witnesses. I have substituted for that "proof satisfactory to the Commissioner of Pensions." I have introduced a clause to meet a case where the wife of such a marriage may have died and where the children are the proper parties to receive the pension. While children are alluded to in the original section, it does not seem to cover a case such as I have stated, of the death of the mother where the children will be the only applicants. I have simply introduced the words, "and the children born of any marriage so proved shall be deemed and taken to be the children of the soldier or sailor party thereto." The preceding part of the amendment provides that the woman shall be deemed to be the wife.

I have also in the proviso to my amendment inserted the words "previously to the enlistment of the former in any State" so as to confine the proviso to the fourteenth section of the act of 1864, which is as follows:

"That if such parties resided in any State in which their marriage may have been legally solemnized, the usual evidence shall be required."

In the events of the war, many of these people were driven from their homes, and some of them into the free States, or States in which a marriage might have been legally solemnized between them; but under the circumstances it is hardly to be expected that they could have had an opportunity to avail themselves of the ceremony. I have therefore changed the words, so as to require simply that if previous to the enlistment of the soldier they lived in a State where their marriage could have been solemnized, the usual evidence of marriage shall be demanded. Since the close of the war, and since the Freedmen's Bureau has been in operation, it has been almost compelling, if it was necessary, but inciting at least and advising, these people who had lived in the relation of man and wife, to have a legal ceremony solemnized between them; and I believe it has been pretty extensively done. This amendment, as the Senate will perceive, is certainly in the interest of their widows and children; and I believe from my knowledge of the subject and the customs that prevailed among them when they were in a state of slavery, of always having something in the nature of a marriage ceremony between them, and knowing that many of them who were well disposed otherwise, lived as faithful to their marriage vows as other people—I think it is but justice to them that these pensions should be secured to them, and that something, at any rate, of this nature should be adopted in an amendment to the section which I have read.

Mr. GRIMES. I will inquire of the Senator from West Virginia if he supposes it is absolutely necessary that the last clause of the proviso to this amendment shall be retained, which requires that if they shall have cohabited together during the last two years preceding the period of enlistment, that shall not be evidence alone, but that the soldier or widow shall produce record evidence of the fact of marriage. It seems to me it is very possible, altogether probable, that although in some of the States they may have been authorized to be married by the laws of the State, yet that that law has not been complied with, and the marriage has not been solemnized, the public sentiment being in opposition to any such thing. Now, if we are going to allow—and I think the committee is right in that—the fact of cohabitation for two years to be sufficient evidence, why not permit it to be so in all?

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I will explain further than I have done. I thought that the proviso as it originally stood, that is, that if such parties resided (not saying at what time) in any State in which their marriage could have been legally solemnized the usual evidence should be required would cut out many proper cases. I presume that if an application is made even now for a pension by one of these parties the Commissioner would feel himself bound to inquire whether the man had at any time previous to the application resided in a State where the marriage might have been legally solemnized, and in such case would require record proof. In reflecting on the circumstance which I mentioned a little while ago, that some of these people were driven from their homes undoubtedly and driven into the free States, or into States where their marriages might have been solemnized, and were there as soldiers with perhaps their wives attending them in the camp, it seemed to me that it was almost an impossibility that a marriage could have been solemnized between them in such cases, and it is very unlikely that under such circumstances they would have thought of it.

Since the end of the war the Freedmen's Bureau has been doing what it could, and no doubt has been successful to a very great extent, in inducing these persons who had theretofore lived together as man and wife to have a legal ceremony performed between them. Now, if the old proviso prevails—and I think that if the Senate does not accept the one I offer that ought to be stricken out—those of this class who were driven into a free State, or into a State in which a marriage might have been solemnized, will find themselves under the necessity of producing record evidence of the marriage, when the fact is that they never had any legal ceremony of marriage. My impression is—I leave it to the better judgment of the Senate—that the modification I have proposed in this proviso is only justice to these people whose thoughts had not been called to the subject, and perhaps whose knowledge in regard to it did not lead them to know that the marriages under which they were living were, in fact, not sanctioned by law.

As I stated the other day, there was nothing on the statute-book of Virginia which forbade a marriage between colored persons. The difficulty there arose simply under the common law as they had interpreted it in that State, that persons in the condition of slavery, being subject to their masters, could make no contract, not even the contract of marriage; nor, as my colleague mentioned on that occasion, was a contract made by them with respect to their own freedom regarded as binding in any way. I presume this was the case through most of the southern States, although I believe that in Delaware, and perhaps also in South Carolina, very recently before the war, marriages were authorized under certain circumstances between colored persons. I think that throughout all the rest of the southern States a ceremony of marriage between colored persons was never legalized, although in most cases a ceremony of some kind was performed. Generally a colored man read the service of some of the churches, and the parties stood up and assented to it as formally, perhaps, as they would have done if the person had been a legal officer. My own impression is that this proviso should remain as I have modified it.

Mr. GRIMES. I am not going to propose any amendment; I wanted merely to call the attention of the committee and of the Senate to the points that occurred to me, and another one I will suggest. The amendment proposed by the Committee on Pensions provides that the widow or heirs of a colored soldier who had cohabited with his wife two years preceding the enlistment shall be entitled to a pension. We all know that these colored people were not enlisted until the lapse of two years after the commencement of the rebellion, and in many instances not till after the lapse of three years. During those three years they had left their former masters, and had left their wives with them in many instances, had come North or had come to the District of Columbia, running away and leaving behind them their families, not cohabiting with their wives. Under the law as it is proposed to be enacted, would not the wives of those persons be excluded from deriving a pension, and is it the design of the committee to thus exclude them?

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I did not, when I replied to the gentleman before, advert to the fact that striking this proviso from my amendment would in fact strike it out from the old law. I began by remarking that if this was stricken out the other should be stricken out. I have no objection to striking out the proviso entirely.

Mr. GRIMES. I am not proposing any amendment; I am not familiar enough with the subject to undertake to do that. I am only calling the attention of the Senator and his associates to these points, so that they may be guarded against.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I will make no objection to striking out that proviso. I will accept it as an amendment to my amendment, if I am at liberty to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can modify his amendment.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I strike out the proviso.

Mr. JOHNSON. How does it read as modified?

The Secretary read it, as follows:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That the fourteenth section of an act entitled "An act supplementary to an act entitled 'An act to grant pensions,' approved July 14, 1862," approved July 4, 1864, be, and the same is hereby, repealed, and that the widows and children of colored soldiers and sailors who have been or may be hereafter killed, or who have died or may hereafter die of wounds received in battle, or of disease contracted in the military or naval service of the United States, and in the line of duty, shall be entitled to receive the pensions provided by law, without other evidence of marriage than proof satisfactory to the Commissioner of Pensions, that the parties had habitually recognized each other as man and wife, and lived together as such for a definite period, not less than two years next preceding the enlistment of the man; and the children born of any marriage so proved shall be deemed and taken to be the children of the soldier or sailor party thereto.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I desire the attention of the chairman of the committee. That will really not accomplish his object at all. It is "two years next preceding the enlistment." I am sure that a large proportion of the men of the colored regiments that I organized had been separated from their wives for two years before the enlistment. They had fled from Missouri and Arkansas into Kansas, and there enlisted, leaving their wives in Missouri and Arkansas. Now, I suggest that in the phrase "two years next preceding the enlistment of the man" the words "next preceding the enlistment" be stricken out, so that proof of two years' cohabitation, without reference to the time of the enlistment, will draw the pension. I speak of it in reference to the regiments I organized, and it holds good of the regiments organized in the District of Columbia and in the free States, everywhere; the soldiers, the men, fled from their families and enlisted, leaving their families in servitude. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the words "next preceding the enlistment of the man;" so as to read:

That the parties had habitually recognized each other as man and wife, and lived together as such for a definite period, not less than two years.

Mr. JOHNSON. In many of these cases in point, they not being conscious of any impropriety or immorality in it, they had a good many wives, and if the proof of marriage is made to depend upon the fact of cohabitation, if they should die there might be half a dozen wives claiming pensions. It is more especially true of those who were driven away from their homes, some of them one, two, or three years before the rebellion. I venture to say that in all such cases (if they contracted marriage in that form) they contracted matrimony where they went, and if the last marriage contracted in that way is to exclude the former great injustice might be done to the former wife. In some of the States they were permitted to marry, and I dare say in very many instances the wives that they left were wives that became such by a legal contract of marriage; that is, a contract made in pursuance of law. The Supreme Court have decided that it is not necessary that there should be any ecclesiastical ceremony about it; that all that is needed is an agreement to marry followed by cohabitation. That is marriage. But that would not be the case where the laws prohibited their marriage, as was the case in some of the States.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. Could we not reach the object by fixing some date, say the 4th of July, 1861, and require proof of cohabitation for two years previous to that? I am indebted to the Senator from Iowa for this suggestion. I think the pension should go to the wife who was such at the time the rebellion commenced.

Mr. POMEROY. I submit that the widows of those who have taken wives since the rebellion commenced have just as good claims as the widows of those who had wives before.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. This matter was up at the last session of Congress, and was finally arranged by a committee of conference. I believe there were three committees of conference before an agreement was arrived at, and the words now in the statute were proposed by Senator Foot, of Vermont, after the most careful consideration, as furnishing the best rule which we could possibly agree upon, and that was two years' cohabitation preceding the enlistment. I believe that rule embraces more meritorious cases than any other, and I think it is the safest rule. If we say that proof shall be required of two years' cohabitation before the rebellion commenced it will not provide for many cases where colored soldiers, who had no wives before the rebellion, married after the commencement of the rebellion. I think the words used by Senator Foot were best, and they are the words of this amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. What is to become of the wives of those who married after enlistment?

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. They are not provided for here.

Mr. JOHNSON. Ought they not to be?

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. They are provided for, I suppose, under the general provision relative to those residing in States where marriages were legalized. If the man is living he gets the pension himself; but if he is dead, his minor children and widow get the pension, upon proof of marriage, where they lived in a State in which marriage among colored people was legalized.

Mr. LANE, of Kansas. I am confident the chairman of the committee would not express that opinion with the knowledge that I have; for I assure him that two thirds of the members of the regiments I organized had been separated from their wives for more than two years—had, in fact, been driven away from their homes.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. That does not affect the question of cohabitation, unless they have adopted another wife since. Temporary absence, for any time, however long, would not affect the question of cohabitation, it seems to me, but the wife would still be the wife. Even if the husband were away for five years, proof of cohabitation having been made, that relation would be presumed to continue, unless there was a divorce.

Mr. GUTHRIE. As I understand this amendment it does not say which wife is to have the pension. Now, as a matter of fact, we who live in communities where there are many negroes know that very often they have two or three wives, and we also know that a great many of them having wives have left home and taken other wives afterwards. There is nothing in this amendment to designate, in such cases, which wife shall have the pension.

Mr. GRIMES. It seems to me that it will be well to put in some definite time, say the 4th of July, 1861, at the place where the Senator from Kansas proposes to strike out these words. The chairman of the Committee on Pensions says that in that case a great deal of trouble might be occasioned, because a good many soldiers have married wives since then. That may be true; but in all such cases there can be record evidence of the marriage produced. We are only intending, now, to cover the cases of parties who were not authorized to be married and could not be married under the laws of the States where they lived prior to the rebellion. If we provide here that proof of cohabitation for two years prior to the 4th of July, 1861, shall be required, then it seems to me we obviate the objection made by the Senator from Maryland and the Senator from Kentucky as to which wife we pay, if there be more than one, and we avoid all the troubles which are involved in that suggestion.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. Of course it will be seen by every Senator that the subject itself is one of difficulty, and what seems to be necessary in the case is to establish some reasonable rule by which the Commissioner of Pensions may be directed. It strikes me that the section which I propose by way of amendment, and the language of the amendment as I have modified it, provides as good a rule as can be established. If you say "previous to the rebellion," or previous to any date in the past, you leave the interval between that date and the enlistment of the soldier when he may have gone off, and almost criminally abandoned, so far as humanity is concerned, his wife and children. I do not know that any cases of difficulty have arisen under this particular part of the existing law, as yet, but if there have, or if any such shall hereafter arise, and the rule works hard in any particular case, it will be competent for Congress to give special relief. If those cases seem to be numerous, or sufficiently numerous to justify it, no doubt then some amendment will be introduced into the pension laws, on the strength of the experience thus gained, which will meet the cases. The best reflection I am able to give the subject is that the rule as it stands in the amendment I offer is the most reasonable we can adopt under the peculiar circumstances presented to us.

Mr. DAVIS. I would suggest to the honorable gentleman from West Virginia that probably this language would answer: "that the first living wife should have the benefit of the pension."

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I think it would hardly be safe to admit the fact that there is more than one wife in these cases.

Mr. DAVIS. We know there are with negroes. They sometimes have three or four at the same time, and they change them very rapidly sometimes, too. I think that the woman who is the first wife of the negro is the proper recipient of this bounty. He may change his wife half a dozen times, as many of them do; still I think the first wife ought to receive the pension, and I think the gentleman ought to adopt a rule to give it to the first wife.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. Perhaps the wives changed their husbands as often as husbands changed the wives. [Laughter.]

Mr. DAVIS. That would not change the rule in relation to the pension that is to be given to the widows of deceased soldiers.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I will say, in reply to the Senator from Kentucky, that if there are two women claiming to be the wife of the soldier the matter will have to be adjudged of by the Commissioner of Pensions; and if any questions or difficulties arise in relation to this matter the Commissioner of Pensions must settle them, if the law will permit him to settle them. If not, and there is no case for relief, it will come, as we have daily cases coming here, for the special action of Congress. As I have suggested, a year or two's experience will determine whether this law as it stands is proper. If not, the very experience got at the Pension Office will enable us to introduce a suitable amendment. I retain the impression that the provision as it stands in the old section and in the amendment is better suited to the case than any that has been suggested.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not think the amendment as it stands is exactly as it ought to be on account of the fact that it would require proof of cohabitation down to the very period of enlistment, and I think we, most of us, understand the fact to be that many persons were separated from their wives for a considerable period before they enlisted; and at the same time I am not entirely satisfied with the amendment to the amendment which is offered, for the reason that in many cases it will allow proof of marriage upon mere presumption when other proof is attainable. If this amendment is not agreed to, so that I can have an opportunity, I shall then propose to amend the original amendment by striking out the words in the thirteenth, fourteenth, fifteenth, and sixteenth lines, "that the parties had habitually recognized each other as man and wife, and lived together as such for a definite period, not less than two years next preceding the enlistment of the man," and insert in lieu of them the words, "which in civil actions would raise the presumption of the marriage of white persons;" so that the clause will read:

Shall be entitled to receive the pensions provided by law without other evidence of marriage than proof satisfactory to the Commissioner of Pensions, which in civil actions would raise the presumption of the marriage of white persons.

Of course the law as to white persons is perfectly well understood in civil actions; that length and degree of cohabitation which under the circumstances satisfies a reasonable man that the relation really existed, whether the proof comes down to the very point of time at which the inquiry is instituted, or whether it shows the relation to have existed at some previous period. There is a well-settled rule of law in civil actions, which prevails in all the States I believe, substantially alike; and it appears to me that such a provision would cover all the cases and would not be open to any objection which occurs to me. If, therefore, the pending amendment to the amendment should not be agreed to, I should then offer the one which I have named.

Mr. HENDERSON. I hope no change will be made in the provisions of this amendment. It is precisely the law of July 4, 1864. It makes no change in that law on this subject, and I have heard no complaint in our State, where we had a large number of negro troops, in regard to that law. If the change suggested by the Senator from Vermont be made, in all probability a different construction will be given to the provision by the Second Auditor from that which he has given to the present law of 1864, and much confusion would inevitably result from the change. I have heard no complaint whatever in our State in regard to the law, and I should regret very much to see a change made. I think it is much better, now that we have become accustomed to the proof necessary under the act of 1864, that it should remain as it is.

Mr. HARRIS. What is the act of 1864?

Mr. HENDERSON. The provision to which I allude is contained in the fourteenth section of the act of July 4, 1864, to be found on page 401 of the Acts of 1863-64, in these words:

"That the widows and children of colored soldiers who have been or who may be hereafter killed, or who have died or may hereafter die of wounds received in battle, or who have died or may hereafter die of disease contracted in the military service of the United States, and in the line of duty, shall be entitled to receive the pensions now provided by law without other proof of marriage than that the parties had habitually recognized each other as man and wife, and lived together as such for a definite period next preceding the soldier's enlistment not less than two years, to be shown by the affidavits of credible witnesses."

I have not found any complaint in regard to this provision requiring proof of cohabitation for two years next preceding the time of enlistment, and we had a large number of negroes in the service from our State. The only complaint I have heard in that State is that there is no act enabling bounty and back pay to be drawn upon the same terms. The Second Auditor here requires the best proof of marriage in order to enable the payment of back pay and bounty, because he says, and perhaps correctly, that the change of the law in regard to pensions allowing proof of cohabitation to be received without a certificate of marriage does not authorize him to change it in regard to bounty and back pay.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. Allow me to suggest to the Senator that the Senate has already passed a bill introduced by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WILSON] on the subject of bounty and back pay, and that is what drew my attention to the subject in relation to pensions. I furnished to him the amendment which I had drawn, at his request, and he said he would take it to the committee of the House. I presume, therefore, the matter of bounty and back pay is under consideration in the other House.

Mr. HENDERSON. Knowing the difficulty on this subject, at an early period of the session I offered a resolution instructing the Committee on Military Affairs to inquire into it. I should like to amend this provision so as to include claims for bounty and back pay, because the same proof that is good in the one case ought to be good in the other.

Mr. President, I will state that not as much difficulty can arise in this matter, according to my knowledge of the subject, as Senators seem to think. I know that it is sometimes the case that negroes have a plurality of wives, or that they cohabit with a plurality, but I believe they regard, as white people do, some particular one as the wife. I do not see the difficulties to spring from this provision that Senators seem to fear. I have heard of no difficulty in all the adjudications of this question. I have heard of no contradictory claims. I have heard of no two women claiming to be the wife of the same negro, although we had a large number of negro soldiers from my State. I believe the claims are very satisfactorily adjusted here; and it is as well known in communities where the negroes live which is the wife, and who has been regarded as the wife for the last six, eight, or ten years, as it is perhaps in the case of white people.

It was at first required by the Second Auditor that record evidence of the marriage should be filed; that is, that a certificate should be filed. It is well known that in the slave States no such certificate was ever authorized in regard to colored persons. It was only authorized in the case of white persons. The distinctive word "white" ran through all our laws. That evidence of the marriage could not be furnished, but my impression is that there is no inconvenience from the rule now provided. I desire to vindicate the negroes from the charge of practical Mormonism brought against them, for I do not believe the evil exists to one half of the extent implied by the argument of the Senator from Kentucky and other Senators.

I think no difficulty will arise from the adoption of the amendment as it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. POMEROY in the Chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. LANE] to the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. VAN WINKLE.]

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. HENDERSON. I hope the Senator who has charge of this bill will not object to include in this provision claims for bounty and back pay. I move to amend the amendment by inserting after the word "pension" in the eleventh line the words "bounty and back pay."

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I must object to the introduction of those words, not because it is not very proper that bounty and back pay should be awarded on the same proof as pensions, but because it is introducing matter foreign to the subject of pensions. There are a series of laws in reference to bounty and back pay, and another series of laws in reference to pensions. Our laws are certainly confused enough without voluntarily introducing any more confusion into them.

Another reason for objecting to this amendment is the fact, to which I have already adverted, that the Senator from Massachusetts, who is not now present, did propose an amendment to a military bill, where it was appropriate and pertinent, in reference to this very subject of bounties and back pay; and that amendment was adopted by the Senate and sent to the House of Representatives. I have already stated that it was that action which called my attention to the necessity of something similar in reference to pensions. I stated, however, to that Senator an objection I had to that amendment as it was passed. I did not see it until after it had been passed by the Senate; I was not present at the moment of its passage. He requested me to give him a copy of what I had prepared in relation to pensions, and said he would take it to the committee of the other House and have it inserted there, in relation to bounties and back pay. As the matter has been brought to the consideration of Congress, and will probably be provided for, though in some slightly different form, in a bill yet pending in the other House, I think we should not attempt to insert it here.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am always averse to interfering with bills of this character, coming from committees; but I regret very much that the Senator from West Virginia makes objection to this amendment, because it is nothing but right that it should be adopted. It allows no back pay or bounty which is not already provided by law. The only change that it makes is the change that I indicated a few moments ago. The pension is now allowed upon proof of cohabitation, without a certificate of marriage; but the Second Auditor refuses absolutely to allow back pay on the same testimony. For instance, a great many colored soldiers who went from my State have fallen in the southern States. The widow or children can get the pension; but no matter how much may have been due to that soldier as back pay, they cannot get it unless evidence of marriage is furnished that cannot be furnished, namely, a certificate of marriage; because there was no law authorizing such certificates in our State in those cases. Hence it is that the back pay is lost to the widow and children where the colored soldier has fallen in battle. So it is with the bounty. If you put in this amendment the words "bounty and back pay," they will not be paid, unless in cases where they are due under the law. This amendment will not allow the soldier's wife or heirs to draw bounty or back pay unless in cases where it is allowed by law, and where the widow or children cannot draw it now for the simple reason that they cannot produce the evidence of marriage that the Second Auditor requires.

This has produced a great deal of complaint. I have been written to again and again this winter by these colored people and their agents in my State, and I called the matter to the attention of the Military Committee some time ago by a resolution requesting them to report a bill upon that subject. I really do not know whether it has been done, and I regret very much that the Senator from West Virginia objects to this amendment. He says himself that the provision is perfectly proper and just, and should be passed, and he objects to it simply because to put it on this bill will produce confusion in the law. He says that this is strictly a pension bill, and that if we put on it a provision in regard to back pay and bounty it will produce confusion.

It ought to be remembered that before the Second Auditor go all these claims for pension, back pay, and bounty; and this is the proper place exactly for the amendment, because by this bill his attention will be called to the point in regard to pensions, and when he finds that the law on the subject of pensions requires him to take the same evidence in regard to bounty and back pay he will at once do so. This is the proper place, and it produces no confusion to insert it here. The Second Auditor is familiar with the administration of these laws, and when he comes to find this amendment he of course will apply it to claims for bounty and back pay in the same way as to pensions. There is a crying evil on this subject. The widows and children of these soldiers are entitled to bounty and back pay just as much as they are to pensions, and they ought to have them. It is nothing but just to the families of colored soldiers that they should be enabled to receive the bounty and back pay due as well as the pension.

I hope the Senator will withdraw his objection to my proposition. I think it can produce no confusion. I know his very great care about laws. He does not like to mingle inappropriate and unfit things together. I know how particular he is in regard to the language of his bills. I know how careful he is; but I cannot perceive that any confusion is likely to arise, and inasmuch as this provision has been carefully prepared by him, and the amendment I propose can very easily and simply be inserted so as to insure perfect and entire justice to the negroes in his State and in mine and in other border States where so many of them served, I think this is the proper place, and I hope he will withdraw his objection. It cannot produce any confusion, because all these claims go to the same officer, the Second Auditor. They are adjudicated and audited by him, and they cannot be paid except upon his certificate.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I am reluctant to make objection to a matter of this kind, which really would not hurt the bill that I have charge of, except so far as it is introducing a matter foreign to it. The objection may seem captious; but that is not my purpose. I think the gentleman is mistaken in saying there is no provision now on the subject, because I recollect distinctly that during the first session I was here, in 1863-64, an amendment was offered by the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. WILSON,] and it appeared to me not to meet the case. I then went to him in his seat and suggested to him the fact that something in the nature of a marriage took place between these people, and he modified his amendment, and I presume it passed, although I cannot find it here on the moment.

Mr. HENDERSON. It did not. It never passed.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. He again offered at this session an amendment to a military bill intended to cover it. He introduced into it some provisions which I thought would tend to prevent his object being accomplished, and I took to him this language of Senator Foot in the amendment of the pension bill of last year, and also a paper I had drawn up for a modification of it in reference to pensions. He had one provision in his amendment, I know, that I thought would tend to defeat his object almost entirely. Now that matter is under consideration by another committee. We passed that here, and they may perhaps to-day pass it in the other House, and then we shall have two rules on the object. I think it is better not to introduce these words here, because they are under consideration in a bill that has passed this body and gone to the other House, and which, if they amend it, must come back here; and if that amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts prevails, it is for the very purpose for which the gentleman wishes to introduce this amendment. I think the House will certainly strike out what I thought were objectionable words in that provision as it passed here. I will say that proof was required that something in the nature of a marriage ceremony had taken place. I suggested to the Senator from Massachusetts that that was a thing which took place, when it did occur, in the presence of very few persons, and it might be very difficult of proof in that way; but as these persons had become scattered and were living together, the fact was a matter of public notoriety and could be easily proved.

I would not be captious, and if it was merely on account of the first objection I made, that this amendment makes the bill incongruous, I should not insist on the objection. But I think the gentleman's object can be accomplished in another way, and we may as well be relieved from it on this pension bill.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. A little while ago I suggested that I should offer a particular amendment which was named. On consultation with the members of the Pension Committee, I am disposed not to offer the amendment which I spoke of; but I do propose to amend the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia in the eighth and ninth lines by striking out the words "in battle." That part of the section now confines the right to pensions to the widows and children of those who have died or who may hereafter die of wounds received in battle or of disease contracted, &c. The term "battle," in my opinion, is not broad enough to cover many cases of death and of injury which are really received in the military service; and if the words be stricken out, then it will authorize pensions wherever they met their death in the line of their duty in the service of the United States.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I accept that amendment. The language which the gentleman proposes to correct is the language of the original section, but the whole series of pension laws are as his amendment would make it. I therefore accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The modification will be made. The question is now on the amendment as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I offer, on behalf of the Committee on Pensions, another amendment to the bill, to be inserted as a new section after section three:

And be it further enacted, That every pledge, mortgage, sale, assignment, or transfer of any right, claim, or interest in any way granted or arising by or under the laws of the United States relating to pensions, shall be void and of no effect; and no sum of money due or to become due to any pensioner under the laws aforesaid shall be liable to attachment, levy, or seizure by or under any legal or equitable process whatever, whether the same remains with the Pension Office, or any officer or agent thereof, or is in course of transmission to the pensioner entitled thereto, but shall inure wholly to the benefit of such pensioner.

I will state to the Senate that this matter was brought to the attention of the committee by a letter from a gentleman holding a high position in one of the eastern cities who stated that money on its way to a pensioner had been attached in transitu, and the municipal court of that city had upheld it. I was under the impression that the laws forbade that; and I looked over the whole series of laws, and I found two clauses which resembled the first part of this amendment, but both of them referred to the pensions granted by those acts.

I have therefore adopted, I believe, with a very slight variation, if any—I do not know of any—in the first part of this amendment the provisions of the former laws, making them apply to all pensions, and I have added a clause at the close to meet precisely such a case as was brought to the notice of the committee, that of a seizure under attachment or trustee process of money that was in transitu from a pension agent to the pensioner. I trust there will be no objection to this amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is that provision found in the general pension laws?

Mr. VAN WINKLE. It is found in two laws, one, I think, regulating the pensions of the war of 1812, and one regulating the pensions of the Mexican war; both have language prohibiting "any pledge, mortgage, sale, assignment, or transfer of any right, claim, or interest in any way granted by this act."

That is in both, and consequently there is no such law, as everybody supposed there was, referring to pensions granted since 1861.

Mr. JOHNSON. Does this amendment embrace all pensions?

Mr. VAN WINKLE. Yes, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON. It is not confined to pensions under this act.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. It embraces all pensions, and is so intended.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I have another amendment to offer to that of the committee, to come in as a new section after section three:

And be it further enacted, That no claim agent or other person shall hereafter charge or receive more than fifty cents for preparing the papers necessary to enable a pensioner to receive a semi-annual payment of his pension; nor shall any pension agent charge or receive more than twenty-five cents for administering an oath to a pensioner, under a penalty of five dollars in each case.

This matter has been brought to the notice of the committee by a pension agent in one of the largest eastern cities. He states that persons are charging for the service of filling a very short blank and administering an oath from one to two dollars. I believe that most of the States in taxing affidavits have remitted the costs in cases where the affidavits are for the purpose of obtaining pensions. It is certainly wrong that persons should be allowed to charge these exorbitant prices.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I have another amendment, and I believe it is the last. It is a new section, to come in as section ten:

And be it further enacted, That section four of an act entitled "An act to grant pensions," approved July 14, 1862, is hereby so amended that the provisions thereof shall apply to and include the orphan brother or brothers, as well as sister or sisters, under sixteen years of age, of a deceased officer or other person named in section one of the above entitled act, who were dependent upon him for support, in whole or in part, subject to the same limitations and restrictions.

This amendment came to us from the House committee, who had intended to insert it in the bill originally, but accidentally omitted to do so. The section of the act of 1862 to which it refers provides that where a soldier dying has left or may leave an orphan sister or sisters under sixteen years of age, the pension shall go to such sister or sisters. It is palpable that many may have left an orphan brother or brothers under that age, who are as equally helpless as the sisters. It seems only fair that the section should be extended to those infant brothers, as well as to infant sisters.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

It was ordered that the amendments be engrossed and the bill read the third time. The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I move, now, to take up the bill (S. No. 239) for the classification and graduation of invalid pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I move the indefinite postponement of this bill, the same subject-matter having been disposed of in the bill we have just passed.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed, without amendment, the following bills:

A bill (S. No. 132) to prevent and punish kidnapping; and

A bill (S. No. 316) to establish a post route from West Alburg, Vermont, to Champlain, in the State of New York, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed a bill (H. R. No. 596) to authorize the use of the metric system of weights and measures, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

CORDELIA MURRAY.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I move to take up House bill No. 216.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 216) for the relief of Cordelia Murray was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Cordelia Murray, widow of George W. Murray, of the pension granted to George W. Murray, by an act of Congress approved December 20, 1864, entitled "An act for the relief of George W. Murray."

Mr. VAN WINKLE. This bill was before the Senate on the last day that the Committee on Pensions had for such business, and it was then suggested that the language was a little obscure. I have examined the original act, and I find that it does not disclose what the pension shall be except by description. I move now to amend this bill by inserting after the word "Murray," in the fifth line, the words "a pension equal in amount to."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended; the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time and passed.

JOHN HOFFMAN.

On motion of Mr. LANE, of Indiana, the bill (H. R. No. 205) granting a pension to John Hoffman, of Madison county, in the State of New York, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing the name of John Hoffman, of Madison county, New York, on the pension-roll, at the rate of eight dollars per month, to continue during his natural life.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BETSEY NASH.

On motion of Mr. LANE, of Indiana, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 445) for the relief of the legal representatives of Betsey Nash. It proposes to extend the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1857, for the relief of Betsey Nash, to her legal representatives, and to provide for paying the amount appropriated by that act to them; but the sum paid is not to exceed the amount due Betsey Nash at the time of her death.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANNA G. GASTON.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move now to take up Senate bill No. 261.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 261) for the relief of Mrs. Anna G. Gaston. It is a direction to the Secretary of the Interior to place upon the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Anna G. Gaston, of the city of Washington, widow of Albert G. Gaston, deceased, late lieutenant in the sixteenth regiment of Virginia volunteers, from the date of the discharge of her husband from the military service of the United States, on account of disability arising from disease contracted in the service, until the date of his death, namely, from the 5th day of May, 1863, to the 7th day of February, 1865, and to cause to be paid to Mrs. Gaston a pension at the rate of seventeen dollars per month for that time, without prejudice to the pension heretofore allowed her by the Commissioner of Pensions.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

JAMES FOSTER.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I move to proceed to the consideration of the House bill No. 463, for the relief of James Foster.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. The Secretary of the Interior is directed by the bill to place the name of James Foster, late of the United States ship Germantown, on the pension-roll, and pay him the sum of six dollars per month.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I move the indefinite postponement of that bill on account of an adverse report. We thought the case was not sufficiently proved.

The motion was agreed to.

JOHN GORDON.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I move to take up the bill (H. R. No. 464) for the relief of John Gordon.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. By its provisions the Secretary of the Interior will be directed to place the name of John Gordon, late of company G, ninth United States infantry, upon the pension-roll at the rate of eight dollars per month, to continue during his natural life.

Mr. GRIMES. Let us hear the report.

The Secretary read the report made by the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House of Representatives, from which it appears that John Gordon enlisted at Saco, Maine, on the 21st of March, 1847, under Captain Woodman, and was placed in company G, Captain Lyman Bissell, ninth United States infantry, in which he continued to serve until his return from Mexico. He was discharged at Newport, Rhode Island, in the summer of 1848. While in the service and in the line of duty, in the fall of 1847, at the city of Mexico, he commenced to have attacks of fever and ague, which continued, and in the spring following a fever and ague sore broke out on his left hand. This continued until after his discharge, the summer following, and unfitted him for military duty. After his discharge the sore healed up but left the end of the finger contracted, bent, and stiffened, one of the fingers being bent flat to the hand. His hand is in consequence useless, and he is unable to gain a livelihood by manual labor. Application was made at the Pension Bureau for a pension, but was rejected by the Commissioner of Pensions because he says it is not sufficiently proven that the fever and ague sore was in consequence of the intermittent fever. This evidence cannot be obtained on account of the death of the regimental surgeon who attended him. Captain Lyman Bissell has testified that his sore was so caused. The assistant surgeon of the regiment was not with the regiment and could know nothing concerning the case. The committee deem this case a just one, and therefore report a bill for his relief.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. GRIMES. Am I right that this disability occurred in the Mexican war?

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. Yes, sir.

Mr. GRIMES. The Senator from Indiana is from a fever and ague country and has lived there a long time; and I should like to know whether his experience and observation satisfy him that the fever and ague is in the habit of producing such results as are mentioned in this report.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. This is a report from the House of Representatives. The facts are all reported to us. The evidence of his captain is that this sore upon the hand which caused the total disability of the hand was caused by the fever and ague. The reason why the surgeon did not testify is because he is dead, and the assistant surgeon was not with the regiment at the time; but his captain swears that the sore was the result of fever and ague and that the hand was totally disabled. I do not know what particular quality of the disease it is that makes the sore break out on the hand; but I have heard of fever sores. We took the report of the committee of the House, and supposed that that was sufficient to authorize the reporting of this bill. The matter was investigated before our committee, and it was thought very probable that the whole injury resulted from that fever.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I will say to the Senator from Iowa that I have been hearing of ague sores all my life, although I never lived much in an ague country. We do not have any in West Virginia, but before I moved there they used to have the ague in that country, and ague sores were a very common result of that disease.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I beg to inquire of the Senator whether it grew out of his services in the Army.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. The intermittent fever, the fever and ague, occurred while he was in the Army and in the service. This was a consequence of that disease. The committee were well satisfied of that fact from an examination of the particular evidence supplied.

Mr. GRIMES. Who supplied this evidence? Some surgeon, as I understand, in the State of Maine.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. It is furnished by his captain; and I believe the rules of the Pension Office are that where the certificate of the surgeon cannot be procured, owing to his death or any other circumstances, the certificate of the commanding officer is the next best proof.

Mr. GRIMES. I have lived for thirty years right on the bank of the Mississippi river, and we have ague there, and I have had a good deal of observation of that disease, and I confess I never heard of such a case as this before. I never heard of such a fever sore as the one mentioned here. I have heard of fever sores breaking out on the lips in little blotches, and I have heard of white fever swellings, but I have never heard of such a disease as this appearing from the ague and exposure in the Army. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I hope the Senator from Iowa will modify his motion so as to let it go over until to-morrow.

Mr. GRIMES. Very well; or recommit it.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I move, then, that this bill be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. POMEROY in the chair.) The Senator from Iowa withdraws his motion, and the Senator from Indiana moves that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

On motion of Mr. HENDERSON, it was Ordered, That when the Senate adjourn it be to meet on Monday next.

SPENCER KELLOGG.

On motion of Mr. LANE, of Indiana, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 260) granting a pension to Spencer Kellogg. The Secretary of the Interior will be directed by this bill to place the name of Spencer Kellogg, of Oswego county, New York, on the roll of invalid pensions, and to pay or cause to be paid to his legally appointed guardian the sum of twenty dollars per month, until Spencer Kellogg shall have attained the age of sixteen years. The act is to take effect on the 6th day of September, 1865.

Mr. GRIMES. Let us hear the report read.

The Secretary read the report made by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to the House of Representatives. It appears that Spencer Kellogg, the father of Spencer Kellogg, the ward of Orville C. Brown, was fourth master of the United States gunboat Oswego, and was captured by the enemy while in the discharge of his duty on or about August 15, 1862, and executed in the city of Richmond, Virginia, on the 25th of September, 1863, by the rebels, charged with being a spy. The muster and pay rolls of the gunboat were lost. Congress by a joint resolution approved June 30, 1864, directed the name of Mary Kellogg, widow of Spencer Kellogg and mother of the ward of Orville C. Brown, to be placed upon the pension-roll with the pension incident to the rank of her late husband. She died on the 6th of September, 1865, leaving a son, the only child of Spencer Kellogg, to wit, Spencer Kellogg, the ward of Orville C. Brown, now about three years of age. The committee, believing the relief asked for by the petitioner just and right, report a bill for his relief.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANNA E. WARD.

On motion of Mr. LANE, of Indiana, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 459) for the relief of Anna E. Ward. It provides for placing the name of Anna E. Ward, of the city of Washington, District of Columbia, widow of the late Joseph D. Ward, second Kentucky volunteers, on the list of pensioners, and for paying to her the sum of eight dollars per month during her widowhood, and in the event of her marriage or death, then to the minor children of Joseph D. Ward, subject to the limitations and restrictions of the pensions laws.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with an amendment, to insert in the eighth line after the words "eight dollars per month" the words "to commence from and after the passage of this act, and to continue."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRIMES. Let the report be read.

The Secretary read the report made by the Committee on Invalid Pensions in the House of Representatives. It appears that Joseph D. Ward, late a surgeon in company H, second Kentucky volunteers, was, on the 22d of February, 1847, at the battle of Buena Vista, in Mexico, and, while in the discharge of his duties, received three grape or canister shot wounds, one in his breast, another fracturing the bones of his right arm so as to render amputation necessary, and a third ball injured his left arm so seriously as to deprive him almost entirely of its use; that by reason of these wounds he was totally disabled; and, on the 4th of February, 1865, died, leaving the petitioner, a widow with two children, girls, one eleven and the other three years of age, and the aged and invalid mother of her deceased husband dependent upon her for support. The committee deem the case a just one, and therefore report a bill for her relief.

CORNELIUS CROWLEY.

On motion of Mr. LANE, of Indiana, the bill (S. No. 275) for the relief of Cornelius Crowley, was read a second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Cornelius Crowley, late a private in company F, third regiment United States infantry, on the pension-roll, at the rate of eight dollars per month, to continue during his natural life.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHRISTINA ELDER.

On motion of Mr. VAN WINKLE, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 345) for the relief of Christina Elder. It proposes to direct the Commissioner of Pensions to pay to Christina Elder, of the city of New York, the pension to which Jessie Elder was entitled at the time of her death, as the mother of Lieutenant Colonel Alexander B. Elder, tenth regiment New York volunteers, under the provisions of the act of Congress approved July 14, 1862.

The Committee on Pensions proposed to amend the bill by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the following:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to pay to Christina Elder, of the city of New York, the arrears of pension to which Jessie Elder, mother of the said Christina Elder and of Alexander B. Elder, late lieutenant colonel of the tenth regiment of New York volunteers, would have been entitled had the certificate of W. T. Otto, acting Secretary of the Interior, countersigned by Joseph H. Barrett, Commissioner of Pensions, and bearing date on the 25th day of November, in the year 1865, in favor of the said Jessie Elder been granted in her life-time.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONNESS. Is there a report in that case? If there is, I should like to have it read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. VAN WINKLE, from the Committee on Pensions, on the 25th of April:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred House bill No. 345, entitled "An act for the relief of Christina Elder," respectfully report:

That the said Christina Elder is the sister of Alexander B. Elder, deceased, late lieutenant colonel of the tenth regiment of New York volunteers, and the daughter of Jessie Elder, also deceased, in whose favor, as the mother of the said Alexander B. Elder, a certificate was granted by the then acting Secretary of the Interior to the effect that, under the provisions of the pension act of 1862, she was entitled to receive pay at the rate of thirty dollars per month, commencing on the 31st day of October, 1861, and continuing during her widowhood. The said certificate bears date on the 25th day of November, 1865; but it appears that the said Jessie Elder died on the 31st day of October, in the same year, twenty-five days previous, in consequence of which no part of the pension therein mentioned could be legally or ever was paid to the said Jessie Elder or her representatives.

It further appears that, from the time of the death of the said Alexander B. Elder until that of the said Jessie Elder, which occurred in her eightieth year, her daughter, the said Christina Elder, by the labor of her hands, supported and provided for her infirm and helpless mother, at an expense quite equal to what the latter would have been entitled to receive by virtue of the said certificate had it been granted in her life-time.

Under these circumstances the committee recommend that the arrears of pension which would have been payable to the said Jessie Elder had the said certificate been granted twenty-five days earlier be paid to the said Christina Elder, and for this purpose herewith report an amendment of the bill referred to them as above, and recommend that the same be adopted, and the bill so amended passed.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in and ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time and passed.

MARTHA J. WILLEY.

On motion of Mr. VAN WINKLE, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 494) for the relief of Martha J. Willey. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Martha J. Willey, widow of George W. Willey, late a corporal in company F, seventh regiment New Hampshire volunteers, on the pension-rolls, at the rate of eight dollars per month, the pension to commence on the 18th of April, 1865, and to continue during her widowhood; and in the event of her marriage or death, then to the minor children of George W. Willey, subject to the limitations and restrictions of the pension laws.

Mr. GRIMES. Let us hear the report in that case read.

The Secretary read the report made by the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House of Representatives. The petitioner, who is the widow of George W. Willey, corporal in company F, seventh regiment New Hampshire volunteers, alleges in her petition that her late husband was under the command of Colonel Abbott in the late war to suppress the southern rebellion; that he enlisted at Dover, New Hampshire, on or about the 29th of November, 1861, and served faithfully as a soldier in that company until his death on the 18th of April, 1865. It is further alleged that he was a reenlisted veteran, and enlisted in the field at Fernandina, Florida, on the 29th of February, 1864. The Government gave as a gratuity thirty days' furlough to those who reenlisted. Willey was taken sick with congestion of the lungs before the termination of his furlough, and died at Dover, New Hampshire, on the 18th of April, 1865. The committee find the facts fully sustained by the proof, and report a bill for the relief of the petitioner.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. REBECCA IRWIN.

On motion of Mr. VAN WINKLE, the bill (S. No. 291) granting a pension to Mrs. Rebecca Irwin, was read a second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Mrs. Rebecca Irwin, widow of Archibald Irwin, late a private in battery C, first Rhode Island light artillery, on the pension-roll, at the rate of eight dollars per month, to continue during her widowhood.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RETURN OF A BILL.

Mr. MORRILL. With the permission of the Senator from West Virginia, I should like to offer a resolution requesting the return of a bill, which was passed under a misapprehension, from the House of Representatives. It will take no time.

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill of the Senate No. 305, to amend an act entitled "An act concerning notaries public for the District of Columbia," approved April 8, 1864.

The report in that case was for the indefinite postponement of the bill, but by some mistake or other it has been passed.

The resolution was considered, by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

MRS. JOANNA WINANS.

On motion of Mr. VAN WINKLE, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 493) granting a pension to Mrs. Joanna Winans. Its purpose is to require the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Mrs. Joanna Winans, mother of George W. Winans, late an acting assistant paymaster in the United States Navy, on the roll of naval pensioners, at the rate of twenty dollars per month, to continue during her widowhood.

The Committee on Pensions reported the bill with an amendment, in line eight, after the word "widowhood," to insert, "the said pension to be paid out of the naval pension fund."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRIMES. I ask for the reading of the report in this case.

The Secretary read the report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions in the House of Representatives. It appears that George W. Winans, the son of the petitioner, was an acting assistant paymaster in the United States Navy. On the 23d of May, 1864, he received a leave of absence for one week from Fleet Captain A. K. Pennock. At Mound City, on the day of the expiration of his leave of absence, and when going on board the steamer Black Hawk, and before he had formally reported, he was accidentally drowned. The proof is very conclusive that the petitioner was at the time of the death of her son, and still is, a widow in destitute circumstances; and for several years has been wholly dependent upon him for support.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in and ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time and passed.

JANE D. BRENT.

On motion of Mr. VAN WINKLE, the bill (S. No. 298) granting a pension to Jane D. Brent was read a second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing the name of Jane D. Brent, of Detroit, Michigan, widow of Thomas Lee Brent, late a captain in the Army of the United States, on the pension-roll, at the rate of twenty dollars per month, until her marriage or death, and after either event the pension is to be continued to Mary Brent, daughter of Thomas Lee Brent, if then under the age of sixteen years, until she attains that age.

Mr. GRIMES. Let us hear the report read.

The Secretary read the following report from the Committee on Pensions submitted by Mr. VAN WINKLE on the 2d of May:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Jane D. Brent, respectfully report:

That it appears that Captain Thomas L. Brent, the late husband of the petitioner, entered the Army of the United States, from West Point, in 1835, and remained therein until his death, which occurred at Fort Leavenworth on the 11th of January, 1858, having been in active service in the wars in Florida and Mexico. The petitioner, in March last, applied to the Commissioner of Pensions to have her name placed on the pension-roll as the widow of Captain Brent, accompanying her application with satisfactory proof of her identity, marriage, and continuance of widowhood; but owing to the want of positive proof that her husband died of a disease caused by his service in war, as required by the act of July 21, 1848, in order to enable her to obtain a pension under that act, her application has been suspended by the Commissioner, and she has been advised to apply to Congress for relief.

The committee find in the papers submitted to them strong presumptive evidence that Captain Brent died of disease contracted in active service in the line of his duty in Mexico, during the continuance of the war with that country. Brevet Colonel and Surgeon John M. Cuyler, of the United States Army, certifies that he was one, and the senior, of the medical officers who were with Captain Brent during his last illness, and that the disease of which he died was chronic pleurisy. He adds, "There is no doubt, I imagine, he was in the discharge of his official duty when seized by the disease that eventually terminated his life."

Major Lewis Cass, jr., certifies that he was stationed at Meer during the fall of 1847, and at Monterey in the succeeding spring, as inspector general, and was then in frequent communication with Captain Brent, whose health was not good, which the captain "justly and correctly" ascribed to the climate of Mexico; that his health continued to grow worse, and not unfrequently incapacitated him for duty, and he complained of weakness and debility, with difficulty of breathing. Major Cass thinks his disease was pleurisy, and adds that Captain Brent's habits were temperate and regular.

It is evident that Captain Brent's disease was contracted while in the service of the United States. He ascribed it, at a time when he could have no motive to deceive, to the climate of Mexico; and as the war with that country was then in progress, and he was a conspicuous actor in it, having been, as the committee are informed, brevetted a captain for gallant and meritorious services at Buena Vista, there is hardly room for doubt that the disease of which he died was directly caused by his service in the Mexican war, in the line of his duty.

The committee therefore report a bill granting a pension to the petitioner.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JANE E. MILES.

On motion of Mr. VAN WINKLE, the bill (S. No. 299) granting a pension to Jane E. Miles, was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing upon the pension-roll the name of Jane E. Miles, of Somersworth, New Hampshire, widow of William D. Miles, late a landsman in the naval service of the United States, at the rate of eight dollars per month, from the 22d day of March, in the year 1865, to continue during her widowhood; the pension to be paid out of the naval pension fund.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

39TH CONG. 1ST SESS.—No. 168.

SARAH J. PURCELL.

On motion of Mr. VAN WINKLE, the bill (S. No. 314) for the relief of Sarah J. Purcell, was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Sarah J. Purcell, widow of Charles W. Purcell, acting captain of artillery, on the pension-roll, at the rate of twenty dollars a month, from the 27th day of September, 1864, to continue during her widowhood.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RUTH ELLEN GRELAUD.

On motion of Mr. LANE, of Indiana, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 72) for the relief of Ruth Ellen Grelaud, widow of John H. Grelaud, deceased. Its purpose is to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Ruth Ellen Grelaud, widow of John H. Grelaud, deceased, late a captain of artillery in the United States Army, upon the pension-list, at the rate of the half pay proper he was entitled to at the time of his death, commencing on the 17th of August, 1857, and to continue during her life or widowhood.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. The Committee on Pensions have made an adverse report on this bill, and I move that it be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

MRS. SALLY ANDREWS.

On motion of Mr. LANE, of Indiana, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 462) granting a pension to Mrs. Sally Andrews. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Sally Andrews, of Buxton, York county, Maine, widow of the late Elisha Andrews, quarter gunner on board the Levetta Adams, on the pension-list of invalid pensioners, and pay or cause to be paid to her the sum of eight dollars per month during her widowhood.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. HARRIET B. CROCKER.

On motion of Mr. LANE, of Indiana, the bill (S. No. 326) granting a pension to Mrs. Harriet B. Crocker, was read a second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. The Secretary of the Interior is directed by the bill to place the name of Mrs. Harriet B. Crocker, mother of Henry B. Crocker, late a private in company G, one hundred and fifteenth regiment Ohio volunteer infantry, on the pension-roll, at the rate of eight dollars per month, to commence from the 4th of October, 1862, and to continue during her widowhood.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. KATHARINE F. WINSLOW.

On motion of Mr. LANE, of Indiana, the bill (S. No. 327) granting a pension to Mrs. Katharine F. Winslow, was read a second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. Its purpose is to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Mrs. Katharine F. Winslow, mother of Cleveland Winslow, late lieutenant colonel of the fifth New York Veteran volunteer infantry, on the pension-roll, at the rate of thirty dollars per month, to commence from the 7th of July, 1864, and to continue during her widowhood.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MRS. ABIGAIL RYAN.

On motion of Mr. LANE, of Indiana, the bill (S. No. 328) for the relief of Mrs. Abigail Ryan was read a second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Mrs. Abigail Ryan, widow of Thomas A. Ryan, late a sergeant in company E, seventeenth regiment West Virginia infantry volunteers, on the pension-roll, at the rate of eight dollars per month, to commence from the 27th of March, 1865, and to continue during her widowhood.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILLELY subsequently entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

MARGARET KAETZEL.

On motion of Mr. LANE, of Indiana, the bill (S. No. 329) for the relief of Mrs. Margaret Kaetzel, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. Its purpose is to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place upon the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Margaret Kaetzel, widow of Nicholas Kaetzel, who was a civilian employed in the service of the United States at the arsenal at Columbus, Ohio, and that she be paid a pension at the rate of eight dollars per month, to commence from the 5th of April, 1865, and to continue during her widowhood.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ISABELLA STRUBING.

On motion of Mr. LANE, of Indiana, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 434) for the relief of Isabella Strubing. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Isabella Strubing, widow of private Damon Strubing, deceased, late of company E, forty-sixth regiment Pennsylvania volunteers, on the pension-roll, and pay or cause to be paid to her the sum of eight dollars per month from the 30th of May, 1864, and to continue during her widowhood, and in the event of her death or marriage, to the minor children of Damon Strubing until they shall have attained the age of sixteen years.

Mr. GRIMES. Let us hear the report in that case.

The Secretary read the report made by the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House of Representatives. By the evidence in the case it is proved that Damon Strubing, the husband of the petitioner, when en route with his regiment, on veteran furlough, after having reenlisted, and while passing through Louisville, Kentucky, on the 2d of January, 1864, fell and broke his left hand. Having partially recovered the use of his hand he obtained permission from the surgeon who attended him to return to his regiment, which was then at Dalton, Georgia. Strubing, by direction of the lieutenant colonel of his regiment, whom he met on his way, reported to Surgeon James Bryan, then in charge of the United States general hospital at Pittsburg, Pennsylvania. Surgeon Bryan gave him a certificate showing that he was, by reason of the injury in his hand, unfit for duty, and also gave him permission to return to his home, at Reading, Pennsylvania. On the 30th of May, 1864, while riding in a train of the Pennsylvania railroad the train ran off the track and broke a number of cars. Strubing being one of the passengers had his leg badly shattered, and was also severely burned and scalded, from the effects of which he died in a few hours afterward. The Commissioner of Pensions declines to place the name of his widow on the pension-roll in the absence of a certificate from a commissioned officer of his company showing that at the time of his death he was in the line of his duty, which cannot be obtained. The committee are of the opinion that the case comes within the spirit and intent of the act granting pensions to the widows of deceased soldiers, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARIA SYPHAX.

On motion of Mr. HARRIS, the bill (S. No. 321) for the relief of Maria Syphax was read a second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to release and confirm to Maria Syphax, her heirs and assigns, the title to a piece of land, being part of the Arlington estate, in the county of Alexandria, in the State of Virginia, upon which she has resided since about the year 1826, bounded and described as follows, to wit: beginning at the intersection of the south line of said Arlington estate with the center line of a small run, said point of intersection being about one fourth of a mile from the southwest corner of said Arlington estate, running thence westerly along said south line seven chains and forty links; thence in a northeasterly direction, on a line making an angle of thirty-five degrees with the said south line, twenty-two chains and thirty-eight links; thence at right angles, in a southeasterly direction fifteen chains and sixty-seven links to the said south line of the Arlington estate; thence westerly along the said south line of the said Arlington estate nineteen chains and ninety-two links, to the place of beginning, containing seventeen acres and fifty-three hundredths of an acre of land, be the same more or less.

Mr. MORRILL. I should like to inquire of the Senator from New York, the chairman of the Committee on Private Land Claims, what are the grounds on which this bill is placed.

Mr. HARRIS. The person named in this bill is a mulatto woman. She was once the slave of Mr. Custis. Mr. Custis at the time she married, about forty years ago, feeling an interest in the woman, something perhaps akin to a paternal instinct, manumitted her, and gave her this piece of land. It has been set apart to her, and it has been occupied by her and her family for forty years. Under the circumstances, the committee thought it no more than just, the Government having acquired title to this property under a sale for taxes, that this title should be confirmed to her.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the Senator from New York be good enough to state in whom the title runs?

Mr. HARRIS. The title runs to this woman and her heirs.

Mr. MORRILL. That is satisfactory.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 596) to authorize the use of the metric system of weights and measures was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This bill will be referred to the select committee on that subject when appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CONNESS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution No. 77. It will not occupy a moment of time.

Mr. GRIMES. What is the title of it?

Mr. CONNESS. A joint resolution for the relief of Ambrose L. Goodrich and Nathan Cornish for carrying the United States mail from Boise City to Idaho City, in the Territory of Idaho. It will not occupy a moment.

Mr. GRIMES. This day was devoted, by an order of the Senate, to the consideration of pension bills, and there are a great many Senators not present who ought to be here when these questions that are now proposed to be taken up are called up. It seems to me that at this stage of the day we had better proceed to the consideration of executive business, of which we have a great deal to do; and I therefore make that motion.

Mr. CONNESS. I think that is very unkind in the Senator. This joint resolution has been considered by one of the standing committees of this body. It is a House resolution. It was first passed by the House, after being considered by a committee of that body, who made a report upon it. It then came to this body, and was considered here by one of the standing committees of the Senate and reported by it. If the Senator desires that no other business shall be considered to-day, and is in a hurry to adjourn, and will put it on that ground—

Mr. GRIMES. I have this to say: in the estimation of the Senator there is nothing in this resolution, or very little; but if he had been here as long as I have, he would have discovered that on the same claim and in the same manner we have passed little bills intended to appropriate money for the carrying of the mails, that, in one instance, in a case at Louisville, amounted to $1,500,000 before we got through with it; and in another case, on the upper lakes, where we supposed at the time we passed the bill, it only amounted to some eight or nine thousand dollars, it amounted to between one and two hundred thousand dollars. I do not know anything about the merits of this resolution, and I do not feel at this time as though I was capable of undertaking such an investigation as I would wish to make into it, after the experience I have had on this subject.

Mr. CONNESS. The Senator is very much frightened by his experience on this subject. I am very sorry that a bill of the kind described by him ever passed this body while the Senator, usually so watchful, was in his place. I should not think that such a bill could possibly pass his vigilance. But I beg him to believe that this resolution does not contain a claim for $100,000, nor any respectable fraction of that sum. The parties who performed the service are here, and have been waiting patiently and anxiously. The services have been long performed and paid for by them. The resolution simply authorizes the Postmaster General to pay as much as he shall find and ascertain to be their due, after it has been fully and completely investigated. The committee recommend an amendment which relates to a similar claim already passed by this body, but not yet acted upon by the House of Representatives, I believe. Now, although this day has been devoted to pensions, certainly nearly all the Senators are in their seats, and there is sufficient time—for it is not yet half past three o'clock—to examine this resolution. I hope we shall proceed with it. It will not occupy a moment of time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CONNESS. I hope that motion will not be carried under the circumstances.

Mr. WILSON. Will the Senator from Iowa withdraw it for a moment?

Mr. GRIMES. Vote it down if you do not want an executive session.

The motion was agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes 14, noes 13; and, after some time spent in the consideration of executive business, the doors were reopened.

COMMODORE THOMAS TURNER.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I ask the Senate to take up Senate bill No. 251, for the relief of Commodore Thomas Turner.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Commodore Thomas Turner $6,741 out of any prize money in the Treasury, in full for his claim to share in the prize money realized upon the condemnation and sale of the vessels Cherokee, Aries, and St. John.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I will state that upon this subject there is a difference between the court at Boston that ordered the condemnation of these three vessels and the Department, the court holding that the commodore is entitled to his prize money, and the Department not so holding. The committee think he ought to have the prize money along with the rest of the officers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANCIS A. GIBBONS.

On motion of Mr. WILLIAMS, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 386) for the relief of Francis A. Gibbons. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the sum of $563 19 to Francis A. Gibbons, being money paid by him for property purchased at a quartermaster's sale in the city of Baltimore, Maryland, on the 15th of February, 1863, under the direction of Colonel Belger, assistant quartermaster, which was not delivered to the purchaser.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I should like to know what that case is. Is there a report?

Mr. WILLIAMS. There is a House report accompanying the bill. The bill has already passed the House.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Will the Senator explain what it is?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will simply state that Mr. Gibbons purchased at a quartermaster's sale, in the city of Baltimore, a certain number of bushels of damaged corn. He paid for the corn before its delivery, and when the corn was measured out to him there was not as much corn as he had purchased and for which he had paid by $500. The proof is clear and conclusive on the subject. He has paid to the United States $500 of money for which he received no equivalent. He simply asks the Government to pay him back that amount of money.

The bill was passed.

SAMUEL STEVENS.

On motion of Mr. HOWE, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 309) to authorize Samuel Stevens, a Stockbridge Indian, to enter and purchase a certain tract of land in the Stockbridge reservation, Wisconsin. The bill authorizes Samuel Stevens, a Stockbridge Indian, to enter and purchase the tract of land known as lot No. 126, in the Stockbridge reservation, in the county of Calumet and State of Wisconsin, under the "act to authorize the issuing of patents for certain lands in the town of Stockbridge, Wisconsin, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1865. It also directs the Commissioner of the General Land Office, upon the entry and payment therefor, to cause a patent, in due form of law, to be issued to Samuel Stevens, in conformity with the act above mentioned.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, May 18, 1866.

The House met at twelve o'clock m.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

FOREST CULTURE.

Mr. DONNELLY, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That in view of the almost complete absence of woods and forests in the interior regions of the continent, and of their paramount importance in the settlement and occupancy of the country, the Committee on Public Lands be directed to inquire whether a system cannot be devised whereby the planting of woods and forests may be encouraged in regions destitute of timber by liberal donations of public lands in alternate sections to individuals or corporations, and the reservation of the adjoining sections by the Government at an increased price, as in the case of railroad grants; the lands so granted, or a proportional part thereof, to be planted with trees adapted to the climate and the needs of the community.

COINAGE, WEIGHTS, AND MEASURES.

Mr. KASSON, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That three hundred extra copies of the report on a uniform system of coinage, weights, and measures be printed for the use of the committee making the report, and one thousand for the use of this House.

The SPEAKER. This resolution will be referred, under the law, to the Committee on Printing.

PROTECTION OF THE FRONTIER.

Mr. BURLEIGH, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to provide for the better protection of the frontiers of the United States and Territories thereof; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PREVENTION OF KIDNAPING.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on the Judiciary, for consideration at the present time, Senate bill No. 132—an act to prevent and punish kidnaping.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill, after which the Chair will ask for objections, if any.

The Clerk read the bill, which provides that if any person shall kidnap or carry away any other person, whether negro, mulatto, or otherwise, with the intent that such other person shall be sold or carried into involuntary servitude or held as a slave; or if any person shall entice, persuade, or knowingly induce any other person to go on board any vessel or to any other place, with the intent that he or she shall be made or held as a slave, or sent out of the country to be so made or held, or shall in any way knowingly aid in causing any other person to be held, sold, or carried away, to be held or sold as a slave, he or she shall be punished, on conviction thereof, by a fine of not less than five hundred nor more than five thousand dollars, or by imprisonment, not exceeding five years, or by both of said punishments.

The second section provides that if the master or owners, or person having charge of any vessel, shall receive on board any other person, whether negro, mulatto, or otherwise, with the knowledge or intent that such person shall be carried from any State, Territory, or district of the United States, to a foreign country, State, or place, to be held or sold as slave, or shall carry away from any State, Territory, or district of the United States any such person, with the intent that he or she shall be so held or sold as a slave, such master, owner, or other person offending shall be punished by a fine not exceeding five thousand nor less than five hundred dollars, or by imprisonment not exceeding five years, or by both of said punishments. And the vessel on board which said person was received to be carried away shall be forfeited to the United States.

There being no objection the bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay that motion on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE AT ROUSE'S POINT.

On motion of Mr. HULBURD, by unanimous consent, Senate bill No. 316, to establish a post route from West Alburg, Vermont, to Champlain, in the State of New York, and for other purposes, was taken up from the Speaker's table and considered.

The bill was read. It declares the railroad bridge at Rouse's Point, connecting the Ogdensburg and Lake Champlain railroad and the Vermont and Canada railroad, a lawful structure, to be known as a post route, and in place of the present float it authorizes the construction of suitable draws.

Mr. LE BLOND. That bill, I believe, has not been before the proper committee. It contains a very important feature, and I think it had better be referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. HULBURD. If my friend will allow me, I will state that this has been before the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and examined by them, and they are willing that it should take this direction. I will likewise state that there is great urgency for the passage of this bill, inasmuch as these men must either renew the float at once or put in a draw, and it is necessary that they should know what to do.

Mr. LE BLOND. I do not understand that this bill comes into the House from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. They may possibly have examined it, but they have not given in a report on the measure.

Mr. ALLEY. I will say for the information of the gentleman that this bill was carefully considered by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads in the Senate, and passed the Senate unanimously. It has been referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads in the House, and was partially considered in that committee, and the judgment of the committee was expressed favorably in regard to it.

I will say further that it is deemed by the parties in interest to be of great importance that the bill should pass at the present time. It will be sometime before our committee will be called, and I told the gentleman from New York [Mr. HULBURD] that our committee would have no objection to its passage. That is the position so far as the committee is concerned in regard to this bill.

Mr. LE BLOND. I withdraw my objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. HULBURD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. THAYER. I call for the regular order of business.

REFORM SCHOOL IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER stated that the regular order of business was the call of the committees for reports of a private nature, the pending question being upon the bill reported from the Committee for the District of Columbia by Mr. BALDWIN, being House bill No. 379, to establish in the District of Columbia a reform school for boys.

Mr. BALDWIN. I propose now to state briefly the reasons for reporting this bill, to explain some of its provisions, and to ask for a vote upon the amendment proposed by the committee.

The reasons for reporting the bill seem to us very conclusive and urgent. There is in the District of Columbia no suitable provision for the confinement of juvenile offenders; nor is there any such provision for the confinement of older offenders as is demanded by our civilization. There is nowhere probably greater or more pressing need of such an institution than within this District. An act of Congress approved March 3, 1865, sought to make provision for juvenile offenders by authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to contract with the managers of State institutions for their confinement and support. The Secretary sought diligently to carry out the purpose of that act, but after a faithful effort he failed to make the provision which the bill required. I believe he made one contract for the confinement of a few offenders, and that was all he was able to accomplish, the managers of State institutions being unwilling to make contracts, or finding something in their charters to forbid it. He then turned to the officers of the Guardian Society, and urged them to prepare such an institution on the tract of land known as the "Government farm." They proceeded to do it, and through his aid the Secretary of War transferred to them and deposited on the Government farm for their use a large amount of lumber from abandoned hospitals. They proceeded with the work and expended about five thousand dollars raised by private subscription to establish the institution required. They erected a large building capable of accommodating some fifty or more inmates; but from lack of funds they could not complete their operations. The officers of the Guardian Society then petitioned Congress for an appropriation, and their petition was referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia. They asked for means to enable them to carry out their object; and this was favored by the Secretary of the Interior. A reference to this matter can be found in the report of the Secretary of the Interior to the present Congress.

On considering that petition, and consulting with these gentlemen and with the Secretary of the Interior, it seemed to the committee wiser and better to take this property and project out of the hands of private parties and establish in the District a public reformatory institution in the usual way, with a board of trustees. It seemed the only sure way to have a suitable institution for juvenile offenders established here without great expense, there being already from fifteen to twenty thousand dollars' worth of property that will all be transferred to the trustees to be appointed. This is in accordance with the wishes of the society, and it has the cordial approbation of the Secretary of the Interior. By assuming an outstanding debt of about fifteen hundred dollars the arrangement can be made, and the bill now reported to the House aims simply, in its provisions, to carry out this policy, to establish such an institution, which can be done at small cost to the Government and to the municipalities of the District; and there will be a saving of a great amount of property which must go to ruin if this is not done. There is nothing but this in the provisions of the bill. All that the bill proposes is to make provision for the establishment of this institution. It contains nothing else.

I will now ask that the amendments to the bill reported by the Committee for the District of Columbia be voted upon by the House; and I will say, as preliminary to that, that the proposed amendments aim principally to correct errors made by the printers or in transcribing the bill for the printers.

Mr. DAVIS. I wish to inquire if there is not now an institution of a precisely similar character existing in this District under a charter from Congress for the same purposes.

Mr. BALDWIN. There is such an institution, the Guardian Society of the District of Columbia, and it is that institution which has presented a petition to this Congress; it is that institution with which the Secretary of the Interior and the committee have dealt in this matter. The officers of that society cordially approve the bill. I have here a statement from the officers of that institution showing their accordance with and approval of this measure.

Mr. DAVIS. Having been a member of the Committee for the District of Columbia, I desire to say that I have been informed by one of the officers of this society that the passage of this bill would conflict with their rights under their organization.

Mr. PLANTS. I do not know if it would be in order at this time to make a motion in reference to this bill. But I am advised by persons interested in the Guardian Society, already incorporated by Congress, that this proposed bill comes in direct conflict with their interests. There is a Guardian Society already in existence here who had expended some ten or twelve thousand dollars before they were incorporated, and they were incorporated about 1862. They have now before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, as I am advised, a bill asking some slight amendments to their act of incorporation, embracing substantially the provisions of this bill.

The gentleman from Massachusetts. [Mr. BALDWIN,] I understand, announces that it was by the assent or agreement of this Guardian Society that this bill has been brought in. I do not know what the facts may be in this case; but I am informed by persons belonging to that society that that is an entire mistake; that only one or two dissatisfied individuals who once belonged to the Guardian Society, but who have broken away from it, are now acting in opposition to it.

As the bill in relation to that society is now before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, I would much prefer that action on this bill should be delayed until that committee shall report, or what would probably be better, that this bill be referred to that committee for its consideration. I think it would be unjust to the existing society, that has already expended twelve or fifteen thousand dollars in pursuance of this same object, to supersede it by another corporation for the same object. I am not advised fully of the position of the two proposed institutions; but I have been requested by some of the officers of the Guardian Society to make this statement to the House when this bill came up for consideration.

Mr. BALDWIN. I will repeat the statement I have already made; that we had before us the memorial from the Guardian Society for an appropriation. And we had a consultation with Mr. Harlan, the Secretary of the Interior, and with the agents of the Guardian Society in regard to the appropriation. And it is with the sanction of the Secretary of the Interior and the officers of that society that we have proceeded in this matter. I hold in my hand a communication from the officers of that society approving this bill. I cannot suppose that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PLANTS] has had any communication with the members of that society, or with more than one gentleman who was formerly an officer of that society, but at its last organization was left off as secretary of the society. There can be nothing clearer than that we are dealing with that society.

Mr. WELKER. I desire to say one word in reply to the suggestion made by my colleague [Mr. PLANTS] in relation to this Guardian Association. There was a corporation of that kind, a private corporation, that undertook to take charge of the same class of criminals that is provided for in this bill. This private corporation has met with many difficulties in carrying out the objects of this organization. They have had quarrels among themselves, and we have had both parties before the Committee for the District of Columbia while this measure was under consideration. I have no doubt that one of the parties has made the suggestion to my colleague which he has placed before the House, but the other party acquiesces fully in the passage of this bill.

The idea is, that it is better not to have two private corporations to take charge of the juvenile offenders who may be convicted by the courts, but to consign them to a public institution. And upon considering these quarrels, we deemed it best that there should be a bill providing a public institution for that purpose, as better subserving the interests of the District of Columbia in that respect than either branch of this divided Guardian Association that the gentleman speaks of.

Now, as I understand it, the regular officers of the Guardian Association acquiesce fully in what we propose to do by this bill. The minority of that association, who failed to get control of the Guardian Association, do object to this bill, and make this representation: that great injustice will be done by the passage of this bill. But the regular representatives of this Guardian Society have appeared before the committee, and acquiesce fully in the bill we have reported. And therefore I hope this bill will pass.

Mr. PLANTS. I wish simply to state to the House that I know nothing whatever about this controversy. I was approached by a gentleman who represented himself as one of the trustees of the Guardian Society which was incorporated, who made the statement to me which I have laid before the House. I have understood from him that their act of incorporation was now before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, they asking for some slight amendment to it. And all I have asked was that this bill should be passed over until that committee can report. I am not prepared to take sides upon this question, if there is any quarrel or controversy at all, for I know nothing about it.

Mr. BALDWIN. The reasons for the passage of this bill are extremely urgent. We have had the fullest consultation with the Secretary of the Interior in regard to this matter. He recognizes the importance of the institution, and approves in the most cordial and emphatic manner the bill we have now before us. I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The amendments reported by the committee were read, as follows:

First amendment:

In section two, line four, strike out "two" and insert "one;" so that the clause will read: "One of whom shall be nominated for appointment by the mayor of Washington."

The amendment was agreed to.

Second amendment:

In the same section, after the word "Georgetown," insert the following:

One by the levy court of the county of Washington.

The amendment was agreed to.

Third amendment:

In the same section, line thirteen, after the word "years," insert the words "to be determined by the President."

The amendment was agreed to.

Fourth amendment:

In section four, line eight, strike out the word "sanction" and insert in lieu thereof the word "approve."

The amendment was agreed to.

Fifth amendment:

In the same section, line six, insert after the word "Interior" the words "to fix the salaries of said officers subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior."

The amendment was agreed to.

Sixth amendment:

In section five, strike out the words "satisfactory to them" and insert "to be approved by the board of trustees."

The amendment was agreed to.

Seventh amendment:

In the same section, line six, strike out "to" and insert "by."

The amendment was agreed to.

Eighth amendment:

In section eight, line two, after the word "guilty," insert "in a court in the District of Columbia."

The amendment was agreed to.

Ninth amendment:

In the same section, line eight, after the word "guilty," insert "in a court in the District of Columbia."

The amendment was agreed to.

Tenth amendment:

In section nine, line two, insert after the word "years" the words "residing in the District of Columbia."

The amendment was agreed to.

Eleventh amendment:

In the same section, lines nine and ten, strike out "for such a term or time as in his judgment the case requires," and insert "there to remain for such a term or time as the trustees may deem best."

The amendment was agreed to.

Twelfth amendment:

In the same section, line five, after the word "governed," insert "them."

The amendment was agreed to.

Thirteenth amendment:

In section twelve, line thirteen, strike out the words "in writing."

The amendment was agreed to.

Fourteenth amendment:

In section thirteen, lines five and nine, strike out "these" and insert "the."

The amendment was agreed to.

Fifteenth amendment:

In section sixteen, line seven, strike out "Treasury" and insert "Interior."

The amendment was agreed to.

Sixteenth amendment:

In section sixteen fill the first blank by inserting

"$4,500," the second blank by inserting "$1,000," the third blank by inserting "$500."

The amendment was agreed to.

• Seventeenth amendment:

In the same section strike out all after the word "Interior" in line twenty-five to the word "collect" in line twenty-seven, and insert the following:

Shall secure an assessment of taxes in such delinquent city or county sufficient to cover the amount required, and the expenses of collecting the same, and appoint a collector who shall.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. BALDWIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SALES AND GIFTS IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. WELKER, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported back House bill No. 564, to annul the thirty-fourth section of the declaration of rights of the State of Maryland so far as the same applies to the District of Columbia.

The question being on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time,

The bill was read at length. It provides that the thirty-fourth section of the declaration of rights of the State of Maryland, so far as the same has been recognized and adopted in the District of Columbia, be repealed and annulled; that all sales, gifts, and devises, prohibited by the said section or any law passed in accordance therewith, shall be, when hereafter made, valid and effectual.

Mr. THAYER. As this may give rise to extended debate, I make the point of order that it is not a private bill. It will of course shut out the private business if it gives rise to debate.

Mr. WELKER. I understand the bill is in order under the call from the Committee for the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. Private bills relate generally to individuals or corporations. May's Parliamentary Practice states that private bills "are for the interest of an individual, a public company or corporation, a parish, a city, a county, or other locality." It must not be a general bill in its enactments, but "a bill for the particular interest or benefit of a person or persons." As an illustration, a pension bill for the relief of a soldier's widow is a private bill, but a general bill granting pensions to any class of such persons as a class instead of as individuals is a public bill. This appears to be a public bill.

Mr. WELKER. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. THAYER] to withdraw his objection. It will take but a moment. I can explain the whole matter in a word to the satisfaction of the House.

Mr. THAYER. I withdraw the objection, reserving the right to renew it if lengthy debate arises.

Mr. WELKER. Under the bill of rights of the State of Maryland, adopted in 1776, there is a provision which renders void all bequests and devises of property, real or personal, for the use and benefit of religious denominations or benevolent purposes of a religious character. In the organization of the District of Columbia that part of the law of Maryland was not annulled in the part of the territory originally comprised of the State of Maryland, and to-day in the District of Columbia no person has any right to make any gift, devise, or bequest to any religious denomination for benevolent or religious purposes. The object of this bill is simply to remove that provision of the law so far as the District of Columbia is concerned.

The occasion of the introduction of this bill, or a special reason for it, is that a gentleman desires to leave a gift of this character for the benefit of a church, and on examination of the laws of the District his counsel has advised him that he cannot make any such gift. The purpose of the bill is to repeal that law. I demand the previous question.

Mr. JENCKES. Will the gentleman allow me to make an explanation? Since the bill of rights in the constitution of Maryland was in force that State has adopted another constitution. Would it not be proper to refer to the date of that first constitution in which this clause is contained?

Mr. WELKER. By an act of Congress in 1801 this provision of the law of Maryland was incorporated as the law of the District of Columbia, so that it is in force notwithstanding the abrogation in Maryland.

Mr. JENCKES. I suggest the insertion of the date of the constitution in which the clause is contained.

Mr. WELKER. It refers to the thirty-fourth section of the bill of rights. That I deem sufficient, because there is but one bill of rights in that State.

Mr. JENCKES. There is another constitution containing a declaration of rights which consists of more than thirty-four sections.

Mr. WELKER. I will then ask consent to insert a reference to the bill of rights adopted in 1776.

The amendment was accordingly made. The bill was then ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. WELKER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL SAFE DEPOSIT COMPANY.

Mr. INGERSOLL, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported back, with an amendment, Senate bill No. 177, to incorporate the National Safe Deposit Company, in the District of Columbia, with a recommendation that it pass.

The bill was read. It constitutes A. R. Shepherd, William S. Huntington, S. P. Brown, G. W. Riggs, Nathaniel Wilson, G. H. Plant, and others, a body politic and corporate by the name and style of the National Safe Deposit Company of Washington.

The second section provides that the capital stock of said company shall consist of a sum not exceeding $200,000, divided into two thousand shares of $100 each, and that so soon as one fourth of the shares have been subscribed for, and twenty-five dollars per share paid at the time of subscribing, and the balance secured to be paid, then this company shall be competent to transact all kinds of business for which it is established.

The third section provides that the corporators shall open books of subscription for the capital stock of this company at such time and in such suitable place in the city of Washington as they may think proper, and shall receive the installments on the stock of said company provided for in section second, and shall deliver the money so paid to the board of directors so soon as they shall be appointed and prepared to receive the same.

Section four provides for the election of officers.

Section five provides that the president, vice president, and directors of said company shall be, and they are hereby, authorized and empowered to receive and keep on deposit all such valuables, gold, silver, or paper money, bullion, precious metals, jewels, plate, certificates of stock, or evidence of indebtedness, deeds or muniments of title, or other valuable papers of any kind, or any other article or thing whatsoever, which may be left or deposited for safe keeping with said company, and shall be entitled to charge such commissions or compensation therefor as may be agreed upon, and for the complete preservation and safe keeping thereof shall construct, erect, lease, or purchase, such fire-proof and burglar-proof building or buildings, vaults, iron, or composition safes, or other means which may become necessary, and generally to transact and perform all the business relating to such deposit, and safe keeping or preservation of all such articles or valuables as may be deposited with said company, and also to invest the capital or funds of the said company, or such money or funds as may be deposited with said company for that purpose, from time to time, in the public funds of the United States, or in any stock or property whatsoever, and to dispose of the said stocks, money, and property in such manner (not contrary to law) as to them shall appear most advantageous to said company.

Section six relates to dividends.

Section seven relates to rules and regulations for the management of the affairs of the company.

Section eight provides that nothing herein contained shall be taken or construed to give the corporation hereby created the power to issue or circulate as currency any bill, note, token, or evidence of indebtedness of its own creation.

The amendment reported by the committee is as follows:

Provided, That each stockholder shall be held individually liable for all debts and liabilities of said corporation to the extent of double the amount of stock so owned by said stockholder.

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I would like to know exactly what this is. It is a bank, if I understand it, and if so why not bring it under the operation of the banking law?

Mr. INGERSOLL. It has no powers of a bank. The bill follows the provisions in relation to the charter of like institutions in New York and Massachusetts. It simply incorporates certain individuals into a body-politic with power to erect a building, put therein iron or fire-proof safes, to receive on deposit bonds, title papers, jewels, and other valuable things, and hold them in safe keeping for the owners for such time as they may desire and at a stipulated price to be agreed upon by them.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois, as this is a somewhat lengthy bill, whether this incorporation is not to be substantially a bank of deposit? It occurs to me, from the reading of the bill, that this incorporation will be clothed with power to do business as a bank of deposit. I understand the last clause to provide that they shall not have authority to issue notes to circulate as money; and that, I understand, is the only limitation in the bill on their powers as bankers. Now, if that is the character of the bill, I think it had better be printed, so that we may examine it.

Mr. SPALDING. How would this company differ from the bank here that exploded the other day?

Mr. INGERSOLL. I have this to say: that there is no authority in the bill allowing this company to pay interest on any deposit; it may receive bank bills, bonds of the United States, or anything else that the owner is willing to pay a certain price to have kept safely. But if there be any fear that the company may exercise the powers of a bank, I will move as an amendment, that they shall not receive money on deposit. That is not the intention. I will move to add this proviso:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be deemed to authorize the said corporation to pay interest on deposits of money, securities, or any other property deposited with it.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Iowa. Are they authorized to discount notes and bills of exchange?

Mr. INGERSOLL. They are not.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It does seem to me that the provisions of this bill are too broad, and I hope it will not pass.

Mr. SPALDING. I think the bill had better be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Is there any express language in the bill confining the operations of this incorporation to the District of Columbia?

Mr. INGERSOLL. There is nothing in the bill which gives them a right to exercise their powers outside of the District of Columbia.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I submit to the House that if there is no language in the bill restricting the operations of this company to the District of Columbia they may establish themselves in any State throughout the country. I take it that the House would hardly be willing to establish an incorporated company of that character, and I suggest that the bill be amended.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I differ with the gentleman on that point, but I will offer this as an addition to my amendment, to save any question of this character.

And provided further, That the operations of this company shall be confined to the District of Columbia.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I desire to know whether, if the motion for the previous question shall not be sustained, it will be in order to move to refer this bill to some committee for further examination.

The SPEAKER. If the previous question shall not be sustained, a motion to refer the bill will be in order.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. Then I hope the House will not sustain the previous question, and that the bill may be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, so that the effect of the bill may be thoroughly known.

Mr. EGGLESTON. If these parties can receive this property on deposit, and have a right to sell it, what is to prevent them from charging such rates as the parties depositing may agree to pay? It amounts to establishing a pawnbroker's shop, to be legalized by Congress.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I will say in answer that the company have no right to dispose of any article deposited with them except upon an agreement made with the depositors.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I would ask the gentleman if all pawnbrokers, in disposing of the articles left with them, do not have an agreement with the parties as to the mode in which the property shall be disposed of, and if this bill does not provide by law that this company shall do what pawnbrokers usually do.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I must decline to yield any further. I will say in reply to the gentleman from Iowa that I never had any dealings with pawnbrokers, and know nothing of their mode of doing business. There is nothing in the bill but what is legitimate and proper. It has passed the Senate, and I have proposed amendments limiting the business of the company, and giving further security to depositors.

Now, with the explanation that has been made, if the House is not willing to second the call for the previous question then they can vote it down. I have answered as many questions as I deem necessary.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I would ask the chairman of the Committee for the District of Columbia [Mr. INGERSOLL] if there is anything in this bill that prohibits disbursing officers of the Government from depositing public funds in this institution.

Mr. INGERSOLL. No, sir, there is not. I suppose that the disbursing officers of the Government are controlled by the statutes and the orders of their superiors, and not by the provisions of this bill. There is no prohibition in this bill against disbursing officers putting their public funds in this institution, any more than there was in reference to their depositing in the Merchants' National Bank of this city.

I move the previous question. If the House do not desire to second it, they can vote it down.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I hope the House will vote it down.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes twenty, noes not counted.

So the previous question was not seconded.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I move that this bill and the pending amendment be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. INGERSOLL] a question in regard to this bill before I vote upon it.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I cannot yield the floor for any such purpose. I call the previous question on the motion to refer.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the motion to refer was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill and the pending amendment were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution and a bill of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 61) to extend the time for the construction of the first section of the Western Pacific railroad; and

An act (S. No. 186) amendatory of the act to provide for reports of the decisions of the Supreme Court.

LINCOLN SQUARE, ETC.

Mr. INGERSOLL, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported a bill providing for grading East Capitol street and establishing Lincoln square; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read in full. It authorizes the Commissioner of Public Buildings to grade East Capitol street from Third street east to Eleventh street east, and to cause the square at the intersection of said street with Massachusetts, North Carolina, Tennessee, and Kentucky avenues, between Eleventh and Thirteenth streets east, to be inclosed with a wooden fence, and the same shall be known as "Lincoln square;" and the sum of $15,000 is appropriated for that purpose.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question was upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I call the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. SLOAN. Does not this bill go to the Committee of the Whole, as containing an appropriation?

The SPEAKER. This bill does contain an appropriation. But it is too late to raise that point of order, the bill having already been read the third time without objection.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Is this a private bill?

The SPEAKER. It is too late to raise that point of order now.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Will it be in order to move to refer this bill to the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. If the previous question is not seconded that motion will be in order.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 28, noes 31; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. INGERSOLL and ELDRIDGE were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes fifty-nine, noes not counted.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was then ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was passed.

Mr. INGERSOLL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CANAL AND SEWERAGE COMPANY.

Mr. INGERSOLL, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported back, with an amendment, Senate bill No. 190, to incorporate the District of Columbia Canal and Sewerage Company.

Mr. WINDOM. I would inquire of the Chair if this is a private bill. We have had three or four general bills considered this morning, and I think it is hardly fair to other committees that the time set apart for private business should be taken up by general business.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that this is a private bill within the rule.

Mr. F. THOMAS. As the morning hour has nearly expired, I hope the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. INGERSOLL] will consent to withdraw this bill at this time and report it on some future day. Does the Chair decide this to be a private bill?

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair, this is a private bill, being for a corporation. The Chair made a decision at some length some days ago in regard to what should be considered public and what private bills, quoting precedents from the parliamentary practice of Great Britain.

Mr. F. THOMAS. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. INGERSOLL] consent to the suggestion I made a moment ago?

Mr. INGERSOLL. I cannot consent to it.

Mr. F. THOMAS. The bill can hardly be read through during the remainder of the morning hour. I think the gentleman better withdraw the bill now and report it on some future day.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I cannot consent to withdraw it, but I am willing that it shall go over for consideration until next Friday. I want it to be considered as unfinished business, to come up at that time.

Mr. F. THOMAS. I must ask the Speaker's permission to state the peculiar characteristics of this bill.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I must object to that, as I have already consented to the arrangement that this bill should go over to next Friday.

Mr. F. THOMAS. Then I rise to a point of order.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I desire to report another bill in regard to a hospital.

Mr. F. THOMAS. Will the gentleman consent to withdraw the sewerage bill?

Mr. INGERSOLL. I must decline to do that.

Mr. F. THOMAS. I do not desire the bill to be before the House at all, if I can prevent it, until the parties interested can be heard before the committee.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I make the point of order that what the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. F. THOMAS] is saying is not upon a point of order.

Mr. F. THOMAS. The gentleman will hear me through. I therefore raise the point of order, because I want the bill recommended by the committee to take the course I have indicated. Now, in regard to the character of this bill—

Mr. INGERSOLL. I raise the point of order that this is no point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. F. THOMAS] is stating his point of order.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I would have no objection to the gentleman going on if I did not wish to pass this hospital bill.

Mr. F. THOMAS. I was about to say this is no ordinary bill; and when I have stated its character I think the Chair will rule that this is a public corporation.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland is occupying the floor upon a point of order, and is now stating it.

Mr. F. THOMAS. This bill, Mr. Speaker, proposes to seize $400,000 worth of property of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company. It therefore affects parties outside of the District of Columbia. The Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company, under a charter granted by Congress, and by the States of Maryland, Virginia, and Pennsylvania, has made a very expensive structure at the mouth of this little stream—

Mr. INGERSOLL. Mr. Speaker, is that in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Maryland is now arguing the merits of the bill.

Mr. F. THOMAS. No, sir; I am about to explain its character.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland raises the point of order that this is not a private bill. The Chair decides that it is a private bill.

Mr. F. THOMAS. I believe that the Speaker has not read the bill, or he would not so decide. I say this with great respect.

The SPEAKER. Private bills relate generally to individuals or corporations. May's Parliamentary Practice states that private bills "are for the interest of an individual, a public company or corporation, a parish, a city, a county, or other locality." It must not be a general bill in its enactments, but "a bill for the particular interest or benefit of a person or persons." Under this principle, which is laid down with a number of illustrations in the volume referred to, the Chair has no doubt that this bill is a private bill and can be reported on private bill day. Whether the bill should pass or not is a question for the House to determine.

The morning hour has expired, and the bill goes over till next Friday.

CONTESTED ELECTION.

Mr. DAWES. I rise to call up the resolution reported by the Committee of Elections in the case of Follett vs. Delano. I stated to the House yesterday that if members would take the trouble to read the report I would not occupy any time in the discussion of the case. I have no doubt that gentlemen have read the report; and I shall not therefore detain the House by any remarks in explanation of it.

The case involves a question which is of considerable importance as a question of practice. The committee, I may also mention, found some difficulty in settling questions of law arising in the case, but no difficulty as to matters of fact. If the members of the House are satisfied with the positions as to law and practice embraced in the report, they will find no difficulty, I apprehend, in voting for the resolution of the committee.

The resolution reported by the committee was read, as follows:

Resolved, That Hon. Columbus Delano is entitled to the seat occupied by him in this House as the Representative from the thirteenth district of Ohio in the Thirty-Ninth Congress.

Mr. DAWES. If no gentleman desires to oppose this resolution, I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee of Elections, reported the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be paid to Charles Follett, Esq., out of the contingent fund of the House, the sum of $1,500 in full for time spent and expenses incurred in contesting the right of Hon. Columbus Delano to a seat in this House as a Representative from the thirteenth district in Ohio.

Mr. DAWES moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. HUBBARD, of West Virginia, asked leave of absence for Mr. LATHAM for one week. Leave was granted.

EQUALIZING BOUNTIES.

Mr. SCHENCK, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill to equalize the bounties of soldiers, sailors, and marines who served in the late war for the Union; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SCHENCK. I give notice that on some early day, when members shall have had an opportunity to examine the bill, I will ask that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the consideration of the bill, and that it be put on its passage.

TELEGRAPH LINES.

Mr. ALLEY, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, by unanimous consent, reported back House bill No. 575, to aid in the construction of telegraph lines, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes; which was read a second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

PRIZE MONEY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, in reply to a resolution of the House of April 9, 1866, on the subject of prize money; which was laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

CONTESTED ELECTION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House additional testimony in the contested-election case of Koontz vs. Coffroth; which was referred to the Committee of Elections.

TAX BILL.

Mr. MORRILL moved that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. DAWES in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being a bill of the House (No. 513) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof.

The pending question was on the amendment offered by Mr. STEVENS to add to the paragraph in relation to cigar-makers the following:

Provided, That journeymen cigar-makers and apprentices who work for others shall not be considered as included within this proviso.

The question being put on the above amendment, no quorum voted.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Messrs. ASHLEY, of Ohio, and JENCKES.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 51, noes 43.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to strike out the word "five," in line seventeen hundred and ninety-seven, and to insert in lieu thereof "fifteen;" so that the clause shall read, "shall pay the duties on such cigars within fifteen days after purchasing them." Also, the same amendment in line eighteen hundred and two, so that the clause shall read, "and any such purchaser who shall neglect for more than fifteen days to pack and have such cigars duly inspected, and pay the duties thereon," &c.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move the following amendment:

That section ninety-three be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause, and inserting, in lieu thereof, the following: that all goods, wares, and merchandise, or articles manufactured or made, except refined petroleum, refined coal oil, gold and silver, spirituous and malt liquors, manufactured tobacco, snuff, and cigars, by any person or firm where the product shall not exceed the rate of $1,000 per annum, and shall be made or produced by the labor of said person or firm, or by his or their family, shall be, and are hereby, exempt from tax. Where the product shall exceed such rate, and not exceed the rate of $3,000, the tax shall be levied, assessed, and collected only upon the excess above the rate of $1,000 per annum; and in all other cases the whole annual product, including any business or transaction where one party has been furnished with materials or any part thereof, and employed by another party to manufacture, make, or finish the goods, wares, and merchandise, or articles paying or promising to pay therefor, and to whom the same are returned when so made and finished, shall be assessed, and the tax paid thereon by the producer or manufacturer: Provided, That whenever a producer or manufacturer shall use or consume, or shall remove for consumption or use, any articles, goods, wares, or merchandise which, if removed for sale, would be liable to taxation, he shall be assessed upon the salable value of the articles, goods, wares, or merchandise so used or so removed for consumption or use.

Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment in the interest of the small manufacturers and the mechanics of the country. I offer it as a protection to that class of labor which fights its own battle with little aid from machinery. It affects mainly the hand-workers of the nation who depend more on their toil than they do upon capital for the profits which a year's business may secure to them. Its effects will be exhausted principally in shielding such as earn their bread by the sweat of their brows from unnecessary taxation; and this is the sole object of the amendment.

The only change which this amendment makes in the present law is to exempt from the manufacturer's tax $1,000 worth of the products of all manufacturers whose annual productions do not exceed $3,000 in value. So just a proposition as this ought not to require much discussion to win for it the approval of every member of the committee.

It will be remembered that the law defines a manufacturer to be—

"Any person, firm, or corporation who shall manufacture by hand or machinery any goods, wares, or merchandise, exceeding annually the sum of $1,000, or shall be engaged in the manufacture or preparation for sale of any articles or compounds, or shall put up for sale in packages with his own name or trade-mark thereon any articles or compound, shall be regarded as a manufacturer."

This definition embraces almost every mechanic in the whole country, for there are very few whose productions do not annually exceed $1,000 in value, when both labor and materials are included in the computation. The profit to the mechanic, including the value of his own labor, often proves to be an insignificant part of the $1,000 of aggregate valuation placed upon his productions; and to him a tax of five per cent. upon the total result is grievously burdensome. All such taxation is opposed by every consideration of sound public policy. Productive industry should be fostered until it becomes strong enough to stand alone. The tax-gatherer should not be sent into the workshop until the workman has secured for himself and his family a reasonable support from the toil of his hands.

It is hard for hand labor to compete with machine labor, and to the former some advantage should be given. Without this great establishments crush out and destroy the lesser ones, as great fish are said to swallow up small ones. A combination of capital and machinery, if put on an equality in the tax laws with muscle, soon wear it out and drive its owner from the market. There is not a village in all the land whose mechanics do not feel how inexorably true this rule is. The great manufactories in the East play havoc with the mechanic shops of the West. And when this is done our workmen have not the advantage of resorting to the great workshops and manufactories for employment, as the mechanic of the East may. Our western mechanics when crushed out by the competition resulting from a combination of capital and machinery must change their pursuits and seek in some field new to them a support for themselves and their families.

We extend to the eastern manufacturer protection against the manufactures of the Old World through our tariff laws. Of this I do not complain; but at the same time, I must insist that our internal revenue laws shall be so framed as to protect, in some degree, the mechanics and small manufacturers of this country against the encroachments of those great establishments which have grown up under the fostering care of our tariff laws. It is true that the protection which the eastern manufacturer enjoys under our tariff laws would extend the same advantage to him in any other part of the United States; but in the West our manufacturing interests are in their infancy, and therefore it is that I say the tariff laws protect and foster eastern manufacturers. In the course of time I hope the West, by the development of manufacturing establishments, will share equally with all other sections of the country in the advantages springing from the tariff laws of the Government; and as one means looking to this end, I desire the adoption of this amendment as a protection to those who are to constitute our western manufacturers in the future.

The West must resort to manufacturing. Everything used and consumed in the West ought to be there manufactured. While it is the greatest food-producing region in the world, it should be one of the greatest manufacturing sections also. Cheap food and the comparatively low price of raw material are advantages which will some day tell in favor of the West. But to reach that day we must take present care of our workmen and mechanics.

The amendment which I have offered does not go as far and accomplish as much as I should like, but it seems to be the best that can be done at this time, and will afford some measure of relief. When I cannot get all I want it would not be wise to refuse a part.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope this amendment will not be adopted. There were in 1864 above sixty-three thousand manufacturers in the country who were taxed for licenses. I suppose that at least one half of that number manufactured less than $3,000. Therefore, if the amendment proposed by the gentleman should be carried, it would create a large deficiency in the revenue. It is giving an absolute bonus of fifty dollars to every manufacturer whose annual products exceed $3,000. They all sell in the same market, and if not subjected to the same tax those who are excepted have the advantage in the market. I might be very well content, living in New England as I do, where of course we shall receive the benefits of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Iowa in a much larger degree than those who reside in his own region. But I think it is more than we ought to concede at the present time. It would be making too large a reduction of the revenue. The law as it is, exempting $600 from taxation, gives the small manufacturers $30 advantage. I do not see why we should allow any more, for it is nothing less than paying them a bonus of twenty dollars out of the Treasury. I therefore hope the amendment will be rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the amendment.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. The argument of the chairman of the committee, that this is going to greatly reduce the revenue of the Government, is an entire fallacy. If you allow the exemption of $1,000 to every manufacturer in the United States it only amounts to about three million dollars. But this proposition is to allow it only to manufacturers whose products do not exceed in value the sum of $3,000 per annum. Therefore it will not exceed $1,000,000. But that, the gentleman says, is a bonus to the small manufacturers. Sir, that objection was not thought of when the committee voted in favor of retaining in the bill the section which allows a drawback of five cents a pound on all exported cotton goods, which is a bonus to the great manufacturers of the country, those who are receiving protection under the tariff laws in addition to that of the drawback of five cents a pound on cotton goods exported, taking out of the Treasury, as was shown at the time by my colleague, [Mr. ALLISON,] who is a member of the Committee of Ways and Means, more than three times the amount of money which this amendment would do in the way of reducing the aggregate amount of tax to be derived from the bill as reported by the committee.

Now, sir, I think it is time for us to establish the principle that our laboring men, our small manufacturers, shall be relieved from this unnecessary taxation until they reach a point beyond that which is required for the support of themselves and their families. After you have passed the limit of $3,000 provided for by my amendment, then let your manufacturers be called upon. But send not the tax-gatherer into all your workshops where no machines are found, where only hand labor is performed. Let them have this protection. It is nothing but equal, fair, and just, and I hope the committee will indorse it.

I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. SLOAN. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "$3,000" and inserting "$4,000," and I hope the amendment which I have proposed will prevail. There is no doubt in my mind that the system of taxation inaugurated in this country has borne more heavily upon the small manufacturers than upon any other class; and all will agree that they are among the most deserving of all classes in our community. While the manufacturing men with large capital have been fostered and have been growing richer, the business of the small manufacturers in every branch has been depressed throughout the country.

Now, in regard to licenses, the man who manufactures but one or two thousand dollars a year pays the same license as he who manufactures half a million or a million dollars, and it is of vital importance in the newer States, where we have none of these very large manufacturing establishments wielding a capital of millions of dollars, that we should foster the interest of the smaller manufacturers. They are the germ from which, if properly fostered, will grow up these large establishments which will in time pervade the West. It is, in my judgment, one of the most meritorious propositions that can be addressed to the committee. These small manufacturers have been oppressed by being required to pay double and triple taxes on articles which they were compelled to purchase from the larger manufacturers; and it is a step in the right direction to relieve from these accumulated taxes those who manufacture a less amount than $4,000 mainly with their own hands.

I regret exceedingly that the chairman of the committee has felt called upon to oppose the proposition which the gentleman from Iowa has made, calculated, as it is, to foster and build up our home industry. Three or four thousand dollars is a small sum in itself, and I think that in manufactures where but that sum is produced, at least the amount of $1,000 ought to be exempted entirely from taxation. I trust that upon reflection the able chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means will consent to this proposition. If he desires to make this revenue system, burdensome and oppressive as it is, popular with the people, here is an opportunity for him to do it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Chairman, I have sometimes indulged a hope that in the course of a year or two we might be able to dispense with that taxation which now presses so heavily upon our home manufactures. But, sir, observing the tendency of the action of this committee, I am almost discouraged, and fear that we may not reach that happy time for some considerable period longer. I perceive that the tendency all over the House is to take such action for the benefit of individual interests as largely to reduce the amount of revenue to be derived under this bill.

I think the proposition of the gentleman from Iowa will not hold when he comes to contrast it with the action of this committee in relation to exported manufactures of cotton. If anything is a fallacy, it seems to me that that portion of the gentleman's argument might justly be so called. It has no sort of relation to a measure of this kind. That was merely a question whether our manufacturers should work or should not work, whether such articles should be made here or in Great Britain. It was simply a question whether we should give our own people employment or not. This is a question of how much we shall give to this smaller class of workmen. I am as sensible to their wants and requirements as any man can be. My people would receive as much benefit from this as any other. But I do think that when we have gone as far as the existing law goes, we have gone, perhaps, as far as we can well do in strict justice to all parties. If the gentleman will consent to modify his amendment so as to exempt only $1,000, and strike out the remaining portion of it, I will not object to it.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Does the gentleman mean by that remark that he desires $1,000 to be exempted to all the manufacturers of the country?

Mr. MORRILL. To all manufacturers who do not manufacture over the amount of $1,000 a year.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. That is the present law, and such an amendment would make no change in the law.

Mr. MORRILL. Well, I move to strike out that portion of the gentleman's amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment to the amendment already pending.

Mr. SLOAN. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I renew it for the purpose of saying a word or two. The proposition in the ninety-third section of the existing law only applies to that class of manufacturers who, themselves or by their families, produce to the amount of $1,000 by the existing law, or to the amount of $3,000 as provided in the amendment of my colleague, [Mr. WILSON.] Therefore, this applies only to that class of persons who are engaged themselves in the various classes of manufactures. It does not apply to the men who employ hands, or a large amount of machinery. I think that it is a just amendment, and that the Committee of Ways and Means ought to consent to it as proposed by my colleague.

We all know that the manufacturers all over the country are protesting against this tax upon the industry of the country. I doubt not that it is the most obnoxious and burdensome tax we impose upon people; and I think we should relieve them of it as rapidly as we can. This is a step in the right direction; by first attempting to relieve the small manufacturers who are struggling to build up a business in the West as well as in the East. I hope next year we shall be able to reach a larger class, and relieve them, and levy the taxes on the luxuries of the country, upon which I believe we can raise a sufficient revenue. I trust, therefore, that the amendment of my colleague will prevail, and I withdraw my amendment to it.

The question recurred on the amendment offered by Mr. WILSON, of Iowa.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out from the amendment the words "whose product shall exceed such rate, and not exceed the rate of $3,000, the tax shall be levied, assessed, and collected only above the rate of $1,000 per annum."

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I am opposed to striking out the second clause of the proposed amendment of the gentleman from Iowa. I desire simply to say, without detaining the House, that I am in favor of his amendments.

I hold, Mr. Chairman, that it is only legitimate to tax the wealth and luxury of the country. I hold it to be utterly opposed to correct principle to tax the means by which incomes are produced and also to tax the incomes. I hold such a system to be unequal in its effects. You tax a small manufacturing establishment which produces only $3,000 a year, and you also tax its income. What will you do with the gentleman who sits in his office and by skill and ingenuity produces an income of $3,000 a year? What does he pay under the income tax? It is the production of his wealth. Wealth is able to pay taxes; poverty is not. Now, the man who produces his income from his farm or from his factory should be taxed in the same way, on the product which he returns as income, and he should not be taxed in addition on the ax, the hoe, the shovel, or the machine by which he works and delves to get that income. It is an inequality which is wrong. It is a tax upon the means by which wealth is produced.

Now, there are exceptions to this rule. We should tax the improvident investments of men and articles of luxury and extravagance. Put your tax upon such things, but by no means put it on the means by which incomes are produced. I am in favor of exempting all plows, threshing-machines, and those other machines which help to augment the resources of the country.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question was taken on Mr. MORRILL'S amendment to the amendment, and it was disagreed to.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, and it was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That section ninety-four be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following: That upon the articles, goods, wares, and merchandise hereinafter mentioned, except where otherwise provided, which shall be produced and sold, or be manufactured or made and sold, or be consumed or used by the manufacturer or producer thereof, or removed for consumption, or for delivery to others than agents of the manufacturer or producer within the United States or Territories thereof, there shall be assessed, collected, and paid the following taxes, to be paid by the producer or manufacturer thereof, that is to say:

On candles, of whatever material made, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem.

On gas, illuminating, made of coal wholly or in part, or any other material, when the product shall not be above two hundred thousand cubic feet per month, a tax of ten cents per one thousand cubic feet; when the product shall be above two and not exceeding five hundred thousand cubic feet per month, a tax of fifteen cents per one thousand cubic feet; when the product shall be above five hundred thousand and not exceeding five million cubic feet per month, a tax of twenty cents per one thousand cubic feet; when the product shall be above five millions, a tax of twenty-five cents per one thousand cubic feet. And the general average of the monthly product for the year preceding the return required by this act shall regulate the rate of tax herein imposed. And where any gas-works have not been in operation for the next year preceding the return as aforesaid, then the rate shall be regulated upon the estimated average of the monthly product: Provided, That the product required to be returned by law by any gas company shall be understood to be, in addition to the gas consumed by said company or other party, the product charged in the bills actually rendered by the gas company during the month preceding the return; and all gas companies are hereby authorized to add the tax imposed by law to the price per thousand cubic feet on gas sold: Provided further, That all gas furnished for lighting street lamps or for other purposes, and not measured, and all gas made for and used by any hotel, inn, tavern, and private dwelling-house, shall be subject to tax whatever the amount of product, and may be estimated; and if the returns in any case shall be understated or underestimated, it shall be the duty of the assistant assessor of the district to increase the same as he shall deem just and proper: And provided further, That gas companies located within the corporate limits of any city or town, whether in the district or otherwise, or so located as to compete with each other, shall pay the rate of tax imposed by law upon the company having the largest production.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I move to strike out in line eighteen hundred and forty-four, all after the words "cubic feet" down to and including the words "cubic feet" in line eighteen hundred and fifty-one. I hope the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means will agree to that.

Mr. MORRILL. I cannot agree to it.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. Then I desire to call the attention of the committee to the peculiarity of this provision in the law. Ostensibly it seems to be a tax upon gas companies, and a tax upon them in proportion to the amount they manufacture; but when you come to read the section through, you find that it is a tax upon the consumer, and the consumer is not taxed in proportion to the amount of the article that he consumes, but in proportion to the amount produced by the company; that is to say, if you consume gas that is produced by a small company, you pay ten cents per thousand cubic feet; but if the company that supplies you is a large company, that manufactures upward of two hundred thousand cubic feet, then you must pay fifteen cents per thousand cubic feet for all the gas you consume.

It is a very singular provision of law, and I do not know upon what principle it is based. It is for this reason that I asked the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means [Mr. MORRILL] to accept the amendment I have offered. I asked him to accept it because I did not wish to expose to this committee the absurdity of this provision.

It is no answer to my objection to say that a large company can produce gas cheaper than a small company can produce it. That is not so, and they charge the same prices that the small companies do; and any increase of expense or price is visited upon the consumer. I think that under any circumstances a tax of ten cents per thousand cubic feet is large enough.

The large companies are located in the large towns where labor costs more and materials are more expensive; and you are breaking down these gas companies, while you are relieving every other light from taxation. You take off the tax from petroleum and coal oil, and all we now ask is that you shall not make the tax upon gas so burdensome upon consumers that they cannot use it at all.

Mr. MORRILL. I am extremely obliged to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HOTCHKISS] for his exceeding great reluctance to expose the absurdity of the existing law, and therefore the absurdity of this bill. And I am as reluctant as he can be to do anything of the kind, to expose the absurdity of his argument.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. That is all fair.

Mr. MORRILL. If the gentleman had studied the subject so as to understand it, he probably would not have made this motion. This subject underwent a thorough examination two years ago by the Committee of Ways and Means. We had before us the representatives of gas companies from all parts of the country, from Cincinnati, Chicago, Philadelphia, New York, and from many other towns and cities. The bill prepared at that time was based upon the information we derived from those men who knew something about the manufacture of gas. We ascertained then that the smaller companies could not manufacture gas so cheaply as the larger ones in any of those places, and that there must be a difference in the amount of taxation we imposed upon them, or it would not bear equally upon the different companies. And not only all the smaller companies but the larger companies agreed that the different rates proposed by the existing law were correct and proper in themselves. I trust, therefore, that the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HOTCHKISS] will not prevail.

The amendment of Mr. HOTCHKISS was not agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. I do not know as I fully understand this paragraph; at all events I will move to amend it by striking out the following:

And all gas companies are hereby authorized to add the tax imposed by law to the price per thousand cubic feet on gas sold.

I was a member of the Committee of Ways and Means when the bill now a law was under consideration. I supposed then, as I presume we all did, that we were taxing gas companies to some extent. And we proposed a tax higher in proportion to the number of cubic feet they made upon the ground that the small companies found it cost more in proportion to produce a few thousand cubic feet than it did the large companies to produce hundreds of thousands of cubic feet. After the production has reached a certain amount all the increased cost is for material, the cost for labor being the same. We therefore proposed to tax the larger companies a higher rate, because we supposed they could better afford to pay it than the smaller companies.

But how has it resulted practically? Just in proportion as the companies could make the gas more cheaply, just in that proportion has the consumer been taxed. If the companies made their large quantities of gas so cheaply that they could afford to pay the higher tax, that tax has been charged upon the consumer and the companies have paid no tax. Now, unless you will adopt the amendment I have proposed, instead of taxing the companies in proportion to the facilities with which they make their gas, and the profits they derive from its manufacture, we will be taxing the consumer in proportion to the facilities with which the companies make the gas. Now, I cannot understand why we should do that.

Now, I take some humiliation to myself for having agreed to this when this subject was before the Committee of Ways and Means two years ago. I confess that I then fell into the absurdity that my friend from New York [Mr. HOTCHKISS] did not want to expose here. And now I suppose I have fallen into the other absurdity that my friend from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] referred to a few moments ago. But upon looking over this paragraph I cannot see how it is that we charge these companies one cent.

Mr. MOORHEAD. Cannot the companies which produce gas in large quantities produce it so much cheaper than the small companies that the consumer can afford to pay the additional tax?

Mr. STEVENS. The consumer pays all the tax.

Mr. MOORHEAD. He gets his gas cheaper.

Mr. STEVENS. He does not get it any cheaper in the end, if you add a tax to it, because it can be made more cheaply.

Mr. MORRILL. I shall be compelled to refresh the memory of my friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] who has been so busy upon the Committee on Appropriations that he hardly recollects the reasons for this provision. Of course it will be seen at once that it is not necessary to put this provision in the law in regard to any manufacturer that is not in some way limited by local law as to price. Of course the manufacturer of any article, whether it be gas or anything else, can charge the private citizen whatever he pleases.

Mr. STEVENS. Then why not strike this out?

Mr. MORRILL. I know many gas companies that have not raised their price at all since this tax was imposed, but they have paid the tax notwithstanding the increased price of coal.

But this provision meets only such cases as these: many cities and villages have chartered companies with the express limitation that they shall furnish the gas for street lamps at a rate named in the charter, and the price of coal having more than doubled within the last three or four years they have been compelled to manufacture gas not only at a loss but to pay the tax upon the amount consumed for municipal purposes, and this provision is intended only to remove the difficulty these companies will labor under if this provision is not inserted in the law. It is a proper and necessary provision, and should not be stricken out.

Mr. LE BLOND. I move, pro formâ, to amend the amendment by striking out the last word.

I trust that the motion to strike out this clause will prevail, for two reasons. First, I think it is of but little consequence whether this provision is retained or stricken out, so far as the action of these companies is concerned, for it is very apparent that the companies will charge the tax upon the consumer in the end. The consumer will have to pay it. It will not come out of the company. Another reason why this clause should be stricken out is, that I do not conceive this Congress has authority to say to these companies in the respective States, "You may charge this tax upon the consumers." This is a matter that should be left to the States alone. All that this Congress can ask is, that the States pay the amount with which they are assessed in this particular, leaving the States to regulate the rest.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I agree fully with my colleague in his remarks in reference to the propriety of striking out the clause which has been referred to; and I also concur in the remarks of my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania. I think that the Committee of Ways and Means have certainly been in error in reporting this bill in this shape. I think that the gas companies in all the cities of the United States have been making money enough to enable them to pay this tax themselves. I will say to the chairman of the committee, that so far as the cities of the West are concerned, in almost all cases, so far as my knowledge extends, the payment of this tax is imposed by the companies upon the consumers, private and public. In many cities the gas companies have contracts for ten, fifteen, or twenty years, and their stock is selling at two or three hundred per cent. above par; yet they collect this tax from the consumers, whether individuals or municipal corporations. This is certainly wrong.

Let me put a case. Suppose that a gas company makes a contract with the city of Cleveland to furnish gas to that city for fifteen years at a certain price. Under the provision of this bill the company will add the tax to the price of the gas, and they will collect it by law. This is decidedly wrong. We make no such provision in reference to other taxation. Other manufacturers are not thus provided for. We must remember that gas companies are monopolies. When they get a contract to light a city they get an exclusive contract. They will not take a contract unless they get it for the entire city. I believe that these companies should have no greater privileges than individuals engaged in any branch of manufacturing.

Mr. LE BLOND. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I renew it. I desire, Mr. Chairman, to correct a statement made by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. EGGLESTON,] who has just taken his seat. I cannot say what may be the financial condition of gas companies in the State which he so well represents here, but so far as regards those in my own State I venture the assertion that, instead of being highly remunerative to the stockholders, five out of six of those companies, during the last five years, have not made dividends equal to the legal interest on the capital invested.

Let me suggest, also, to my venerable friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. STEVENS,] that the price of the gas made by these different companies is in proportion to the amount of gas they make and the cost of manufacture, just as much as in regard to any other article of manufacture. I desire to say to him, further, that in most cases the gas companies in the State of New York are restricted as to price by their charters; and I know of my own knowledge that within the last five years not only have those companies been unable to declare dividends, but if they had not had the option of adding this tax to the price charged for gas they would have been obliged to discontinue business. It is literally true that gas companies, instead of being highly remunerative associations, have, within the last five or six years, been among the least remunerative corporations in the country. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. DODGE. I move to amend by inserting after the word "companies" in line eighteen hundred and sixty-three the words "whose rate of charge is restricted by charter;" so that the clause will read:

And all gas companies whose rate of charge is restricted by charter are hereby authorized to add the tax imposed by law to the price per thousand cubic feet on gas sold.

Mr. GRISWOLD. The amendment of my colleague may be very well, so far as it goes; but most of the companies in the State of New York are to a certain extent, if not entirely, restrained by their charters in reference to the price they may charge for gas. In many cases, for instance, where a charter is granted by a city, the company is bound during the continuance of the charter to furnish the city with gas at a stipulated price, that price in most cases merely covering the cost, and being sometimes less than the cost of manufacture.

Mr. LE BLOND. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRISWOLD] one question. In cases where the authorities of the respective States in which these gas companies are located have fixed the price to be paid, does the gentleman propose by such a law as this to override the action of the States?

Mr. GRISWOLD. I propose that we shall do in regard to gas companies just as we do in reference to any other manufacturing companies. When our internal revenue law was enacted it provided specially that where contracts as to price had been made the party making the contract should have a right to add the tax.

Mr. LE BLOND. I would like the gentleman to state whence, in his view, Congress derives the power to override the action of States in matters of this kind.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Let me say to the gentleman that I do not conceive that the question of State rights has anything to do with this matter.

Mr. LE BLOND. Well, I think it has everything to do with it.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to say merely a word or two lest the House should be led astray by the statements as to the immense profits of these companies. I am somewhat acquainted with the history of quite a number of these corporations in the United States, and I am satisfied that but few of them have made large profits. One company in New York, the Manhattan Company, another in Boston, and I believe one or more out West, have made large profits; but, taking them generally, throughout almost the whole country, you can buy their stock at less than par.

Mr. Chairman, in relation to the provisions in this respect of the bill now before us, I think that we had better leave them as they are. It is not contended that the amendment proposed will affect the price of gas to the ordinary consumer. With regard to ordinary consumers the companies, whether this clause be in or out of the bill, will have the same right to add the tax or not, as they deem proper. The effect of the provision in the bill is simply this: that where in cities these companies are bound by their charters, or by requirement of law, to furnish gas at a certain rate, they are allowed to add to that rate the amount of the tax.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I move pro forma to amend the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DODGE] by striking out the last word.

I desire to correct a misapprehension into which members may have been led by some of the statements which have been made. It has been said that the price charged by these companies has in many cases been so low that they could not realize any profit. My friend on my left [Mr. GRISWOLD] says that the price in his city is four dollars per thousand feet. Now, I undertake to say that gas can be furnished in his city for three dollars per thousand feet, and still give an immense profit to the company manufacturing it.

The distinguished chairman of the committee states, as I have understood him, that in the eastern cities the gas companies are so benevolent toward the consumers that they actually refuse to add this tax to their bills. Then, again, he tells us that the stock of these companies is not remunerative—that the companies are poor. If this be the fact, all I can say is that they are model corporations. I believe that we should now place a firm hand upon these monopolies, and say to them that they shall pay their proportionate share of taxes as well as individuals who do business as manufacturers. When you say to the plow-maker and to the maker of reaping-machines that they shall not add the tax to the cost of manufacture you ought not to give to the gas companies the power to add it to their manufacture.

I know what I am talking about. I know that the stock of gas companies in Ohio is worth two hundred per cent., and yet in every instance they put the tax on their bills. I want it taken off.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CONKLING. The theory on which this section is based no doubt is this: that the great gas companies, the very extensive manufacturers of gas, can make that article cheaper than the smaller companies; that because they can make it cheaper they will do so; that the price of gas in the large cities will therefore be less than in the smaller cities; and further, that for the same reason the consumer can afford to have the great companies pay a larger tax and yet the net cost to him not be as great as it would be if the smaller companies supplied it, paying a less tax and incurring a greater cost in the manufacture of gas. That, I think, is a fair statement of the theory upon which this section is based.

Now, what is the fact in practice? Surely we all know—certainly my colleague knows—that in the city of New York the gas consumer pays a larger price than we pay in the city of Utica. I find it to be the fact in practice that the great gas companies charge a higher price, and then they take the tax which they have to pay, without even disguising it in name, and put it in so many words upon the bill, so much in addition for taxes, and the consumer pays it.

Now, unquestionably this is a great evil, and I think the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] looks in the right direction; and I think the amendment of my colleague [Mr. DODGE] would be better if in place of saying "where the rate is fixed by charter" he would modify it by saying "where it is restricted by law."

Mr. DODGE. I accept that modification.

Mr. EGGLESTON. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. I renew it. I desire to say that I believe under the present law no great injustice is done to anybody. And I believe I know something about the manufacture of gas. I think my colleague [Mr. CONKLING] is mistaken when he says that he pays less for gas in the city of Utica than he would have to pay in the city of New York. My impression is that gas costs a dollar a thousand more in the city of Utica than in New York. It certainly costs more in Syracuse, and I presume it must in Utica. In New York the price is limited by the charters of the respective companies, and they have been appealing in vain for the last two or three years to the Legislature for authority to increase the price to the consumer, because they were unable to pay a dividend on their stock.

The Manhattan Company, in New York city, it is true, as was said by the chairman of the committee, has been prosperous. But why? Because in 1851, anticipating the great trouble which we were to have in this country, they bought three or four hundred thousand tons of coal in England, and imported it at a low price. Consequently they have had this large amount on hand, and have been able to manufacture at the old price, while companies not thus restricted have raised the price one or two hundred per cent.

I wish to say a word in reply to a suggestion made by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LE BLOND], who asks whether we have power to make this provision, as it now exists in the law. I believe that in regard to every contract of this nature, and every tax of this nature, the national Government is supreme. The Government has the power of taxation, and no State has any authority to say to the national Government that a tax levied for national purposes may not be repaid in some way to the company or to the party who pays it.

Mr. LE BLOND. If the gentleman will allow me a moment, I do not question the right of Congress to tax, but I do question the right of Congress to say that this tax that we have levied shall be charged over against the consumer and thus increase the rate that he is required to pay by the amount of the tax that the Government levies, when the States themselves may have limited the price that those contractors shall furnish gas. You simply do away with the law of the States in that matter, and it does not reach the question of the right of Congress to tax at all.

Mr. DAVIS. The gentleman then puts it on the ground that there is no authority under the Constitution to impair the validity of a contract. That proposition I deny.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DAVIS. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

The question recurred on the amendment offered by Mr. DODGE, as modified at the suggestion of Mr. CONKLING, to insert the words "whose rate of charge is restricted by law" so that the clause will read, "and all gas companies whose rate of charge is restricted by law are hereby authorized to add the tax imposed by law to the price per thousand cubic feet on gas sold;" and it was not agreed to.

The question recurred on the motion of Mr. STEVENS, to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I move, pro forma, to strike out the last word.

This proposition, it seems to me, is very objectionable as it stands in the bill. In name it proposes to tax the gas companies when in fact it exempts them from all taxation. It is a delusion and a fraud upon its face, and it is a kind of legislation which we ought not to encourage. I do not quite agree with my friend from Ohio, that we have not the power to provide by law that this tax may not be added to the price of gas. I suppose that the high power which Congress exercises in enacting a tax law is sufficient to enable us to frame any provision which may be necessary to make the tax effectual, and if it be necessary to provide by law that the tax may be added to the consumer we have power to do so. And while we have power to do that we have power also, it seems to me, to say it shall not be added.

What I want to propose—and I will suggest it to the chairman of the committee—is that instead of striking out this clause we strike out these words, "and all gas companies are hereby authorized," and to insert "and no gas company shall;" so that it will read:

And no gas company shall add the tax imposed by law to the price per thousand cubic feet on gas sold.

Then if it is found that gas companies do not make dividends, let the Legislatures authorize them to increase the price. But let us not by law profess to levy a tax on gas companies when in fact we are doing no such thing, but exempting them.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MORRILL. That would be a very singular proposition, and one for which I do not suppose anybody intends to vote. The proposition to strike out this part of the law authorizing a company to add the tax will not benefit the consumers, for whatever amount of loss from corporations they will be subject to on that account they will be likely to add to the price charged to consumers of their gas.

I move that the committee rise to terminate debate on this paragraph.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DAWES reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being bill of the House No. 513, to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof, and had come to no resolution thereon.

CLOSE OF DEBATE.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that when the House resolve itself again into Committee of the Whole, debate on the paragraph under consideration be terminated in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF PROCEEDING TO-MORROW.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move that to-morrow be appropriated to the usual debate on the President's message.

The motion was agreed to.

TAX BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. MORRILL moved that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. DAVES in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being a bill of the House (No. 513) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof.

Mr. SPALDING. I cannot agree with my colleague from Ohio, [Mr. LAWRENCE,] if I understand him correctly, that this paragraph is within the scope of our legislative power; and I cannot agree with the learned gentleman from the Syracuse district, of New York, [Mr. DAVIS] that we have power, as the Congress of the United States, to make this legislation operative upon the people of the different States. Now, although we can exert the high and sovereign power of taxation, for all necessary purposes for our Government, yet we cannot go into the States and change individual contracts there under the laws of the State. If I have a contract for my gas under the laws of the State of Ohio, the price being limited by the laws of that State to so much per thousand cubic feet, I would like to know what law of Congress can reach me in Ohio, and make me pay a higher rate than I have agreed with the gas company to pay.

Now, this provision, which it is sought by this motion to strike out, simply provides that all gas companies shall be authorized to add the tax imposed by law to the price per thousand cubic feet on the gas sold by them.

It is said that this will act as a hardship in States where the price of gas is limited. If so, it is an indirect means of doing away with the laws of such States. We must impose taxes to the extent we deem necessary, and then leave it for the different State Legislatures to apply the remedy. If they find that they have restricted their gas companies so as to make this tax too onerous for them, they themselves will agree that the tax may be added to the contract price. But I hold that we cannot do it. I am so much of a "State-rights man" that I hold to that doctrine. I believe, if I know anything about the laws and Constitution of my country, that we have no right to go into the States and legislate in this way. That is my objection to the amendment.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

The question recurred on the amendment proposed by Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, and being put, it was disagreed to.

The question then recurred on Mr. STEVEN's motion to strike out the entire clause; and being put, it was agreed to.

Mr. HOTCHKISS. I move, in line eighteen hundred and forty-six, to strike out the word "ten" and insert in lieu thereof "five." I do it for the benefit of the small companies, which the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means has conceded cannot live under the present tax.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On illuminating, lubricating, or other mineral oils, marking not less than thirty-six nor more than fifty-nine degrees Baume's hydrometer, the product of the distillation, redistillation, or refining of crude petroleum, twenty cents per gallon; and all coal oils between the specific gravity, by the Baume's test, of thirty-six and fifty-nine degrees, inclusive, shall be deemed refined illuminating coal oil, and any person or persons who, for purposes of sale or consumption, shall mix any of the heaviest paraffine oils with the refined illuminating oils, or with the naphtha, or either one with the other, shall be deemed manufacturers of coal oil, and must be duly taxed as such, and said oil thus mixed, either with or without further distillation, shall pay the tax of illuminating, refined coal oil, if after said mixing or distillation said oils mark by Baume's hydrometer between said points of thirty-six and fifty-nine degrees.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out all after the word "gallon" in line eighteen hundred and eighty-two down to the end of the paragraph, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

And all such oils between the specific gravity by Baume's test of thirty-six and fifty-nine degrees, inclusive, shall be deemed refined illuminating oil, and any person or persons who, for purposes of sale or consumption, shall mix any of the heavier paraffine oils with illuminating oil, or with naphtha, or either one with the other, shall be deemed a manufacturer of illuminating oil, and taxed as such, and said oil thus mixed, either with or without further distillation, shall be subject to a tax of twenty cents per gallon, if after said mixing or distillation the product marks by Baume's hydrometer between the said points of thirty-six and fifty-nine degrees inclusive.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I move to strike out in line eighteen hundred and eighty-two the word "twenty," and to insert "ten" in lieu thereof; and also to strike out the word "twenty" in the amendment just adopted and to insert "ten" in lieu thereof.

Mr. Chairman, when this tax upon rock oil was imposed two years ago, ten cents a gallon was the amount fixed upon it. It was considered at that time a very high tax; and, as compared with the tax imposed upon gas, it would be a very high tax now. Last year the tax was doubled. My amendment proposes to go back to the tax first levied upon this article two years ago, and place it at ten cents per gallon. If you make it twenty cents a gallon, you make it more than double the tax imposed on any other illuminating substance by this bill. In the clause that immediately follows the tax on coal oil is only ten cents per gallon, and the tax on the same amount of light derived from gas is not more than half the amount of the tax imposed on this substance.

We must remember that this is an article consumed altogether by the poorer classes of society; and that it is in itself a moralizer and enemy of vice and crime. I think the committee ought to consent that this tax upon light should be reduced to ten cents per gallon. For one, I would make the tax upon light so low that the humblest dwelling of the poorest man in the land could be made cheerful and nice; so that when he returns from his day's labor, instead of stopping at the gas-lit grocery he may come home, having a few cents left with which to purchase a paper, and sit down, and look upon the questions pending before Congress, so that he may censure by his vote his member if we impose too heavy taxes upon him.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the gentleman will be content with his motion as we are content with his speech, and will not press it to a vote. The motion is to reduce the tax on petroleum one half, and, of course, to reduce the amount of revenue from that source one half.

It will be recollected that when this tax was first imposed it was the intention to obtain a large amount of revenue from this article on the ground that it was a better and cheaper article for light than anything else that could be obtained. We have not been deceived in that respect. It is an article that competes with everything else. There is no article that gives a more beautiful light, neither oil, tallow, nor gas, that can be afforded so cheaply. I must remind the committee, also, of the fact that we have already relieved crude petroleum from any tax. It was exempted by a special bill, and it is also exempted in this bill. I trust the gentleman and his constituents will be satisfied with that, and that this amendment will not prevail.

The question was taken on Mr. SCOFIELD's amendment, and it was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On illuminating, lubricating, or other mineral oils marking not less than thirty-six nor more than fifty-nine degrees Baume's hydrometer, the exclusive product of the refining of crude oil produced by a single distillation of coal, shale, asphaltum, peat, or other bituminous substance, not otherwise provided for, ten cents per gallon.

Mr. MOORHEAD. In line eighteen hundred and ninety-eight I move to strike out the words "a single." Those words are improperly there and ought to be stricken out.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is right as it stands.

Mr. MORRILL. I am not aware that that expression is wrong; I have received no information but what those words should remain. As I understand it, it is right as it is.

Mr. GARFIELD. A single distillation from coal is called crude oil. The point in this whole paragraph is to levy a lighter tax on oil produced from coal when refined; and in order to make this tax correspond with the tax on crude petroleum, we say that oil refined from crude oil made by a single distillation of coal shall bear a burden of only ten cents per gallon; whereas that refined from crude petroleum shall bear a burden, as provided in the paragraph above, of twenty cents. I think the paragraph is right as it stands.

Mr. MOORHEAD. I withdraw my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On oil, naphtha, benzine, benzole, or gasoline marking more than fifty-nine degrees Baume's hydrometer, the product of the distillation, redistillation, or refining of crude petroleum, or of crude oil produced by a single distillation of coal, shale, peat, asphaltum, or other bituminous substances, a tax of ten cents per gallon: Provided, That distillers and refiners of illuminating, lubricating, or other mineral oil, naphtha, benzine, benzole, or gasoline, shall be subject to all the provisions of law applicable to distillers of spirits, with regard to special taxes, bonds, returns, assessments, removing to and withdrawing from warehouses, liens, penalties, drawbacks, and all other provisions designed for the purpose of ascertaining the quantity distilled, and securing the payment of duties, so far as the same may, in the judgment of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and under regulations prescribed by him, be deemed necessary for that purpose.

Mr. SPALDING. I move to amend this paragraph by adding to it another proviso, as follows:

Provided further, That distillers and refiners of coal or mineral oil, whose production shall not exceed twenty-five barrels per day on a monthly average, shall not be required to make returns oftener than once in thirty days.

I will explain in a few words the object of this amendment, which is for the purpose of accommodating the smaller refiners. As the law now stands they are required to make a return once in ten days. Heavy capitalists can bear that, but the smaller refiners should not, I think, be required to report oftener than once in thirty days.

Mr. GARFIELD. I think the amendment of my colleague [Mr. SPALDING] is a proper one.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On spirits of turpentine, ten cents per gallon.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

On coffee, roasted, and all articles intended for use as substitutes for coffee, or for the adulteration of coffee, and all compounds and mixtures prepared for sale, or intended for use, as coffee or as a substitute for coffee when roasted and prepared for sale, but not ground, whether of domestic manufacture or imported, a tax of one cent per pound.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out this paragraph, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

On coffee, roasted or ground, ground spices and dry mustard, and on all articles intended for use as substitutes for or as adulterations of coffee, spices, or mustard, and upon all compounds and mixtures prepared for sale, or intended for use or sale as coffee, spices, or mustard, or as substitutes therefor, one cent per pound: Provided, That the exemption of $1,000 of annual value of productions manufactured shall not apply to any of the above specified articles.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On molasses produced from the sugar-cane, and not from sorghum or imphee, a tax of three cents per gallon.

No amendment being offered,
The Clerk read as follows:

On sirup of molasses or sugar-cane juice, when removed from the plantation, concentrated molasses or melado, and cistern bottoms, of sugar produced from the sugar-cane and not made from sorghum or imphee, a tax of three fourths of one cent per pound.

Mr. STEVENS. I would suggest to the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means [Mr. MORRILL] that there ought to be some provision made in this bill to prevent the imposition of a tax upon sugar or sirup made from other things than those here mentioned.

Mr. MORRILL. The provision the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] indicates will more properly come in when we reach that part of the bill relating to articles exempt from taxation.

Mr. STEVENS. I mentioned this because by a very absurd construction of the law, although we specified in the old bill what kinds of sirups and sugar should be taxed, the Department held that a manufacturer of sugar or sirup from corn stalks or other articles not here mentioned should be taxed.

The Clerk read as follows:

On sugars not above number twelve Dutch standard in color, produced from sugar-cane and not from sorghum or imphee, other than those produced by the refiner, a tax of one cent per pound.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

On sugars above number twelve and not above number eighteen Dutch standard in color, produced directly from the sugar-cane and not from sorghum or imphee, a tax of one and one half cent per pound.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

On sugar above number eighteen Dutch standard in color, produced directly from the sugar-cane, and not from sorghum or imphee, a tax of two cents per pound.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

On the gross amount of the sales of sugar refiners, including all the products of their manufactories or refineries, a tax of two and one half of one per cent. ad valorem. Provided, That every person shall be regarded as a sugar refiner, and pay the taxes levied by law, whose business it is to advance the quality and value of sugar upon which a tax has been paid, by melting and recrystallization, or by liquoring, claying, or other washing process, or by any other chemical or mechanical means, or who shall advance the quality or value of molasses, concentrated molasses, or melado, upon which a tax has been paid, by boiling or other process.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend the proviso by striking out the word "levied" and inserting the word "required" after the words "and pay the taxes."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to insert the words "or duty," after the word "tax" near the close of the paragraph.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to amend this paragraph by striking out the words "by boiling or other process" at the close of the paragraph, and inserting the same words before the words "advance the quality or value of molasses," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. There is one phrase here which I do not know that I understand, and I rise to inquire the meaning of it. The first sentence of this paragraph reads:

On the gross amount of the sales of sugar refiners, including all the products of their manufactories or refineries, a tax of two and one half of one per cent. ad valorem.

What is meant by "a tax of two and one half of one per cent. ad valorem?" How much is that upon a hundred dollars?

Mr. MORRILL. I think that is as plain as the English language can make it. It is one half as much as five per cent. This is the usual phrase employed in bills of this character.

Mr. STEVENS. It means two and a half per cent.?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I think if it means "two and a half per cent.," it would be better to have it say so; and I therefore move to amend this paragraph accordingly.

Mr. MORRILL. The gentleman will see that one half is the half of something. The half of what? The half of one. I believe this is strictly accurate as it is now.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I will withdraw my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On sugar candy and all confectionery made wholly or in part of sugar, valued at not exceeding twenty cents per pound, a tax of two cents per pound; exceeding twenty and not exceeding forty cents per pound, a tax of four cents per pound; when exceeding forty cents per pound, or sold by the box, package, or otherwise than by the pound, a tax of ten per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to insert after the words "not exceeding twenty cents per pound" and the words "not exceeding forty cents per pound" the words "including the tax."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I move to insert as a new paragraph the following:

On free-trip passes over railroads conveying passengers by steam, there shall be a ten-cent stamp affixed to each; on all six-months passes over such railroads there shall be affixed to each stamps amounting to $2 50; and on all annual free passes over such railroads there shall be affixed to each stamps amounting to five dollars.

I desire to state, in support of this proposition, that free passes are a luxury. [Laughter.] I suppose no one will contradict that. Moreover, it is a source of revenue which the Committee of Ways and Means have failed to reach. And let me say further, that gentlemen who suppose that this provision will not raise a considerable revenue are very much mistaken. I am credibly informed that the railroad passing through my State issued, during a single year, annual passes to the number of four thousand.

Mr. PLANTS. Have you one? [Laughter.]

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. No, sir; I have not. But if I had I should be willing to have it taxed. By this provision you would realize from that road alone a revenue to the Government of from twenty to twenty-five thousand dollars. I think that, as we are putting a tax upon every other article of use or comfort, this article ought also to be taxed. I hope the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] will not object to it.

Mr. MORRILL. I am not prepared to say whether I am opposed to it or not. But I should object to its being inserted here, because this portion of the bill does not relate at all to stamps. It will come in more appropriately when we reach the part of the bill relating to stamps.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I am very willing to withdraw my amendment now and offer it where the gentleman from Vermont has indicated. I am, however, very glad he sees the propriety of it.

The Clerk read as follows:

On chocolate and cocoa prepared, a tax of one and a half cent per pound.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

On gunpowder, and all explosive substances used for mining, blasting, artillery, or sporting purposes, when valued at thirty-eight cents per pound or less, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem; and when valued at above thirty-eight cents per pound, a tax of ten cents per pound.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend this paragraph by inserting the words "including the tax" after the words "when valued at thirty-eight cents per pound or less."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to insert the words "including the tax" after the words "valued at above thirty-eight cents per pound."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THAYER. I move to amend this paragraph by inserting the words "gun-cotton" after the word "gunpowder." There are two classes or descriptions of gunpowder embraced in this paragraph; the common or ordinary powders which are used for blasting purposes, subjected to a tax of five per cent. ad valorem; and the powders that are subjected to a tax of ten cents per pound, which embrace the fancy powders, such as sporting powder, powder for fire-works, &c.

Now, gun-cotton, I believe, is used almost exclusively for blasting purposes, and I think it should be placed in the division embracing the explosive substances, which are subjected to the lighter tax. It costs to produce it more than thirty-eight cents per pound; and unless my amendment is adopted it will fall under the second class, and be subjected to a tax of ten cents per pound. I hope there will be no objection to it.

Mr. GARFIELD. If gun-cotton costs more than thirty-eight cents per pound it will not be freed from the higher tax by inserting it where the gentleman proposes, for that portion of the paragraph relates to explosive substances that cost less than thirty-eight cents per pound including the tax.

Mr. MORRILL. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. THAYER] considers his proposition an important one, I think he better embrace it in an independent paragraph, to be inserted; and then move to amend this paragraph by inserting after the words "explosive substance" the words "not otherwise provided for."

Mr. GARFIELD. It is suggested that the gentleman can accomplish his purpose by moving to insert the words "and gun-cotton" before the words "a tax of five per cent. ad valorem."

Mr. THAYER. I will modify my amendment to that effect.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On varnish or japan, made wholly or in part of gum copal, or other gums or substances, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

On glue and gelatine of all descriptions, in the solid state, a tax of one cent per pound.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

On glue and cement, made wholly or in part of glue, to be sold in the liquid state, a tax of forty cents per gallon.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

On pins, solid head or other, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem.

No amendment was offered.

Mr. MYERS. I move to insert the following as an additional paragraph:

On plain photographs, ambrotypes, daguerreotypes, or other pictures by the action of light a tax of five per cent. ad valorem.

I presume there will be no objection to this amendment. I had understood that the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means [Mr. MORRILL] was to have reported it. I will wait to hear from him if there is any objection to it.

Mr. MORRILL. Most certainly there is.

Mr. MYERS. I would like to hear what the objections are. If the gentleman declines to give them, then I will state in a few words why I think this amendment should be adopted.

These photographs are really works of art and ought to be exempted from taxation, as other works of art are by a subsequent section of this bill, which also exempts books, maps, charts, productions of stereotypers, electrotypers, lithographers, engravers, &c.

The photographers, however, do not ask to be entirely exempted from taxation. But the tax of five per cent. ad valorem which I propose will be a smaller tax than the one now imposed. It is a reduction to which I think they are entitled.

In the next place, it is absolutely an advantage that we should do away with stamps upon photographs, both for the protection of the interests of the public and the interests of the photographers. Every gentleman in this House who has had photographs taken, or who has examined them, knows that the canceling of these stamps also tends to deface the photographs when they are packed together in a case or otherwise. Generally speaking, photographers do not affix these stamps and cancel them until the photographs ordered are called for, and in that case the purchaser, after he has taken them away, often finds that the front or face side of the picture is somewhat marred by the stamps attached to the reverse side of the picture laid against it or the mark of the ink with which it is canceled or defaced. But in other cases, where the pictures are put up beforehand, the injury falls upon the photographer, who loses all the pictures thus defaced.

Mr. Chairman, there is among those engaged in this business a very general demand for the adoption of such a provision as I now propose; and I had understood that the committee would favor it. There are, probably, twenty thousand photographers in the United States. They are men generally well known to the communities in which they do business, and honorable, and their returns of sales will be as reliable as those of any other citizens.

I understand that the chief objection made to this proposition is based on the fact that there is a small number of traveling photographers from whom the tax might not be collected if we should do away with the provision requiring stamps to be placed upon the pictures. But, sir, these traveling photographers are by the very provisions of this bill almost exempted from taxation. Frequently the photographs made by men of this class are of so small a size that stamps cannot be affixed to them, or they are furnished at so low a price as to be exempt under a subsequent provision of this bill. Besides that, sir, the number of this class is extremely small as compared with the number of those who do a regular business in some fixed place, and if they attempt to defraud—which they are no more likely to do than others—detection is tolerably sure to follow. The amendment which I propose contemplates nothing more than simple justice to the photographers, while it would also be of great advantage to the public.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Chairman, probably no tax provided for in this bill is more just than that which the gentleman from Pennsylvania proposes to remove; and there is no case in which there is greater reason for requiring the affixing of a stamp, if we mean to realize any revenue.

The gentleman speaks of the small number of the traveling photographers. Let me say to him that these are as fifty to one compared with those who have fixed places of business. And from these traveling photographers we should derive no revenue without such a provision as that which he proposes to strike out.

It is true that we do propose, in another part of this bill, to exempt from taxation "photographs or any other sun picture, being copies of engravings or works of art, when the same are sold by the producer at wholesale at a price not exceeding ten to fifteen cents each, or are used for the illustration of books, and on photographs so small in size that stamps cannot be affixed."

This provision is intended to refer to small photographs, some of which are not larger than the ordinary quarter of a dollar, and some even smaller. These we propose to exempt entirely. But as to those of larger size, which are taken upon paper—such photographs as the gentleman buys for himself and for his beautiful children—the gentleman of course is not unwilling to pay for them. There is a very large sale of these little souvenirs, and of course they yield a large revenue.

As to the suggestion that these works are injured by the cancellation of the stamps, I must say that that does not necessarily follow. When ordinary care is taken there is no difficulty in drying the ink without injuring the pictures. It is only when the stamps are canceled in a rough and hurried manner—as, for instance, by throwing sand upon the ink—that any injury can result. If time is allowed for the ink to dry or the usual soft paper is placed between the cards, no difficulty can arise.

Mr. MYERS. For the purpose of saying a few words in reply to the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL,] I move to amend my amendment by striking out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, there is one part of the gentleman's remarks which I can heartily accept. I will not deny the beauty of my children. But I must say that I do not like to have their photographs defaced by ink marks which have been transferred to the face of the picture, as is the case with a photograph which I have now before me. I object to having the pictures of my children—beautiful as the gentleman concedes they are—thus disfigured.

Now, sir, on page 133 of this bill, just preceding the paragraph which my friend has quoted, is another paragraph exempting from taxation "paintings and statues and groups of or of statuary produced by artists as works of art." These photographs are essentially works of art, too; and were it not that the photographers are willing to pay a proper tax to the Government, I would ask that they should be exempted altogether. But they have no such request to make. They only ask a modification of the law, by which they shall be relieved from that which is an inconvenience, vexation, and loss to themselves and the public who patronize them.

Let me give another reason why the amendment should pass and the taxation on this class of artists should be reduced somewhat, as is proposed. Within the last four or five years alcohol, sulphuric ether, acetic acid, and the other chemical materials used in the manufacture of photographs have advanced in price more than two hundred and fifty per cent. But the principal question is, shall we collect tax from these men in the objectionable shape of stamps, or impose an ad valorem duty upon the amount of their sales, trusting them to make proper returns, as we trust other classes of manufacturers?

By imposing the ad valorem duty and dispensing with the provision requiring stamps to be affixed to these photographs we greatly accommodate the public at large, while we save the photographers from a large annual loss; for in a package of pictures the face of one is placed against the back of the other, and thus the ink on the stamp as well as the stamp itself, as I have said, often defaces the picture. By an ad valorem tax the Government would realize its proper amount of revenue; and certainly five per cent. ad valorem is a sufficient tax upon these pictures.

Mr. MORRILL. I have merely to say that these photographs are articles of luxury, and those who purchase them can afford to pay the tax.

Mr. MYERS. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

On agreeing to the amendment, there were—ayes twenty, noes not counted.

Mr. MYERS. I withdraw the amendment for the present.

Mr. THAYER. I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that in the amendment which was adopted in regard to gun-cotton the object which the committee contemplated was not accomplished, and it is necessary to make an addition. I trust that by unanimous consent the committee will revert to that paragraph, in order that the necessary amendment may be made.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any objection?

There was no objection; and Mr. THAYER moved to amend by inserting, before line nineteen hundred and sixty-four, the following words: "on gun-cotton a tax of five per cent. ad valorem."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THAYER. A slight additional amendment is necessary, and I move to amend by inserting after the word "purposes," in line nineteen hundred and sixty-five, the words "not otherwise provided for."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend by striking out in line nineteen hundred and seventy-five the words "to be."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On screws, commonly called wood screws, a tax of ten per cent. ad valorem.

On clocks and time-pieces, and on clock movements, when sold without being cased, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem.

On all soaps valued at above three cents per pound, not perfumed, and on salt-water soap, made of coconut oil, a tax of five mills per pound.

On all other perfumed soaps a tax of three cents per pound.

On all uncomounded chemical productions, not otherwise provided for, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem.

On essential oils of all descriptions a tax of five per cent. ad valorem.

On all furniture, or other articles made of wood, sold in the rough or unfinished, not otherwise provided for, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem. Provided, That all furniture, or other articles made of wood, previously assessed, and a tax paid thereon, shall be assessed a tax of five per cent. ad valorem upon the increased value only thereof when sold in a finished condition.

On salt, a tax of three cents per one hundred pounds.

Mr. PLANTS. I move to amend by striking out the following: "on salt a tax of three cents per one hundred pounds."

Mr. Chairman, I make this motion because, as I believe, such a tax as this ought not to be imposed upon the article of salt. It is an article of prime necessity. I represent a district of Ohio in which pretty much all the salt made in that State is manufactured. I am familiar with the condition of that branch of industry there. I know that during the last year a furnace costing some thirty thousand dollars, and manufacturing twenty thousand bushels of salt per month, paid an internal revenue tax of $700 per month—about eight thousand dollars a year; while at the same time the manufacture of the salt, conducted in the most economical manner, cost more than the market value of the article. The consequence was that a furnace of that kind, running through the year, paid to the Government about eight thousand dollars internal revenue tax, and found itself at the end of the year so much in debt that it was obliged to suspend; so that the Government gets nothing for the present.

Mr. Chairman, I think that an article of such prime necessity ought to be relieved from tax so far as possible. As matters have stood heretofore, the manufacture of salt could not be carried on with any profit, and it has in many cases been productive of loss to the manufacturer.

Mr. HENDERSON. I move, pro forma, to strike out the words "three cents."

I am glad that the views of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PLANTS] and my own meet on this subject. I intended to make the same motion that he did. I have no doubt this amendment would reduce the revenue to a considerable extent, but I think that might be very easily made up by imposing an additional tax on luxuries, such as liquors and tobacco.

I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend by inserting "one half," after the words "three cents," merely for the purpose of saying that the present tax on salt is seven cents and two mills per hundred pounds, and the Committee of Ways and Means thought it was an interest that ought to be relieved, and therefore they proposed to reduce it to three cents. And I presume, with the contemplated action on the tariff bill, they will also be able to give some further relief to this interest. I think it should not be entirely exempt from tax, and that it is advisable for the friends of the salt interest to retain the rate proposed.

I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

The question recurred on the motion of Mr. PLANTS to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. PLANTS. I will modify my motion by moving to insert "one" instead of "three." If it is not thought advisable to strike out the whole section I think this reduction would be a very material relief to the manufacturers of salt. It looks like a small item to be sure—three cents on a hundred pounds—but when you come to manufacture large quantities experience proves that the more salt is made the more unfortunate the owners of the work are. I admit that there is some relief proposed in the exemption of some articles that go into the manufacture of salt. Under the old law we paid taxes on coal, on barrels, and on almost every item that went into the manufacture, and then seven cents and a fraction on every hundred pounds of salt manufactured, and then—no, we were fortunately relieved from paying any income tax, because we had none to be taxed upon after all that.

Mr. MORRILL. We have relieved this interest as far as we thought it prudent to do. The enumeration of what we have done ought to satisfy the gentleman that we have done all that can reasonably be required. We have taken off more than one half the tax and exempted coal and casks and barrels entirely.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I move to insert "two" in place of "one." I am in favor of striking out this tax. The income I am informed is very small; I do not know exactly how much.

Mr. ALLISON. Three hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. For last year I suppose. The principle upon which I oppose this tax is this, that it operates unequally. The largest portion of salt is consumed in the packing of beef and pork, and some sections, of course, consume much more than others. In the manufacturing districts at the East comparatively little is consumed. The burden of the tax will fall upon the agricultural interest of the country almost entirely.

I withdraw the amendment.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. PLANTS to strike out "three" and insert "one," it was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On reapers, mowers, threshing-machines, scales, brooms, and wooden-ware, a tax of three per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I move to amend by adding the following:

Provided, That when any parts of reapers, mowers, threshing-machines, or scales shall be once assessed and a tax previously paid thereon, the amount so paid shall be deducted from the tax on the finished article.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask the gentleman to withdraw that for the present and let me offer an amendment to strike out "reapers, mowers, and threshing-machines." If that is carried he can then add his proviso so far as relates to scales.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I withdraw it.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I now move to strike out "reapers, mowers, and threshing-machines."

I see that the object which I aimed at is partially accomplished by the provision on page 135, where the committee place in the free list "plows, cultivators, harrows, straw and hay cutters, planters, seed-drills, horse-rakes, and winnowing-mills." Now, I can see no greater propriety in exempting these articles from the tax imposed by the bill than those which I propose to strike out in the paragraph under consideration. It is simply a relief to the great food-producing portion of our population, the agriculturists, and that is the sole object I have in offering the amendment. There is no class of our people so poorly remunerated for the amount of capital and labor invested in their pursuit as the agriculturists; and it is for the purpose of granting them the partial relief that may be derived from the removal of this tax that I offer this amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Chairman, the list of articles used by agriculturists is very extensive; and it is conceded that there are many of those articles that might with some propriety be exempted from taxation. But the Committee of Ways and Means were compelled to select from that list. We found that the wants of the Treasury would not permit us to exempt all. If we were to exempt all agricultural machines and tools, hoes, shovels, scythes, axes, sickles—I might go on with a never-ending list—we should relieve the Treasury from an inconceivable amount of revenue. The tax we now propose upon these articles is only three per cent. ad valorem, and they are articles made by men who own patents, and can get whatever price they please for them. The consumer will gain very little by any reduction we may make. The tax that we shall get will hardly make any change in prices; for they are articles which afford large profits and command great prices, and these prices are already fixed. I trust, therefore, that this committee will coincide with the Committee of Ways and Means, and refuse to strike out the tax on these articles.

Mr. PAINE. I rise to move an amendment; but before doing so I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means what will be the tax upon reapers, mowers, &c., if we strike out this paragraph.

Mr. MORRILL. Five per cent.

Mr. PAINE. I move, then, so to amend the bill as to transfer these three articles, reapers, mowers, and threshing-machines, to the free list, among plows, cultivators, &c.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I will state that my intention is to move to insert these articles in the free list when we reach it; but we must strike them out here.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order to take up the free list at this time; the committee has not yet reached that paragraph.

Mr. PAINE. I am very anxious to vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa, provided these three articles can be exempted from taxation; but I am very unwilling to vote for it if it will impose upon them a tax of five per cent. I move, therefore, to add at the end of line two thousand and three the words "reapers, mowers, and threshing-machines shall be exempt from taxation." The clause will then read:

On scales, brooms, and wooden-ware a tax of three per cent. ad valorem; reapers, mowers, and threshing-machines shall be exempt from taxation.

Mr. HART. I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] will be adopted by the committee. I see no propriety in taxing these three items of manufacture while others are exempted. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] stated that the Committee of Ways and Means had selected a few articles from the large list of agricultural implements, but that they found it impossible to include a large number of items on that list, such as shovels, axes, &c., and that they have selected only a few. It will be observed that in that selection they have taken "machines" not "tools."

Mr. MORRILL. I beg the gentleman's pardon. If he will look at page 135 he will find that they exempt "plows," "cultivators," "harrows," &c.

Mr. HART. A plow is not a farming "tool." Now, in reply to a remark made by the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL], I happen to know that so far as threshing-machines are concerned the patents are about exhausted, and that there is not a threshing-machine patent in the country that is worth anything. As to the immense profits which are alleged to have been derived from these manufactures, in my district these machines were manufactured very extensively, and I know that during the past four or five years these interests have rather suffered than otherwise. I certainly think that these three items should be stricken out in justice to the manufacturers of these peculiar machines. They are about the only machines used for agricultural purposes which are not included in the free list.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I move to amend this paragraph further by inserting the words "plantation hoes." I do that because a plantation hoe is a peculiar instrument. The manufacturer of the ordinary hoe, as I understand, requires but little or no protection in this country. But the plantation hoe is a peculiar instrument manufactured for the South. It is very heavy, and in consequence of there being no machine labor upon it, it is impossible for the manufacturer in this country to compete with the manufacturer of England in this respect, if he is required to pay a tax upon it.

Mr. MORRILL. I must oppose the amendment of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. GRISWOLD.] I find that there are various gentlemen charged with amendments for exemptions which they will offer if this amendment carries, and there will be no end to them. The Committee of Ways and Means have recommended to wholly exempt from tax plows, cultivators, drills, &c., and the reduction of the tax on these patented articles from six per cent. to three per cent., or one half.

Now, I ask gentlemen if they cannot afford to wait another year before they appeal to us for any further exemptions. My friend behind me [Mr. STEVENS] is ready to ask that brooms and wooden-ware be exempted from taxation. Another member will ask for the exemption of shovels, and another for the exemption of edge tools. I trust the Committee of the Whole will think that we have gone as far in the exemption of articles from taxation as it is advisable to go at this time.

The amendment of Mr. GRISWOLD was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon the amendment of Mr. PAINE.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PAINE] by inserting the words "horse-powers, corn-shellers, and winnowing-machines."

Mr. ECKLEY. That is already provided for.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. Then I withdraw my amendment.

The amendment of Mr. PAINE was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon the amendment of Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, to strike out the words "reapers, mowers, threshing-machines."

Mr. STEVENS. I think that we better strike out "brooms and wooden-ware," and I move to amend the amendment in that way. They are so small articles that I hardly think a tax should be imposed upon them.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] is not germane to the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WILSON.]

Mr. STEVENS. Then I move to amend the amendment by striking out all but the letter "s." [Laughter.] And I will confine myself to my amendment by saying that while all but the letter "s" should be left in, I think that "brooms and wooden-ware" should be stricken out. Now, if the gentlemen of the Committee of Ways and Means had come to the help of the woman who scrubs with her broom and the woman who cooks in her wooden-ware, it seems to me there would be some propriety in their action.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Our women out West do not do that.

Mr. STEVENS. What! do you not scrub any out West? [Laughter.] You ought to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. We do not cook in wooden-ware. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEVENS. They cook in wooden-ware with us; they bake and stew, especially stew. [Renewed laughter.]

Now, I do not know anything that can bear taxation better than reapers and mowers and threshing-machines. The farmer is pretty well relieved from taxation, as he ought to be. And there is no class of people who get off so well as the farmer. I believe the farmers in my county are taxed as high as any in the United States. The most of them have machines of this kind, that can do the work of eight or ten men each, and thus they can afford to pay the tax imposed here.

Now, I should be glad if we could get along without any tax at all. And when our wise Secretary of the Treasury shall have consolidated his bonds so as to have them five per cent. all around, and pay three per cent. in negotiating them, and make them payable in gold instead of currency—make them about ten per cent. instead of what they are now; when he does all that, we may be able to do without taxes; but we cannot now. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment, and let the letter "s" come out with the rest. [Laughter.]

The question recurred upon the amendment of Mr. WILSON, of Iowa.

Mr. SLOAN. I move to amend the amendment by adding to it a motion to insert the words "pig iron," in place of what the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] proposes to strike out, so that our revenues shall not suffer in consequence of striking out those articles. I think pig iron with this tax will produce a much larger revenue than the articles my friend from Iowa proposes to strike out. And I think it can much better bear taxation than the agricultural interests of the country. I am informed that the iron interest is in a far more prosperous condition now than agricultural interests generally.

The question was taken upon Mr. SLOAN's amendment to the amendment, and it was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon the amendment of Mr. WILSON, of Iowa; and being taken, upon a division, there were—ayes 37, noes 29; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, and Mr. LE BLOND, were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 58, noes 35.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I was opposed to striking out the articles which have been stricken from the bill. But, most assuredly, since they are stricken out, there should, in justice, be at least an exemption in reference to scales. I therefore move to amend by adding, at the end of the paragraph, the following:

Provided, That when any parts of scales shall have been once assessed, and a tax previously paid thereon, the amount so paid shall be deducted from the tax on the finished article.

Mr. Chairman, I will state my reason for offering this amendment. In the manufacture of scales various articles, such as rods, screws, and bolts, are used. These, when constructed, are taxed separately. Under the existing law they are taxed $3 60 per ton. The scales when completed, with these articles as constituent parts, are taxed six per cent. upon the gross value. In this way a double taxation is imposed on the manufacturer. It is certainly unjust that articles should thus be taxed twice. If the different articles which enter into the structure of scales are subjected to a separate tax, they should not be included in the assessment when estimating the gross value of the finished article. Duplicate taxation is always unjust.

Mr. GARFIELD. I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. WOODBRIDGE.]

The taxation upon the articles mentioned in this paragraph has been reduced from six to three per cent. for the very purpose of favoring them, and for the further purpose of avoiding the complex system which we should have if the small parts which enter into the structure of scales, threshing-machines, mowers and reapers, were exempted from their proportionate share of the tax upon the gross value of the finished articles. In collecting the tax upon the completed articles, it would be very difficult to compute and allow the deduction for every little screw, or bolt, or rod, on which a separate tax might previously have been paid. Such a system as that would be extremely vexatious; and for the purpose of avoiding such a system, the committee concluded to fix the tax on the finished article at three per cent. ad valorem, instead of five per cent., which is the rate imposed on engines and other large machinery where the amount of tax previously paid on particular parts can readily be calculated. The gentleman's amendment would involve us in the very difficulties which the committee sought to avoid.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. For the purpose of replying to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am quite surprised at the remarks which the gentleman has just made. I think that the idea advanced by him is a new offspring of his brain; for when I spoke to him in reference to this matter two or three days ago, he conceded that there was eminent propriety in such an amendment as I have proposed. But it seems the gentleman has just discovered that a desire to avoid such a system as that proposed in the amendment was the reason which induced the Committee of Ways and Means to propose a reduction of the tax on scales from six to three per cent. ad valorem.

Now, sir, my impression is that the reason actuating the committee in making this reduction was the propriety and justice of a policy of reduced taxation upon articles in general use and necessary for the increasing business of the country, and that they found that such a reduction could be made without interfering with the collection of the needful amount of revenue for the support of the Government.

It appears to me that the amendment which I propose will not involve us in any such difficulties as the gentleman from Ohio apprehends. The various articles used in the manufacture of scales are ordinarily made and finished in the shop where the scales are constructed. They are subject to a separate taxation; and then when put into the scales are taxed over again at the rate of three per cent. on their value. My amendment will not increase in the least degree the difficulty of collecting the tax.

The trouble will be just as great whether the amendment is passed or not. These various articles are manufactured in large quantities, and are used as scales are constructed, and there can be no difficulty in designating how much of this or that article is used in the construction of one or fifty or five hundred scales. So that the argument of the gentleman amounts to nothing.

It is always best to do right when we know what right is. A tax is always a blow and a burden. It is necessary to be imposed for the support of the Government, and is a just burden upon the subject in consideration of the protection which Government affords; but certainly it is unwise and unjust to duplicate taxation. If it were necessary to impose a tax of six per cent. on scales I am the last man that would object to it. I am for taxing all articles sufficiently and with discrimination and discretion to raise the revenue that Government requires; but in imposing the tax I would do justice to all and injustice to none as far as possible. And I assert it as a principle that there should not be duplicate taxation where it can possibly be avoided.

Now, I know that the manufacture of scales in this country has not been a remunerative business. There is one firm in my State which has existed thirty years or more, and has amassed a fortune. There are other scales coming into use made by other manufacturers. There is one new manufactory within my own district, where I know there has been no money made as yet; no dividend has been paid upon the stock. I also happen to know that I have had some stock of that kind myself which turned out as my investments usually do—not a dollar of interest and a loss of the principal. I hope this amendment will be adopted, because it is right. It is not class legislation, nor legislation for the benefit of individuals, but the assertion of a principle.

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not wish to retail any private conversation between the gentleman and myself, or any of our private opinions that we have exchanged outside.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. If the gentleman will allow me, I beg pardon for any reference to the gentleman's views. I would not have called upon him if I had not such great consideration for his integrity and good judgment. I supposed the gentleman was sincere in his approval of the amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. I only want to say that the gentleman will recollect that a short time afterward I told him plainly, in his seat, that I thought the amendment was not a proper one.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. According to my recollection that was since I introduced the amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. It was an amendment in regard to engines to which he referred. I thought it was a very proper one, and I admitted at the time that the principle ought to be ingrafted wherever it could be, namely, that we shall not duplicate taxes by taxing parts of a machine and afterward taxing the machine when it is put together. But let it be understood that when we take away the duplicate tax we leave the tax ad valorem. In this case the ad valorem tax is reduced to three per cent. And another thing is done. The transitory tax which is added to these machines in another part of the bill is taken away, which leaves this interest still more free.

As I said before, it would be a very vexatious and troublesome tax to collect, and I trust the gentleman's amendment will not prevail.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

The question being taken on the original amendment offered by Mr. WOODBRIDGE, it was not agreed to.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. I move to strike out the word "scales" and to insert at the end of the paragraph the following: "scales shall be put upon the free list."

Mr. Chairman, we had a good deal of talk here in regard to farming. It seems to be an extremely popular occupation.

Mr. SPALDING. If the gentleman will allow me, I wish to move to strike out the whole paragraph.

Mr. WOODBRIDGE. No, sir. The gentleman can make that motion afterward. It is very popular and very acceptable, doubtless, to agriculturists for gentlemen to get up here and say that we ought not to oppress that honorable class of men who do so much for the welfare of their country. Well, sir, I am an agriculturist myself, and most of my constituents are agriculturists. They constitute at least one of the most independent, intelligent, and patriotic class of men that the sun ever shone upon; but, sir, I am informed that farmers, as a class, pay less taxes, in proportion to their means, than men engaged in any other occupation. You get but little income from the farmers who own high-priced sheep, or from those who cultivate thousands of acres of our western prairies. Honorable and high-minded as they are, they are not the men who yield the money for the support of the Government. It is the manufacturers who return the income that rolls the wheels of Government, and yet gentlemen say we must strike the tax off this and the other article because the farmers use them; and our legislators do not always seem to be independent enough to act in accordance with their own judgments, but rather pander to what they suppose to be the popular sentiment, so as to have the farmers say "This is the man who looks after our interest; we must return him to Congress."

Sir, I will never lend myself to a cry of that kind, whether I come to Congress or stay at home; I respect the farmer, because he is manly, and is at the very foundation of society. His is the earliest and noblest occupation known to civilized life. But, at the same time, I do not believe in giving up principles of right merely for the purpose of coaxing and flattering those who have so much to do in electing members of Congress.

Now scales are used, it is true, on farms, and every farmer wants one to weigh his beef, his hay, his wool; but it is not merely because the farmer wants them that I propose the amendment.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MORRILL. As this paragraph has been fully and eloquently discussed, I hope the question will be taken.

The amendment of Mr. WOODBRIDGE was not agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts. As the committee have stricken out so much of this paragraph, I suppose there will be no objection to striking out "brooms and wooden-ware," and I make that motion. The great expense of the articles of wooden-ware, tubs, and pails, consists of iron hoops and wires and various articles which pay a tax of five per cent.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope that will not be stricken out.

The question was taken upon the amendment; and on a division, there were—ayes 35, noes 33; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, and Mr. Ross, were appointed.

Mr. MORRILL. As there is evidently not a quorum present, I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DAWES reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being bill of the House No. 513, to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. WILLIAM J. McDONALD, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bills of the following titles, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House:

A bill (H. R. No. 37) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the year ending the 30th of June, 1867;

A bill (H. R. No. 216) for the relief of Cordelia Murray;

A bill (H. R. No. 261) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1867, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 459) granting a pension to Anna E. Ward;

A bill (H. R. No. 462) granting a pension to Mrs. Sally Andrews; and

A bill (H. R. No. 493) granting a pension to Mrs. Joanna Winans.

The message further announced that the Senate had receded from their amendment to the bill (H. R. No. 563) to regulate the time and fix the place for holding the circuit court of the United States in the district of Virginia, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the Senate had postponed indefinitely the bill of the House (No. 408) for the relief of James Foster.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following bills of the House:

An act (H. R. No. 265) granting a pension to John Hoffman, of Madison county, in the State of New York;

An act (H. R. No. 434) for the relief of Isabella Strubing;

An act (H. R. No. 445) for the relief of the legal representatives of Betsey Nash;

An act (H. R. No. 460) granting a pension to Spencer Kellogg; and

An act (H. R. No. 494) for the relief of Martha J. Willey.

Also, that the Senate had passed the following bill and joint resolution, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (S. No. 123) granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Central Pacific railroad, in California, to Portland, in Oregon; and

A joint resolution (S. No. 97) to authorize certain medals to be distributed to veteran soldiers free of postage.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATIONS.

On motion of Mr. STEVENS, the amendments of the Senate to House bill No. 37, making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the year ending the 30th of June, 1867, were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATIONS.

On motion of Mr. STEVENS, the amendments of the Senate to House bill No. 261, making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1867, and for other purposes, were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill No. 318, to authorize the appointment of an additional Assistant Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I object.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. Then I move to proceed to business on the Speaker's table.

The question was taken, and upon a division there were—ayes 31, noes 31; no quorum voting.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I move the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at twenty-five minutes to five o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule and referred to the appropriate committees: By Mr. BROMWELL: The petition of Charles H. Wood, and others, citizens of Iroquois county, Illinois, praying for a Bureau of Insurance.

Also, the petition of citizens of Macon county, Illinois, praying for a mail route from Decatur, Illinois, to Newburg, Illinois.

By Mr. BLOW: The memorial of the Union Merchants' Exchange of St. Louis in regard to the Senate bill providing for draw-bridges on the Mississippi river.

By Mr. DODGE: The petition of Duncan, Sherman & Co., Brown, Brothers & Co., and others, of the city of New York, against a tax of five per cent. a pound on cotton.

By Mr. HUBBARD, of Connecticut: The petition of James C. Cooke for relief as to time of filing application for renewal of patent.

By Mr. MARVIN: The petition of 123 citizens of Saratoga county, New York, asking an increase and an ad valorem duty on foreign wool.

By Mr. MORRIS: The petition of F. D. Mason, Esq., and others, of Geneva, New York, asking for a law in relation to inter-State insurance companies.

Also, the petition of Joseph Hershey, jr., of Goshen, New York, and others, asking for an increased duty on imported wool.

By Mr. O'NEILL: The memorial of the officers of the Entomological Society of Philadelphia, asking for an appropriation of $3,000 per annum to be expended in the publication and circulation of the monthly periodical called the Practical Entomologist.

By Mr. ROLLINS: The petition of A. J. Prescott, and 19 others, citizens of Concord, New Hampshire, James Dean, and 22 others, citizens of Lowell, Massachusetts, A. G. Duffer, and 32 others, citizens of Providence, Rhode Island, severally praying for the passage of an act regulating inter-State insurances of all kinds.

By Mr. SITGREAVES: The petition of glass manufacturers, praying a reduction of duties on glass-ware.

By Mr. STILLWELL: The petition of Governor Morton, and others, trustees of the Indiana Agricultural College, praying for an amendment to the act granting lands to the States to institute agricultural colleges.

By Mr. VAN AERNAM: Resolutions of the Legislature of New York, in favor of equalizing bounties to soldiers and sailors who enlisted in 1861 and 1862.

By Mr. WARD: The petition of 125 citizens of Bath, New York, in favor of increasing the tariff on wool.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, May 19, 1866.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOYNTON.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

CLERKS IN THE DEPARTMENTS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the House of Representatives:

In further response to the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 7th instant, calling for information in regard to clerks employed in the various Executive Departments, I transmit herewith reports from the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Postmaster General.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 17, 1866.

The message, with the accompanying documents, was laid upon the table and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I desire to ask leave of absence for myself on account of sickness in my family. I cannot tell how long I may be absent.

No objection was made, and indefinite leave of absence was granted.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McDONALD, its Chief Clerk, informed the House that the Senate had passed, with amendments, bills of the following titles, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House:

An act (H. R. No. 345) for the relief of Christina Elder; and

An act (H. R. No. 363) supplementary to the several acts relating to pensions.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, the following bill:

An act (H. R. No. 386) for the relief of Francis A. Gibbons.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed the following bills, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (S. No. 251) for the relief of Commodore Thomas Turner;

An act (S. No. 261) for the relief of Mrs. Anna G. Gaston;

An act (S. No. 275) for the relief of Cornelius Crowley;

An act (S. No. 291) granting a pension to Mrs. Rebecca Irwin;

An act (S. No. 298) granting a pension to Jane D. Brent;

An act (S. No. 299) granting a pension to Jane E. Miles;

An act (S. No. 309) to authorize Samuel Stevens, a Stockbridge Indian, to enter and purchase a certain tract of land in the Stockbridge reservation of Wisconsin;

An act (S. No. 314) for the relief of Sarah J. Purcell;

An act (S. No. 321) for the relief of Maria Syphax;

An act (S. No. 326) granting a pension to Mrs. Harriet B. Crocker;

An act (S. No. 327) granting a pension to Mrs. Katharine F. Winslow; and

An act (S. No. 329) for the relief of Mrs. Margaret Kaetzel.

PROTECTION OF THE FRONTIER.

Mr. ROSS. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill to provide for the better protection of the frontiers of the United States and Territories thereof was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The motion will be entered on the Journal.

EQUALIZING BOUNTIES.

Mr. BLAINE. I wish to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which House bill No. 602, to equalize the bounties of soldiers, sailors, and marines who served in the late war for the Union, was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The motion will be entered on the Journal.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

The SPEAKER. By order of the House, no business is in order to-day but debate upon the President's annual message as in Committee of the Whole, upon which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ASHLEY] is entitled to the floor.

RECONSTRUCTION.

Mr. ASHLEY, of Ohio. I am not prepared to go on to-day, and therefore I will yield the floor to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. MORRIS.]

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Speaker, if ambition begat treason; and if treason begat rebellion; and if the rebellion begat reconstruction; and if reconstruction begat the amendment of the Constitution of the United States and the measures which accompany it, now pending in Congress, it may well be that the joint committee on reconstruction is only one of the several instruments rendered essential in perfecting, rather than the originator of, this series of acts in the great drama of events made necessary to save the nation and to restore it to homogeneous concord. It may well be, also, that these schemes are severally indispensable to check the growth of the poisonous shoots which are likely to spring from the remaining roots of the so recently felled tree of treasonable planting. Be this as it may, they are fitting themes for the historian, and perhaps for the legislator; but in what I have to say I shall allude to these subjects and the incidents connected with them so far only as in my judgment they may be pertinent in establishing the following affirmations:

1. The incidents connected with the revolt of the southern States have, in no respect, abridged the powers or the jurisdiction of the Government of the United States.

2. These incidents have changed the relations of these States toward the General Government and they have affected some of their rights.

3. The relations thus changed and the rights thus affected can be restored to these States only by the legislative branch of the Government.

4. These relations and these rights should be restored as speedily as the interests of all the parties concerned will permit.

What are the facts?

Eleven of the United States passed ordinances of secession. They insisted that the mere act of their passage absolved them from all allegiance to and effectually severed their relations with the General Government, and that thereby they were rendered sovereign and independent. This pretense was denied by the General Government, and their ordinances were pronounced utterly void. An appeal to arms was taken, a remorseless war was waged, in the prosecution of which these States were overpowered and disarmed. They now propose to resume their former position under the Government they sought to destroy. Hence the question which now divides Congress and the country. In the discussion of this, I inquire:

1. Did the passage of those ordinances, or the waging of this war, abridge any of the powers or the jurisdiction of the national Government over these States?

I aver that at the passage of these acts of secession and at the commencement of this war for all national purposes the General Government had unquestioned jurisdiction over the entire territory and the inhabitants of these States severally. This jurisdiction grew out of a covenant, by virtue of which the covenantees instituted the Government of the United States. Under this covenant were vested rights of nearly a century's growth; by its very terms was plighted faith as sacred as oaths can make; here also were obligations as imperative as is Christian duty. Nothing less, therefore, than mutual consent or successful revolution could annul its binding force. Neither of these is pretended. Necessarily, therefore, the powers and the jurisdiction of the General Government have been, and now are, as absolute and unbroken over every foot of the soil and over every person within the boundaries of these States as it was at the hour it was first established by our fathers.

I here leave my first and preliminary to my second affirmation I inquire—

What is a State?

In the language of Bouvier, it is "a body of persons united in one community for the defense of their rights." Or, as defined by Halleck, it is "a body-politic, a society of men united together for mutual advantage and safety."

These authors define sovereign and independent States. We have none such in our Government.

The original thirteen colonies, after severing their relations with Great Britain, entered into a "perpetual Union." This Union not meeting their expectations, afterward, and for the purpose of "a more perfect Union," the people of these colonies, then States, framed and adopted the Constitution of the United States. Thus the people, of their own volition, carved out of the then existing States and created the General Government. By this voluntary act each State passed under and became a subordinate part of a new Government, established expressly for national purposes. This new Government being clothed with certain definite powers, which were taken from, thereby of necessity lessened the powers of, these States. For national purposes this new Government is sovereign; for municipal purposes, the States are each sovereign; in all else they are subjects. Aggregated, the national and the State Governments make a unit. It requires this aggregation to constitute complete sovereignty. They are a compound, in which the original and the new elements are clearly discernible, and yet, as chemical affinities, they intermix, neutralize, and unite.

"As the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that one body being many, are one body," so it is in our Government. It must be obvious, then, that whosoever attributes absolute sovereignty to any State, or who in his reasoning applies the definitions I have cited, without restriction, when speaking of these States, will mislead himself as well as those who listen to him. But as far as the municipal organism of our States is involved, these definitions do apply; but in their relations to the General Government it must be evident they do not. Failing to discriminate in this, has led to much confusion. Some have supposed that the mere derangement of the organic relations of a State with the General Government destroyed it. Whereas, in truth, these relations may not only be deranged, but even suspended, and yet the State remain as perfect and as actually in the Union as if they were wholly undisturbed. But of this hereafter.

2. Have the incidents of the revolt of the southern States or has the consequent war changed the relations of these States toward the General Government or affected any of their rights?

A State sustains the same relation to the entire members of the Union that one man does to the aggregate individuals of a State. One is a corporate the other a natural being. Either of them, entirely alone, were independent. Connected with others, neither can claim this prerogative. As individuals, they each have duties to perform, obligations they cannot ignore, and rights which they may forfeit.

The man Adam had a right to the tree of life. The man Payne had a right to natural life. The State of South Carolina had a right to be represented in the councils of the nation. By disobedience these rights were severally forfeited. Will any one question this as to the individuals I have named? Why, then, is it not true of South Carolina? No loyal man will pretend that this State, during her armed hostilities against the General Government, was entitled to a place in its councils. Why? Clearly by reason of her armed hostility. But this armed hostility grew out of an enmity which antedated it. These overt acts were an incident, not the cause, of this enmity. It is true these hostilities are at an end; but did they cease from choice or from necessity? If from necessity, it may well be that the enmity which prompted these acts still remains; in which event only her weapons, her mode of warfare, may be changed and not her animus. My point is, this hostility was only an outgrowth of a settled enmity. If, then, this enmity remains, what hinders a similar outbreak at any moment? May a State violate its compact with the General Government and again resume it at will? South Carolina, of her own act, withdrew her Representatives from this Hall and then made war upon the Government. May this Government exercise the privilege accorded the humblest citizen, of holding an enemy in duress till he make some reparation or give sureties to keep the peace? Self-preservation, if not self-respect, requires this much. No prudent family permits its enemies to share in its councils or in its confidence. No properly organized Government intrusts its administration to those who purpose its overthrow. The alarming feature in our national affairs at this time, in my judgment, is that any one dare entertain the proposition to admit traitors upon this floor. The man who stops to reason when tempted to sin is half consenting. The legislator who permits himself to negotiate with crime stands on quicksand—a step may engulf him. But I am anticipating; I therefore resume my subject.

Take either of the authorities I have cited defining a State, and whether we contemplate South Carolina before, during, or since her revolt, as far as municipal organism is concerned, she comes within its spirit and letter. There never has been a time when she was not "a body of persons united together in one community for the defense of their rights." It has ever been, and now is, "a body-politic, or a society of men united together for mutual advantage and safety."

Territory is essential; this remains as it ever has. Persons are requisite; these exist now as they have at all times. Their union is an ingredient; that these persons are united for a common intent is painfully apparent. Why, then, is not South Carolina a State? She is. She lacks nothing as far as municipal organism is involved; but as far as her relations with the national Government are concerned she lacks much. She is without a connecting link. This has been severed. She and her joint wrongdoers are off the track and badly damaged; they need repairs, readjusting upon the rail, and connecting links. They belong to the corporation; they are subject to its control, and they may be coupled on immediately or they may be held for further repairs. These repairs should be thorough. Defects which are known to have produced their present wreck should be remedied, and great precaution should be taken for future safety and security. A mistake in this may imperil all. I go further, and as an illustration aver: Adam and Payne were as really men, but bad ones, after as they were before their disobedience. So South Carolina was as actually a State, but a rebellious one, after as she was before her rebellious acts. Adam still owed fealty and was as subject to the laws of his Maker as though he had never transgressed. Similar is the position of South Carolina.

Sir, can a man or the inhabitants of any territory be within the jurisdiction of a Government and subject to its laws and yet be alien? I can see how the exercise of this jurisdiction may be interrupted and the execution of these laws suspended, but I cannot as readily perceive how a State can be "blotted out" and yet all that goes to make it up remain.

I now adopt and repeat the interrogatory of my colleague from New York, [Mr. RAYMOND,] and inquire:

"If they [the rebel States] were out of the Union, when did they become so? They were once States in the Union. If they were out of the Union, it was at some specific time and by some specific act."

This is a pertinent and a practical question. The honorable gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SHELLABARGER,] whose logic and elquence are irresistible, repeated the same interrogatory, and in reply to it, says:

"In respectfully answering him, [Mr. RAYMOND,] let me ask and answer some questions of similar legal aspect. What in civil war is the specific act and time which changes in law an 'insurrectionary party' into a 'belligerent'? I answer in the language of the Supreme Court, when in fact 'the regular course of justice is interrupted by revolt, rebellion, or insurrection, so that the courts of justice cannot be kept open.'"

I do not perceive the force of this answer, for surely the honorable gentleman does not mean to affirm that the condition of things he describes carries a State out of the Union. If it does, secession is easy indeed. Insecurity to this alarming extent would paralyze every arm, destroy all confidence, and render Governments little else than nurseries of anarchy and bloodshed.

The state of things so graphically described by the honorable gentleman should, as it did, constrain the Executive of the nation to exercise the duty devolving upon him under article four, section four, of the Constitution—this is all. Under this provision of the Constitution the President of the United States did invoke the military arm of the nation. This arm, as wielded by General Grant and his brave comrades, suppressed the "revolt," dispersed the "insurgents," and these "insurrectionary States," with suspended rights, still remain in the Union subject to its control and amenable to its laws.

The honorable gentleman, in further reply to my colleague, says:

"I answer him [Mr. RAYMOND] that it was that specific act which turned her citizens into traitors, took from her the loyal courts, statutes, constitution, tribunals, offices, and Legislature, and which filled them with traitors and kept them there. And if the gentleman still desires the specific time when it happened, it will answer all the purposes of my argument to reply, that it happened about four years before the time when he has told us it did, to wit, before she 'surrendered.'"

With an emphasis peculiar and very becoming the eloquent gentleman, he exclaimed:

"The destruction and superseding of all loyal government and law in South Carolina was a fact, not a law."

Does this meet the point of the interrogatory of my colleague?

These incidents, announced with so much force by the honorable gentleman, are evidences of crime, nothing more, and nothing less. Crime does not change the status, only the relations of a State. The fact that the inhabitants of a State are guilty of treason and of usurpation cannot carry it out of the Union; the fact does not absolve from, but it actually renders the actors amenable to law. The honorable gentleman well says, "The destruction and superseding of all loyal government and law in South Carolina was a fact, not a law." The argument proves too much. An alien cannot commit treason against the Government of the United States; a State cannot become alien by ordinance, by treason, nor yet by rebellion. Nothing less than successful revolution and the ability on the part of the malcontents to maintain their independence, in spite of the Government against which they have rebelled, can invest them with alien rights; this only will justify any nation in recognizing the independence of such revolutionists, and nothing less than this can carry a State out of the Union. It is the power, the might of the rebellious subject which the sovereign cannot overcome, that severs all the ties which bound them, and clothes it with national robes. If a State is out of the Union, it is alien; if alien, then is it independent. One view preserves, the other destroys the Union.

Upon a careful examination I find no authorities in conflict with the views I have now expressed. True, the very able and distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. STEVENS] holds a counter-view, but he founds it, as I understand him, upon authorities he cited in a recent speech. I have examined these authorities, and as I construe them, not even one of them sustains his peculiar view. For illustration, take the first citation from Vattel:

"When the parties in rebellion occupy and hold in a hostile manner a certain portion of territory; have declared their independence; have cast off their allegiance; have organized armies; have commenced hostilities against their former sovereign; the world acknowledges them as belligerents, and the contest is war."

This is all true. But what kind of war? I answer, it is civil war, the existence of which does not, as alleged by the honorable gentleman, "break all the ties that bound" the belligerents before its commencement. On the contrary, the continuance of these "ties" is absolutely indispensable to its existence. The moment these are severed civil war must expire. In this event the war necessarily becomes public. But no one claims that we have had a public war. And no one disputes but that we have had civil war—bloody, wicked, remorseless. Every fireside attests it; every household mourns its cruelty. No one denies that this war assumed such proportions that the insurgents were recognized as belligerents. But this by no means changes the status of these States. Their relations only are affected. In the first relation, the insurgents are traitors, amenable to civil law, the penalty of which is death. In the second relation, as belligerents they escape the rigor of the civil code. The fact that the insurgents in civil war are recognized as belligerents is equivalent to saying, you are so swollen by numbers that from motives of humanity belligerent rights must be accorded to you.

Why, sir, the circumstance that these malcontents were recognized as belligerents only, is proof conclusive that in the estimation of the nations of the earth these States are and ever have been in the Union and subject to its control; otherwise, with the strong and known desire on the part of many of them to do so, instead of recognizing them as belligerents merely, they would have acknowledged their independence. Wheaton alleges that—

"Until the revolution is consummated, while the civil war involving the contest for the government continues, other States [foreign Powers] may remain indifferent spectators of the controversy, still continuing to treat the ancient Government as sovereign and the Government de facto as a society entitled to the rights of war against its enemy."

From this authority there can be no doubt that these "rights of war" apply to the party resisting the "ancient Government" only during the contest for the supremacy. This being determined by a surrender of the malcontents, the reason for the application of these rights no longer existing, their application must cease also, and the contestants are necessarily remanded to the position of an offended sovereign and of an offending subject.

I insist this is the true relation which now exists between the national Government and these rebellious States.

I further insist that to restore these States to their normal relations without any restrictions is to make no distinction between virtue and vice. To restore them without prescribing any conditions is contrary to precedent, in conflict with analogy, repugnant to justice, in opposition to the spirit of the Baltimore platform, the repeated and well-known views of the present Executive of the nation, his immediate predecessor, and both branches of Congress. The differences, therefore, which now exist among the loyal men of this country are only as to the detail. They are no more variant than were the views which divided the patriots who finally harmonized in establishing our present form of government after the revolutionary war. I cite one further authority. Wheaton, at page 40, says:

"The habitual obedience of the members of any political society to a superior authority must have once existed in order to constitute a State; but a temporary suspension of that obedience and of that authority, in consequence of civil war, does not necessarily extinguish the being of a State, although it may affect for a time its ordinary relations with other States."

It seems to me this authority is in point, and that my second affirmation is established.

3. The relations of these States thus changed and the rights thus forfeited can be restored only by the legislative branch of the Government.

Provisions are or may be made for the restoration of the relations and the rights of which I have spoken. By whom? Is it by the trespasser? No; but it is by the being or the power against which the trespass was committed. These provisions are as old as they are universal. Adam could not restore himself, neither could Payne, nor can South Carolina. In no instance is this restoration a matter of right, but purely of grace. There are conditions-precident. Repentance is the door and good works the evidence of its sincerity. But who is to judge of this?

In our Government sovereignty or the power of which I have spoken is in the people. Its exercise is intrusted to agents. The first of these enacts, the second interprets, and the third executes the law. They are three, yet one. They are one, yet three. They each have an orbit. The departure of either from this imperils each as certainly as a like departure in any celestial body from its orbit imperils itself and others. They are counter-checks, breaks upon the governmental engine. If the legislative branch of the Government is hasty or unwise, the Executive stays its action, and enables it to take a "second sober thought." If the Executive errs, the legislature may by the concurrence of two thirds of its members correct the error. If the legislative and the executive branches unite in error, the judicial branch may remedy their joint mistake. These provisions are wise, and though they may be inconvenient or even abused in some instances, yet we cannot afford to abrogate them.

If, therefore, the insurrectionary States have forfeited, or if any of their rights are suspended, the sovereign power of the Government alone can grant relief. But to which of its agents must they apply? Not to the judicial, for she only interprets; not to the Executive, for he only executes the law. There is but one remaining. Practically, therefore, it is of but little moment whether we regard the governments of these States as dead, suspended, or only deranged. As a precedent, it may be otherwise. Equally unimportant is it whether we treat these States as in or as out of the Union; for in either view it requires the same interposition to reconstruct, restore, or to resurrect them. But we have authority in point.

The powers and the duties of Congress under article four, section four, of the Constitution of the United States were examined and defined by the Supreme Court of the United States in a controversy involving analogous principles in a case reported in 7 Howard, 42. The mooted question grew out of the fact that within the State of Rhode Island two several State governments were organized. The real point to be determined was as to which of these was the true government. This question Congress had decided incidentally prior to its being raised in court. The court say:

"Under this article of the Constitution it rests with Congress to decide what government is the established one in a State. For, as the United States guarantees to each a republican government, Congress must necessarily decide what government is established in a State before it can determine whether it is republican or not."

The power being unquestioned, the propriety of its exercise is all that remains.

Mr. Speaker, if men were indifferent to the future political control of this Government; if the position of Executive of this nation were unsought; if the patronage within its gift were of no value; if selfishness had no place in political parties, the business of reconstruction were easy. There are so many stand-points, the lust of power is so seductive, that patriots even need the prayers of the good. I invite gentlemen to the stand-point where the controlling thought, the central idea, the settled purpose is, that loyal men, and they only, shall rule this nation; that loyal men, and they only, shall fill its places of honor and of trust. If this is the President's stand-point I am with him. If this is the congressional stand-point, I am with it. If in this the Executive and Congress agree, they should act in concert. I most cordially concur with the President, that—

"If there be five thousand men in Tennessee loyal to the Constitution, loyal to freedom, loyal to justice, these true and faithful men should control the work of reorganization and reformation absolutely."

The mere detail of reorganization is of but little consequence. But the crowning fact, the cardinal doctrine, that loyal men must and shall rule this nation, like the stone cut out of of the mountain, shall increase until it fills the entire land.

Sir, the inquiry as to what governments now exist in these States, is a matter wholly for Congress. It is not a usurpation, it is not coveted by Congress, but it devolves upon this branch of the Government. The exercise of this prerogative is not to prevent the restoration of these States, but to promote this object. Congress is only an agent. From the murmurings of some, one might well infer that Congress were the offending party, and that these traitors are innocent and persecuted patriots.

4. The relations and the rights of these States should be restored as speedily as the interests of the parties concerned will permit.

Reconstruction is the natural fruit of the rebellion. If this fruit is bitter, attribute it to its wicked planting and more pernicious culture. The process of reconstruction involves such weighty interests that no desire, be it ever so worthy, for a speedy restoration of these States will justify a sacrifice of these interests. The question, in my judgment, is not may, but to what extent shall Congress interfere with the municipal affairs of these States? My reply is, to any extent that the common good may require. When these States were threatening the life of the nation no one doubted the right of the Government to defend itself. To this end it raised armies, fought battles, captured and disarmed their forces. This was not that they were alien enemies, but for the reason they were rebellious subjects. Our Government did this for the same reason and by the same authority that the ministers of the law arrest criminals or suppress a riot. The right to do this exists at all times. Crime only gives occasion for its exercise. But for the rebellion the exercise of this right would have remained inoperative. The exercise of this power is incident to sovereignty. It was to secure these and kindred rights that the General Government was established. Vattel says:

"A nation or a State has a right to everything that can help to ward off imminent danger and to keep at a distance whatever is capable of causing its ruin. And this from the very same reason that establishes its right to the things necessary to its preservation."

More particularly, allow me to say, the Thirty-Ninth Congress of the United States is not acting for the present only, but also for coming ages. The General Government, the government of each State, no matter what its status, the citizens of each and their successors are interested in the business of reconstructing these States. Four million human beings just emerging into the sunlight of freedom; the millions to whom the perpetuity of our Government has ever been a cherished object; the vast numbers enervated and corrupted by a system that degraded and then sought to destroy our Government, and especially the loyal men of the rebellious States, are looking to this Congress in hope. Shall we disappoint or fail to protect them? Vattel asserts:

"The body of a nation cannot abandon a province, a town, or even a single individual who is a part of it, unless compelled to by necessity."

Sir, there is a sublimity, yet a simplicity in truth. There is a conception so pure that all men do it reverence. There is a stand-point so elevated that no one fails to perceive the truth who occupies it. It is just where "justice and mercy meet and embrace." The enforcement of law is not inhuman; the Government that chastens its erring is not an enemy of its subjects; the parent who enforces obedience is not unmerciful to his child; these are evidences of the faithful discharge of Christian duty. Mr. Speaker, there is, there never has been, any opposition to, no hatred of, the South. The opposition is to traitors, the hatred is of treason; the object, to reform the first and to prevent a recurrence of the last. Is this exceedingly wicked?

Ours is not a Government for the white, nor is it a Government for the black; but it is a Government for man. To legislate for any class, irrespective of another, is equally unjust and ruinous to both. The attempt to do this has drenched our land in blood and filled it with sorrow.

Sir, it is claimed that the inhabitants of these States recently in armed rebellion are repentant. Where is the evidence? Do they manifest it by murdering Union men, by electing traitors to offices of trust, or are we to believe it from their arrogance of manner and the assumptions of their press?

The prodigal made no attempt to destroy, he only abandoned his father's house; and after wasting his substance he proposed to return. What was his language? "Father, I have sinned against heaven and before thee, and am no more worthy to be called thy son; make me as one of thy hired servants." There was evidence of contrition. Let these more than prodigal States manifest this spirit, and evidence their sincerity by appropriate acts, and the "fatted calf" will be cheerfully slain.

Suppose we were the conquered, and they the conquerors. What would they exact? Sir, should we receive these men, these conspirators, whose unwashed hands yet drip with the blood of our slain; they as well as their descendants, our constituents, and our posterity the universe of man would pronounce the Thirty-Ninth Congress of the United States of America as infamous as imbecile.

Look at it. Our soldiers sacrificed home and all of its joys, turned their wives and their children over to the charities of the nation, and then they offered themselves upon the altar of their country. By this patriotic devotion they saved our Government from its enemies. In memory of this heroism, in reward of this love of country, it is proposed to admit their unrepentant enemies into these sacred Halls to enact laws, and to make provisions for the protection and the subsistence of their widows and their orphans. In their agony, may not these insulted ones exclaim:

"Had it pleas'd Heaven
To try me with affliction; had he rained
All kinds of sores, and shames, on my bare head;
Steept me in poverty to the very lips;
Given to captivity me and my utmost hopes;
I should have found in some part of my soul
A drop of patience; but (alas!) to make [my country]
A fixed figure, for the time of scorn
To point his slow unmoving finger at,
Maddens my brain."

Sir, I can never, I will never consent to admit any man as a peer upon this floor whose garments are crimsoned in patriot blood. I should fear the avenging thunderbolts of an offended God. What! Shall we voluntarily surrender to traitors the citadel the defense of which has cost so much? Has victory reduced our Government to the alarming condition that it must be administered by its enemies? If it has, then is victory disaster, patriotism a crime, and devotion to country calamitous indeed. These traitors could not take our capital by force; we therefore yield it to them, that they may yet triumph.

I would compel the rebellious inhabitants of these States to protect the loyal men within their borders. I would require them to send loyal men to these Halls as representatives. I would have them understand, now and forever, that by reason of their criminal acts, no leader in this rebellion, no man who has been educated at the expense of the Government or who has ever held an office under it and then sought its overthrow, can ever hope to fill any position of trust, or exercise the elective franchise. I would impress upon each of these men the sentiments so well and so truthfully expressed by President Johnson, "That the traitor has ceased to be a citizen; and in joining the rebellion has become a public enemy. He forfeited his right to vote with loyal men when he renounced his citizenship, and sought to destroy our Government." I would enforce these doctrines if it took an army of two million men. This being done, in my judgment, these traitors should still thank Almighty God and an indulgent Republic that their conditions are made so easy. What! When I have repulsed and disarmed the assassin, must I take the villain into my house and allow him to share in its control?

There should be some discrimination between innocence and guilt, between loyalty and disloyalty. Is the punishment I suggest too severe? Listen to the President of the United States. On the 22d day of February, 1866, he declared, "I came into power under the Constitution of the country and by the approbation of the people. And what did I find? I found eight million people who were in fact condemned under the law, and the penalty was death." I inquire, how can they escape? By submitting to "the situation;" by simply recognizing the rights of others.

Mr. Speaker, there are others than these criminals who are entitled to a hearing. Ages of privation, centuries of wrong and oppression have rendered them weak. They, as well as the eight million people now under the penalty of death, are asking to be heard. Are they entitled to a hearing? Let us examine the position of each. The condition of one is self-imposed; the sorrows of the other were wantonly inflicted. The first are trespassers; the last have been trespassed against. One is the dispoiler; the other the dispoiled. One class were made strong and powerful by a beneficent Government; they used this power for its overthrow. The other class have been enfeebled and impoverished by that same Government, and yet they sustained it in its hour of trial. One has been guilty of inexcusable ingratitude, the other has been a living exemplification of that more than human prayer, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." One has been and now is a bitter, implacable enemy; the other has been friendly under almost irresistible provocation to hate. Which, then, has the highest claim? The first committed treason against the Government of their own choice; a Government under which they had acquired wealth and power. The last have been loyal to that same Government, yet in its counsels they have never been heard, and under it they have been degraded and beggared. One has fared sumptuously and been clothed in purple and linen; the other has lain at his gate wounded and sick and fed upon crumbs. I will not say one shall be "comforted" and the other "tormented." I only refer to an ancient record supposed to be authoritative.

But it is alleged the black man is ignorant, unfit for citizenship. Grant it. But who made him so? Who robbed him of his earnings and then barred the school-house? Unfitted for citizenship! He is guilty of no crime. He is not under the "penalty of death." His rights have been unjustly withheld—the others were forfeited by law. He solicits the rights for which he has patiently waited and prayed for centuries. Yet, being denied them, he has obeyed the law, served his oppressors, and waited and prayed, and waited. The other imperiously demands the rights he forfeited under a law in the enactment of which he participated, and he now insists he is cruelly wronged because these rights are not restored to him contrary to law. And what is more deplorable still, these criminals, "these people under the penalty of death," claim superiority, and with an impudence peculiar to unmixed wickedness, with an arrogance begotten of slavery, not only claim the right to play the tyrant over these ignorant, enfeebled and helpless black men, but with an effrontery unparalleled in history, they ask that they may participate in the duties and powers of administering the Government of the United States of America with honest and loyal white men.

"I charge thee, fling away ambition:
By that sin fell angels; how can man, then,
The image of his Maker, hope to win by 't."

Mr. Speaker, if I have succeeded in my purpose I have shown—

1. That neither the acts of secession nor the war have in any way abridged the powers or the jurisdiction of the General Government over the insurrectionary States.

2. That these States are still in the Union, but by reason of their criminal acts, they have forfeited the right of being represented in our national councils.

3. That the legislative branch of our Government only can restore this right and relieve these States from their present disabilities.

4. That these disabilities should be removed and these States should be restored as speedily as the safety and the interests of the several parties concerned will permit.

In conclusion. I remark, men die, principles never. The individual who orders his life and shapes his course for no purpose other than to secure the popular applause of to-day; the party that is actuated by no loftier impulses than expediency; the Government that ignores the cardinal principles of justice and truth, must expect an ignominious grave. Statesmen and philosophers pass away and they are forgotten. But principles live on. In the ages when inscriptions which chronicle the fame of the wisest, no matter how deeply engraven, shall have been entirely effaced, these principles, radiant as were they when the stars hymned their first song of praise, shall speed on, shall prosecute their work until the "will" of the Sovereign of all shall "be done in earth as it is in heaven."

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, the able and protracted debate on this floor and in the Senate upon the subject of reconstruction has been of an extraordinary character. It has involved largely first truths in political philosophy, and reminded one rather of the solemn and earnest discussions in the Convention of 1787 than of the forensic encounters of an ordinary Congress.

Nor has the interest been confined to these Halls. The people of the whole country have followed these debates from day to day with a profound sense of the reach and magnitude of the principles involved in the issue. No graver or more difficult questions ever perplexed a legislative assembly.

The prudent hand of free labor has given the products of three generations and pledged the wealth of the children to maintain the integrity of the Government; the blood of half a million victims, innocent of the crime of oppression, has redeemed four millions of a despised race from a debasing servitude, and thrown them, poor, ignorant, and helpless, upon our charity and justice.

These precious results of popular sacrifices and sufferings must be made secure against the subtle craft and embittered hate of an experienced and powerful foe by the statesmanship of this Congress, upon whom Providence has devolved the task of perpetuating the Republic and of insuring the liberty and welfare of its entire population in this and the generations to come.

Posterity will hold us accountable for the improvement of this splendid opportunity of civil liberty. It is the offspring of the ages, and has been brought to the birth in our time, amid the shock and agony of revolution, for the realization of grand and beneficent purposes in the divine economy. The Machiavelian dogma, that it matters not whether we act or how we act in these unsettled and pregnant times, is dangerous teaching.

In this transition period, when a mistake might be fatal to liberty, the people will not be lulled into security by any Circean form of speech. Nor will they long submit in patience to the narrow ambition and unthinking zeal which attributes to a question of temporary policy the importance of essential principles, and stakes the permanent welfare of the country upon a personal triumph. They demand wise but decisive action, and hold in healthy contempt subtle dialectics and musty precedents which there is no power to enforce, and which each nation accepts or rejects as will best subserve its interests. Justice and public safety are to them the natural and supreme law, and by them they will test our work. They demand that these shall be realized in the setting up and readjustment of the disorganized States. They will never consent that we should put liberty to sleep upon any Procrustean bed made by the fathers, much less strangle it in the cast-off garments of its own childhood.

American liberty is equality before the law, and the protection of person and property. No emancipation is complete which does not secure these primary rights to the freedman. Nothing less will satisfy public opinion or accord with the spirit of the amended Constitution. Political heresy must be excluded from places of power, and never again permitted to scatter its poison into the fountains of legislation. It is the simplest dictate of legal justice and political prudence that the leaders of the rebellion, who have been foiled in their attempt to destroy the Government, but not purged of their purpose or their hate, should be banished forever from the halls of legislation, the courts of justice, and the seats of administration. It is equally clear that time should be allowed to remove the prejudices and soften the asperities of a hostile population, ere they are permitted to exercise the elective franchise and sway the forces of political power. Can these grand results of the revolution be fixed by permanent guarantees in the present discordant state of public sentiment? I answer unhesitatingly, they can and will be. The common sense and common patriotism of the people, which have baffled the force and the machinations of treason, which have brought the latest and mightiest conflict for civil liberty to the most splendid triumph of history, will not in these first days of restored peace be cheated of the fruits of victory by the craft of politics or the passion of parties. With such a past, our faith may repose upon the people and the God of nations for the future. Differences of opinion and strong language are to be expected and tolerated upon great and abiding questions of national polity. A party which can boast of an undisturbed unity of sentiment in a formative epoch like this, has either become too corrupt or too imbecile to be of service to the State.

We are reminded that leading Republicans in Congress and out of Congress are in conflict; so were Hamilton and Madison in the Constitutional Convention, but they stood together in the production of the Federalist, that immortal argument for the adoption of our organic law so largely the result of their combined wisdom and forbearance. We should invoke upon our deliberations the spirit that blended firmness and moderation, and harmonized without the sacrifice of principle, conflicting views and interests in the councils of our fathers. Some among us would have universal suffrage, while others would exclude in perpetuo all who have participated in rebellion from the political rights which attach to citizenship. These things may be right. Are they possible? Can abstract justice be realized in any form of human institutions? Men are not made for Governments, but Governments for men, and must be adapted to their circumstances and wants.

Self-government is not possible for savages, nor absolutism for an educated and virtuous people. Between these extremes there must be political gradations to meet the varying conditions of society. So in the restoration of the States to their Federal relations, we cannot ignore the past or blink out of sight the numbers who have been in arms against us. Vattel, in defining the conduct due to insurgents, says it should be "such conduct as shall at the same time be most consonant to justice and the most salutary to the State. Subjects who rise against their princes without cause deserve severe punishment; yet even in this case, on account of the number of delinquents, clemency becomes a duty in the sovereign."

Neither can we shut our eyes to the general ignorance, inexperience, and subserviency of the emancipated. I do not counsel, and would not allow any concessions which would jeopardize the safety of the Government or the welfare of the freedmen; but we cannot wholly disregard, in laying down our platform of reconstruction, the opinions, or the prejudices even, of the thirty thousand men of Tennessee who fought with us, and of the other thousands of other States who, standing in the very path of the terrible tempest, never wavered in their loyalty as it swept away their all, and brought to their hearth-stones unutterable forms of woe and death.

But, sir, while I am anxious for harmony among the friends of the Government, I spurn with a righteous scorn the arrogant claims and insulting advice of the State criminals who have been put upon the stand to testify in respect to the amiable deportment and loyal attitude of a population which the Government has not yet dared to let slip from its mailed hand, and to signify upon what conditions these squelched rebels will deign to resume their functions in the Union. The impudent and unblushing assurance with which these rebel leaders, after their utter overthrow and humiliation, rehearse their defunct dogma of State sovereignty, and plead their constitutional right to an exemption from all disabilities, and a resumption of all privileges, is such a burlesque and mockery of the stern realities of the time as the genius of Aristophanes never reached. Guilty of every political crime, and deserving a thousand fold the taints and forfeitures of treason, they assert their innocence in the face of an insulted but magnanimous people. Standing above the graves of three hundred thousand victims of their wrath, these men who have made the very air hot as the shirt of Nessus with their poisoned words of malediction and denunciation against the Government, insist upon being propitiated, and demand admission to the forum of legislation, the halls of justice, and the seats of administration. Are we not turning this bloody tragedy of revolution into a comedy of errors? Why, sir, the culprit at the bar pleads the magnitude of his crime as a ground of acquittal! Nay, he even claims the right to ascend the judgment seat and pass judgment upon his accuser, and threatens ere long to assume the place of the executioner.

"O judgment, thou art fled to brutish beasts,
And men have lost their reason."

With all deference to the opinion of others, I think these men have no business here but to plead for pardon. The court which takes testimony from the criminal sits upon a rotten throne. The Government which seeks counsel and support from its enemies is both weak and treacherous. Sir, it is the right of those whose political tenets are universal liberty and universal justice, and who have hallowed their creed with their blood, to make conditions of return and to rebuild the shattered fabrics of State governments on principles which will obviate future antagonisms and conflicts in the sisterhood of States. I would pay to these fallen chiefs the tribute due to men who were brave in a bad cause, and would give them the privilege to live and die in unmolested obscurity. "All is not lost," even to them. They invoked war upon the land, and in the bloody carnival the slaves have done what their fathers did, asserted their inalienable right and made themselves free. The Nemesis of national justice has swept away the opulence which they had wrung from unrequited toil, has deprived them of the power to dispense an elegant and magnificent hospitality in the sweat of other men's brows; but Providence has kindly left them the consolation of their hounds and fighting cocks. As they sit amid the ruins and desolations of their great plantations, their chastened spirits may still find fit utterance in the sweet lyric of Cowper:

"I am monarch of all I survey,
My right there is none to dispute;
From the center all round to the sea,
I am lord of the fowl and the brute."

When we look simply at the future peace and safety of the Republic, the work of reconstruction seems simple and unperplexed.

That the governments of the insurgent States should be reorganized by and maintained in the hands of men sincerely loyal, is too nearly self-evident to admit of argument. It is equally obvious that this can be reached only by requiring as conditions- precedent to restoration—

1. That the civil and military leaders of the rebellion, who naturally create and direct the public opinion of the South, should be made ineligible to office under the United States Government.

2. That the rights of the freedmen and the safety of the Government be secured by granting suffrage to the liberated or withholding it temporarily from the disloyal.

3. That the elective franchise and an equal distribution of political power shall be protected by a decrease in the basis of representation, where impartial suffrage is denied, by such a proportion of the whole population as the disfranchised males above twenty-one years of age bear to the whole male population above that age.

There is no injustice in such requisitions, and they are imperatively demanded for public safety. There is no hardship in withholding political power from men who have violated the most solemn oaths, have destroyed untold wealth, and decimated the population of the land in an effort to overthrow its Government.

Is it not our paramount duty as guardians of the Republic to throw around it such safeguards of law as shall protect it against the machinations of a yet powerful foe, until treasonable purposes shall have passed away or become innocuous? I am constrained to believe that no loyal man would hesitate for a moment to give a cordial support to these measures were not his reason perplexed or his desires overruled by a theory of the indestructibility of States which dominates his better judgment and his patriotism. I fully concur, sir, in the opinion entertained by gentlemen around me, that the insurgent States did not perish, either by their ordinances of secession or their acts of war; but I differ in toto from the conclusion that they have a right to representation in Congress simply because of their existence as States. If the present governments of the rebel States have been organized by those who had forfeited all their political rights, and are held in their power, they have no legal existence or right of representation more than the revolutionary governments which have been overthrown. The national Legislature, to whom alone the right belongs, must in some way signify when their political status has been properly restored before they can rightfully claim seats within it. The right of a Government to make use of the means necessary to its own existence is the supreme law of every State. It was that reserved and sovereign right of the Government which conferred upon us the power to refuse representation during the pendency of the struggle, and the same imperative law of public necessity demands the continued exclusion of the representatives of that rebel power till the loyal people of the South, who have never worshipped at the altars of treason, shall have reconstructed their State governments upon principles consistent with the genius of civil liberty and upon conditions which we shall dictate as essential to the future peace and welfare of the Republic. It is not for treason to sit in judgment upon itself, nor for the enemies of the Government to become chief counselors of the State.

The war has wrought great changes, not only in the social condition, but the civil structure of the late slave States. They cannot return as they were originally, and it is proper that Congress, to whom belongs the right of determining the conditions upon which States shall be organized and of making them parts of the Union, should decide when these States have been properly reorganized and fitted to renew their legitimate functions in the Union. This is a responsibility which we, whom the people have made depositaries of their will, cannot innocently yield or repudiate, and for another to assume it would be a usurpation of power such as would not be tolerated in the coarsest and most absolute despotism to be found on the map of the world. And yet, sir, on this very question of the right of Congress to impose upon the rebel States conditions- precedent to representation, the issue is to be made and contested before the people, and we had better meet it fully and fairly upon this floor.

The war was a logical and inevitable result of the conflicting views entertained by the northern and southern schools of politics in respect to the nature of our Government. They who regard it as simply a league, necessarily transferred sovereignty to the independent States of which it was composed, and held that the State was entitled to their highest allegiance and could secede at pleasure. We, on the other hand, who held that the Union was a Government de facto, denied the right to withdraw, and contended that the Federal Government could claim supreme allegiance and coerce the people of a State. With social and industrial systems in constant and complete antagonism, it must ultimately happen that sectional interests would be thought paramount to the advantages of the Union, and then the final arbitrament of force must come, as it did. But when it came, was it the purpose of the South to overthrow the State governments? Certainly not, for it was in their interests that they rebelled. They renounced their allegiance to the Constitution and attempted to transfer it to another. They did not desire to inaugurate anarchy, but to construct a new confederacy out of the existing States. When peaceful measures failed they attempted forcibly to sunder the umbilical cord which bound them to the parent State, to expel Federal authority in all its forms from their borders, and to transfer the States without lapse or essential modification of their governments to a new federal league. This they did in fact, but not in law. It was simply a suspension of Federal authority. Their ordinances of secession passed by Legislatures were void, for the States, as such, are not parties to the Union, and have no more power to break the bond than a board of trade or city council. Their ordinances of secession passed in conventions were equally void, first, because the Constitution has no provision for self-destruction in what way; and secondly, because the Government was originally organized by a three-fourths vote of all the States, and could only be disorganized, if that were possible by peaceful means, by a similar vote. Eleven States only instead of twenty-four made the attempt, and hence their work was a nullity.

Did they effect their object in the conflict of arms? They established a civil power which had a de facto existence and exercised the functions of government for four years. Did it acquire an existence de jure? I think not. If it did, then the rebels dismembered our territory and became alien enemies upon a foreign soil, for they could not have become alien enemies upon our own soil. If it did, then they can only be held as prisoners of war and can claim exemption from the guilt and the punishment of treason. If it did, they cannot be required in law or justice to pay taxes levied upon the States during their separate existence; and have a right to insist that the liabilities which they incurred as an independent power shall be assumed and honorably discharged by the General Government, on their readmission to the Union. If it did, they are to-day in the condition of conquered territory and should be brought into the Union, like other States, by a vote of Congress, and not by the supererogatory work of constitutional amendments. If it did, then the rebels played the double part of victors and vanquished in the final scene of the drama, and have been asking and receiving pardons from a defeated foe. It is clear, sir, that the slave States never reached the dignity of an independent confederacy. There has never been a moment when they have not been regarded and treated as a part of the Union. Their de facto government was never recognized by other Powers as belonging to the community of nations, and was treated by us as a fiction during the pendency of the contest. The brave men who fell on a thousand battle-fields, and the mighty host of not less heroic men who survive, are entitled to the glory of having preserved the integrity of the Union and the supremacy of the Government.

But though the right of the Government to collect customs, hold courts, maintain military power, and exercise all other functions of Federal authority in the insurgent States, has remained unbroken, yet it has been assumed, and much legal learning marshaled to prove, that the local governments perished. I admit the great skill and ability of the advocates of this theory, but have failed to be convinced of its truth. I am unable to see how the numerous citations which have been made from distinguished publicists are applicable to the state of things which here exist. The local governments of the seceding States had an uninterrupted continuity of existence until the fall of the confederacy, and were then destroyed, not by the enemies, but by the friends of the Union. The legitimate governments were usurped by a revolutionary power, which administered them in the interests of treason and in defiance of Federal authority. There was a continuity, but not an identity of existence, when a loyal was transferred into a disloyal State. The former passed over its form, but not its life, to the new State, and hence did not necessarily perish, either at its birth or its demise. It was neither a metamorphosis nor a metempsychosis of the State. It was not a case of death, but of suspended animation. The insurgents maintained the old forms, in order the better to concentrate and wield their power, but in law they had no municipal governments in operation from the beginning to the close of the war, for a State can come into existence only by an act of Congress. They are simply municipal organizations for home purposes, and not governments in the purview of international law. Hence they do not come into existence by the recognition of foreign Powers, and their status is to be determined by constitutional rather than international law, the same as cases are decided in court by statute law, where there is a statute, to the exclusion of common law. Under the Constitution, I know of no way in which a State can perish. If the people should resort to their reserved right, and sunder their relations to the Federal Union by successful revolution, undoubtedly the State would cease to exist as a part of the Government. But this case does not occur until the revolution has been recognized as a success by other Christian Powers. This position, I think, will not be controverted by gentlemen familiar with public law.

The loyal people of the South were overpowered and held in duress by an armed mob, and their governments rendered inoperative by force during the period in which the slave power was testing the ability of the Federal Government to maintain its supremacy.

But the usurpation has been crushed and the rebel power subverted, and now the governments of the States revert to the loyal people of the South, who have a right to claim protection and immunity at our hands while they reorganize their governments on principles which we may deem essential to the republican form guaranteed by the Constitution and to the future peace and safety of the Republic. Says Chief Justice Chase:

"It is my opinion the States remain States. The rebel governments of the southern States have been destroyed. All the machinery of these governments has come to an end; and now, holding, as I do, that these States remain States, the second process of reorganization is that the governments now revert into the hands of the southern people. They are to rebuild the governments of these States."

It is not designed by the series of measures now pending to construct a platform for the admission of new States, though it may become such, but to put the organization of the disrupted governments into the hands of loyal citizens, and to preserve them in their custody till time shall have removed, or at least soothed, the passions and prejudices of these troubled times. The justice and wisdom of such a policy will hardly be questioned by any friend of the Government; but in organic legislation what ever is just and wise has the force of law. The late President Lincoln, in speaking of reconstruction, says:

"An attempt to guaranty and protect a revived State government constructed in whole or in preponderating part from the very element against whose hostility and violence it is to be protected is simply absurd."

The present Chief Magistrate, too, speaking out of the fulness and bitterness of his experience, said:

"But in calling a convention to restore the State, who shall restore and reestablish it? Shall the man who gave his means and his influence to destroy the Government? Is he to participate in the great work of reorganization? Shall he who brought this misery upon the State be permitted to control its destinies? If this be so, then all this precious blood of our brave soldiers and officers, so freely poured out, will have been wantonly spilled; all the glorious victories won by our noble armies will go for naught, and all the battle-fields which have been sown with dead heroes during the rebellion will have been made memorable in vain. Why all this carnage and devastation? It was that treason might be put down and traitors punished. Therefore I say that traitors should take a back seat in the work of restoration. If there be but five thousand men in Tennessee loyal to the Constitution, loyal to freedom, loyal to justice, these true and faithful men should control the work of reorganization and reformation absolutely. I say that the traitor has ceased to be a citizen, and in joining the rebellion has become a public enemy. He forfeited his right to vote with loyal men when he renounced his citizenship and sought to destroy our Government."

The bill reported by the committee proposes the temporary disfranchisement of rebels, while the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts provides for a system of suffrage which shall include all males above the age of twenty-one. These two measures fairly involve a discussion of the grounds and the policy of suffrage.

The theory has been advanced that the family is the unit of society and the rightful source of political power. This, though beautiful as an abstraction, does not, I apprehend, solve the problem of suffrage. If the right to vote springs from the family relations, how many votes shall the family cast? If but one, who shall cast it? Do you say the father, who is the natural representative and defender of the family? But suppose the father is superannuated and feeble, would he be called upon in an emergency to shoulder his staff, when staggering under the weight of eighty years, to defend either his family or his country? Would not his stalwart but unmarried son, sustained and impelled by the vigor of thirty summers, rather be summoned to stand in the breach when the rights and privileges of either his family or the State are invaded? As, under such circumstances, the son would more ably defend, so would he not more safely exercise the suffrage of the family than the father? But the theory deprives him of the privilege and the State of the advantage of a vote. If, now, all the family but this son were cut off, and he left alone, is he still to be deprived of all political rights till he becomes the head of a family? Would not this be a limitation rather than an extension of the precious privilege of suffrage, and tend to transfer the sovereignty of the majority to an aristocratic minority?

Suppose, again, the head of the family is a Mormon, and the husband of a score of wives: is the political power of twenty families to be given to the saintly patriarch of Utah? Sir, such a policy would turn the current of history, swiftly flowing into civil freedom, backward toward the patriarchy of the infant world. I dismiss the theory, and turn to one more plausible though equally fallacious. I refer to the dogma that suffrage is an inalienable natural right.

Now, sir, I contend that it is not a natural right at all. It does not exist in a state of nature, but is created by the organization of civil society. It is the method by which the ultimate sovereignty of the people is expressed in the administration of government, and hence is purely a political right. Voting is not an end but a means, and should be extended or limited according as the one or the other will best subserve the ends for which Governments are made. In a republic the privilege should be as near universal as the well-being of society and the perpetuity of government will allow. The axiom of political equality, and the dogma that all just powers of government are derived from the consent of the governed, which we have laid in the foundations of our civil institutions, forbid any restriction upon suffrage, except when overridden by the higher law of public safety. This is the only and sufficient justification for withholding the privilege from aliens, minors, and females. Properly speaking, any conditions of suffrage in the nature of personal qualifications, made for the public good, are not restrictions, and can only become such when individuals fail to reach the standard which their own good and the welfare of society demands. This is self-exclusion from a full participation in the privileges of freedom for which the Government should not be held responsible. Rational liberty is the offspring of law, and must be maintained by law. But law in a free Government is an expression of national sentiment, and can only be executed when in accord with the public mind. I do not mean in accord with the views and wishes of all men, or sections even—for then it might not be a "terror to evil doers"—but with the prevailing sentiment of the people.

It is essential, therefore, for the preservation of liberty, that the law should embody intelligence and virtue of a high order. Republics are the latest and the best results of an advanced civilization, and are the civil forms in which the will and ideas of those for whom and by whom Governments are established have sought the highest condition of man. But were you to establish a republic among the unthinking and unrestrained barbarians of the South Sea islands, it would be subverted before a twelvemonth. A savage people cannot be a free, self-governing people. Where the passions of men are not under the restraint of the developed reason and conscience, they will not be a law unto themselves, but must be restrained by force. Transport to our shores ten million corrupt and ignorant Chinamen, a thing by no means impossible, and give them unlimited suffrage, and straightway your institutions would be subjected to radical and essential changes, if not to complete subversion.

For these, among other reasons, I hold that the question of suffrage is not to be determined by an appeal to our original rights, but by a consideration of its probable effects upon the public welfare and the perpetuity of the Government. This I contend for, not because I wish to exclude freedmen from the ballot-box, but because I would trace our political privileges to their true source. I would place upon defensible and impregnable grounds the exclusion of amnestied but unrepentant rebels from any part or lot in the work of reconstructing the Union, shattered by their hands, and which they are still anxious to destroy. We have no right to exclude any man from the privilege of suffrage unconditionally, but we have the same right and are under the same obligation to require of him for its exercise those conditions of intelligence and virtue without which republics cannot exist, as we have to make preparation and fitness a prerequisite for the discharge of official and ministerial duties. This is demanded of us by all the force of our obligations to preserve and perpetuate good government.

The political axiom that taxation and representation are correlative rights, which the fathers laid down in justification of their act of revolution, has been reiterated here and elsewhere as an irrefutable defense of universal suffrage. But the argument is false in philosophy and defective in logic. It assumes that suffrage should be as universal as representation, which is the very question at issue. Taxation does not necessarily carry with it the right to vote. Men may be required to pay taxes for the support of a Government which protects them in the enjoyment of their civil rights, even where public safety requires a restriction of their political rights. This holds in the case of females and aliens, and may be applied with even greater force to native-born citizens who have been in arms against their Government. Ignorance may exclude from the ballot-box, but treason must. Whether the entire adult male population made free by the proclamation of January 1, 1863, and by the late amendment of the Constitution, numbering some seven hundred thousand, shall at once be admitted to the full enjoyment of all the political privileges of American citizens or not, is simply and solely a question of political well-being. A deprivation of civil rights is a defeat of the ends for which Governments are organized, and is an abuse of power, but a Government based upon political equality presupposes a degree of intelligence and virtue, and hence may properly demand the qualifications essential to its own existence in those who exercise its privileges.

We cannot settle the question of suffrage by reference to abstractions. Civil institutions are not a creation of the pure reason, but are an outgrowth of the experience of ages, and must be maintained by practical wisdom; but it is beset with difficulties. Free Governments are impossible among uncivilized peoples. When the masses are but partially or viciously educated, as in South America and Mexico, and even in parts of Europe, they have but a precarious and fitful existence. Then, an addition to the existing body of electors, of seven hundred thousand men wholly destitute of mental discipline and a practical knowledge of affairs, if not fatal to free government, might render it undesirable. But here, where the great majority of the people are under the restraints of a Christian education, we have a reserve of conservative power, which would seem to be abundantly able to counteract any dangerous tendencies resulting from such an increase. It may be more safe to give them the privilege to vote than to leave them like the pent-up fourth estate in Europe, a discontented and factious force under the State, perpetually seeking to redress its real or imaginary wrongs by mobs and revolutions. Every British ministry for half a century has been obliged to protect itself against this class of the population, by holding an army in one hand and a reform bill in the other.

The fact that the freedmen are concentrated at the South throws some doubt and perplexity into the problem. If they were scattered over the whole country the gift of suffrage to this people would not hazard or materially affect any State or national interest whatsoever. The whole body is less than the number of foreigners naturalized every ten years, and would constitute but one seventh of the entire voting population of the country. A Government which has sufficient power of assimilation to maintain its character and its stability against the ignorance and prejudice brought in by an annual increase of the foreign vote of a hundred thousand need not entertain an apprehension of evil to result from the vote of seven hundred thousand natives who have been taught the virtue of self-restraint and the value of liberty in the school of oppression. There can be but little danger from a race so docile and apt to learn. We should bear in mind, too, that though themselves enslaved, they have grown up in the midst of free institutions and have had the moral discipline of suffering. Remember, also, what unswerving loyalty they exhibited in the darkest and most hopeless hour of the war, when the pampered children of the Republic had yielded to the sorcery of treason and gone into a foul revolt against liberty and the Government of their fathers. With what incorruptible fidelity they fed and guided through all snares and dangers our starving soldiers escaping from the infernal lazaretto of a power which renounced alike the laws of war and the instincts of humanity. With what alacrity they leaped into the bloody arena when the hazard of life was made the price of their liberty. With what dauntless heroism they fought and fell, side by side with the bravest and manliest of the land, for the integrity of a Government which had been to them the house of bondage. Why, sir, these despised chattels of the traitorous chivalry grappled with their masters in the deadliest breach, and fought with a firm and desperate courage where bullet and shell made wildest havoc with your ranks, and their ashes mingle with the dust of your noble dead from the rivers to the sea and the Gulf. Have not such deeds redeemed the race from dishonor and distrust, and entitled them, not only to a protection of their civil rights, but to an impartial enjoyment of the privileges of citizenship? It seems to me, sir, to be a legitimate result of the war, and as though to withhold it would be a violation of the gratitude, the honor, and the plighted faith of the Republic.

But, sir, I would not insist upon my views or make my convictions an obstruction to the restoration of a cordial union and fraternal intercourse with the South. We must ask nothing more, we must accept nothing less than what is necessary to the future peace and safety of the country. The suffrage of colored men, though limited by intelligence and military service, would undoubtedly be offensive and humiliating to the South, for it would conflict with pride of caste and with settled convictions that political subordination is the divinely appointed condition of black men. It is idle for us to expect that legislation or victories will supplant the inveterate prejudices of a century.

Time is an important element in moral triumphs, for the progress of ideas in general society is slow. But we have a right to insist, both as conquerors and the friends of freedom, that theories that have covered the land with shame and sorrow and well-nigh wrecked the Government shall nowhere again take forms of law or turn our legislative halls into the arenas of discord and passion.

We have been told that the appearance of the freedmen at the polls would be the signal for an indiscriminate war of extermination, and in the next breath that it would enhance the political power of their former masters. If, now, the desire of the South to realize both of these objects did not neutralize their efforts for either, the past is an assurance that the power of the Government would be ample to crush sedition, while the untarnished record of the negro during the war and his quiet but earnest pursuit of knowledge and the legitimate fruits of industry now, are to us a pledge of his future loyalty to liberty.

The southern argument that the ballot should be withheld on account of race or color rests in unalloyed prejudice, which has grown up from a false education and a vicious social system. It is indefensible on any principles of human nature or sound logic. A reference to facts and history shows abundantly that there is no natural repugnance between races or colors. What is sometimes regarded as such is only a false class pride, made obstinate by long-continued, artificial, and enforced distinctions in social condition, which becomes obvious and palpable when the races are brought together upon a common level of political equality.

Why, sir, these sticklers for an incompatibility of race, if you will but perpetuate the inequality and wrong of a barbarous age, will mix and circulate freely and gladly in this wide mosaic of society, and even mingle their blood till all the nice distinctions of color are blended and lost in a universal smut of the cuticle. These puerile conceits which we have been wont to hear pronounced with solemn and assured gravity by politicians of the southern school will soon follow into obscurity or contempt the outrage and wrong in which they were engendered—"Opinionum commenta delet dies, naturæ judicia confirmat."

But the paramount argument for a system of suffrage which shall admit freedmen and exclude rebels from the franchise of the ballot is the necessity of securing at the South a party whose loyalty is unimpeachable, to renew and maintain municipal governments in the insurgent States, true to the principles which have prevailed in the late struggle of arms. This will be specially imperative, if we adopt the theory of the Executive, that these States are still in the Union. My own opinion has been that our condition was without precedent, either in our own or foreign history, and that the theory of reconstruction which was most direct and simple, and which could receive the general and cordial support of the people, provided it was in the interest of impartial rights, was most legitimate, and should shape the policy of the Administration.

We have just emerged, sir, from a grand revolution. The principles involved, and which have gained the final mastery, have no less intrinsic value and are not less vital to the welfare of those who shall enter into our labors than were those for which our fathers staked their lives, and for the transmission of which they renounced the whole proud inheritance of the fatherland and built anew the fabric of civil government. Is there any "powerful charm" in the wizard past which should hold this generation spell-bound? Our responsibilities to the future are not less than were those of the past to us. The authority of legal maxims and venerated parchments is not so high as the cry of justice and the demands of public safety.

Sir, we are under a covenant of blood to the loyal dead and the loyal living and to their children after them to see that what the people have gained in the field is not lost in the forum. We cannot shirk this grave responsibility under the pretext of public necessity, and be guiltless. The people will hold us in the discharge of our solemn obligations. The divine law does not require us to do equal justice to "white" men, but to all men; and if we cannot find the statute upon the tables of the law-givers, we may find it written upon the heart by Him who "hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth."

We cannot afford to lose time in restoring the rebel States to the full exercise of their functions in the Federal Government. The Union cannot long lie asunder in time of peace. There is a silent, irresistible force in the tide of events, a recuperative power in the great industries of the country, stronger than political parties, which will enforce an early reorganization of these States. If we do not adopt some just and feasible plan for the reconstruction of the disorganized South, the people will reconstruct this House. Nothing should be done in a spirit of exasperation and revenge. The safety of the Republic and the cause of national liberty alone should dictate terms. The freedom of all must be "maintained," and the peace and security of the Government assured by retaining it in the hands of its friends. But while we battle with an inflexible will for the realization of these indispensable conditions of reunion, we shall do well to bear in mind that in bringing back eleven great States to their allegiance we cannot secure full and exact justice as in the ordinary administration of law; that retaliation, if possible, would not restore our treasure or bring back our dead, and that time, which obliterates the trenches of war, will soften our sense of wrong and take something from the severity of our demands.

Practical statesmanship to-day does not consist in determining what we would do if we could, but what we can do if we will, and then in doing it. Let me not be understood as palliating the guilt or counseling a feeble dispensation of justice to the master spirits who raised and directed this storm of blood. To-day they are building the tombs of dead traitors, and inciting the rabble to the red-handed work of negro extermination. They are attempting, by processions, songs, and eulogies to corrupt the current of history and redeem from eternal infamy the memory of their comrades in perjury, murder, and treason. These things must cease. We must have but one history, and our monuments must teach the wisdom and glory of loyalty. It cannot be otherwise than that the latest and most resplendent chapter in our national records, the statutes of the last half decade, and the next; the very tribute which industry casts into the public treasury; nay, that the prevailing sentiments and familiar speech of the loyal country should be a bitter and perpetual reproach to these men. Would you, then, place them here to baffle legislation, where every debate would be to them as terrible as the fiery tracery upon his palace walls to the doomed monarch of Babylon? Place them here and you make this place a bedlam to us and an inferno to them. Bitter dissensions would constantly arise, which would finally dismember and ruin the Republic. Once within these walls their purpose would find fit expression in the language of Beelzebub to the infernal council:

"Untamed reluctance and revenge, though slow,
Yet ever plotting how the conqueror least
May reap his conquest, and may least rejoice
In doing what we most in suffering feel."

It is an indispensable condition of peace to both North and South that the guilty authors of the war, whose pride and passions would rankle with the shame of defeat, should be forced into obscurity where they will be stripped of the prestige of distinction and the power of place.

Our policy should be to punish the leaders, but to elevate and inspire with confidence the masses who have been cheated or forced into rebellion. We should no longer bandy the epithets of "fanatical Yankee" and "southern tyrant," nor nurse sectional animosities and prejudices as groundless as the childish sentiment the poet has cast into the pleasant epigram:

"I do not love you, Dr. Fell,
The reason why I cannot tell,
But this alone I know full well,
I do not love you, Dr. Fell."

While we should shrink from no duty, and shirk no responsibility which the safety and welfare of the country demand, our abiding aspiration and effort should be to lay wide open the channels of trade and intercourse between the North and South, and to bind the two sections together by the bonds of mutual interest, and the yet stronger ties of common ideas and common patriotism. If we are to be one people, the deep, dark chasm which has opened in our history, which puzzles the skill of the wisest, must be spanned by frank and manly concessions and a mutual forbearance until the growth of other times shall have obliterated the horrid breach. The men who have trodden the paths of war, and whose graves lie thick and beautiful on southern plains, as the stars that keep watch in the deep vault of heaven; the heroes who survive and the heroes who went down in the rage and wrath of battle, like grass in the swath of the mower; they who at New Orleans and at Mobile, with rudder set and sails spread to the breeze, sailed as into the very mouth of hell, and brought forth the twin demons of treason and bondage to the light of justice and liberty, have made it impossible that a slave should ever again crouch and tremble beneath the flag of the Republic. To us belongs the duty of assuring the safety and perpetuity of the Union. Let us do our work in the spirit of Christian charity, and in our admiration of men of noble natures and heroic mold, who dared to stand like heroes at the threshold of their homes, and to fall like men at their hearth-stones, in defense of a bad and wicked cause, let us forget our wrongs and foster a spirit of patriotism and of brotherhood, which shall embrace every State and every citizen in our broad and sea-girt domain, rich in its mountains and rich in its plains, blessed in its climates and blessed in its peoples.

Mr. ROSS. Mr. Speaker, it is known, at least by my constituents, that I was not a supporter of the last Administration, and did not cast my vote for the election of the present incumbent of the presidential chair; nor have I any retractions to make or apologies to offer for such opposition. Educated in the principles of the Democratic party, with an abiding faith in their correctness, I cheerfully gave my aid to the election of its chosen standard-bearers, thinking it the best and safest policy to intrust in its keeping the destinies of the country; nor have these opinions been shaken by subsequent events, but confirmed. I thought that conciliatory measures and wise counsels would preserve the Union and avert the calamities of a civil war. To this end I favored the peace offerings tendered in Congress by Mr. Crittenden and Mr. Douglas. Some of the measures of the Administration, which I regarded as infringing upon the Constitution, the reserved rights of the States, and the liberties of the citizen, I strenuously opposed. This difference of opinion with and opposition to the Administration has sometimes called forth from its friends the unjustifiable charge of disloyalty to the Government and sympathy with treason. The inference is unfair, and no hypothesis could be more foreign to the truth. At the last presidential election eighteen hundred thousand votes were cast outside of the States in rebellion against the policy of the Administration. These men were not disunionists; they were true friends of the Constitution and the perpetuity of civil liberty. They would have preserved the Union peaceably if possible, but forcibly if necessary. The Union preserved in its pristine purity is worth all the sacrifices, vast as they have been, of blood and treasure. Whether they were right or wrong, whether the one or the other policy would have been best, is no longer a practical question; what is done cannot be recalled.

Let us turn from the dead past to the living, practical issues before us. First and greatest in magnitude and importance is the restoration of the Union with amicable, fraternal relations between its different sections. It rises infinitely above all others, and merits the profound and dispassionate consideration of Congress and the country. Half a million of our brave men and untold millions of treasure have been lavishly bestowed to suppress rebellion, enforce the laws, and maintain the Union. The objects for which the war was prosecuted were authoritatively enunciated by resolutions introduced in both branches of Congress by Messrs. Johnson and Crittenden, and obtained with great unanimity its concurrent sanction. On this congressional platform, acquiesced in by every department of the Government without change or modification, the war was prosecuted, the rebellion suppressed, peace restored, and the Union maintained. Such, at least, was the judgment of the country up to the time of the meeting of the present Congress. Everywhere, on land and sea, our arms had been triumphantly victorious; the insurgents were routed and vanquished, laid down their arms and sued for peace. Animosity began to give way, sectional bickering was hushed, business and confidence began to revive; the country was tired of strife and war, the national heart yearned for peace, quiet, unity, and fraternity. The Executive had inaugurated and was successfully carrying out a policy for the restoration of civil authority, which for its wisdom and justice commended itself to the country and the civilized world. Such was the condition of national affairs when Congress convened.

These bright visions and cherished hopes received their first rude shock when the honorable Speaker, in his serenade speech, sounded the key-note of opposition to restoration—that we should “make haste slowly.” The sentiments enunciated in that carefully prepared speech, by one of the ablest and most distinguished of his party, foreshadowed unmistakably the purpose to thwart the Executive in his policy for the restoration of the Union. A caucus was called. Mr. STEVENS’s anti-restoration resolution adopted, the Clerk refused to place on the roll or call the name of any member from either of the eleven southern States. As soon as the House was thus organized the caucus resolution was adopted, creating the celebrated joint committee of fifteen on reconstruction, to which were to be referred without debate all credentials and other matters appertaining to members from the eleven southern States, thereby ignoring the standing Committee of Elections in each House and depriving them of their right to “judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members.”

This committee was created for the purpose of preventing restoration; to destroy, not to restore, and thus far it has successfully carried out the objects and purposes for which it was ushered into existence. They are opposed to the restoration of the Union, and it will never be restored as long as they have the power to prevent it. The resolution creating this committee and defining its duties is in palpable conflict with the plain provisions of the Constitution. Permit me to call your attention to it. Article one, section five, provides that “each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members.” Now, while this resolution stands as valid and is executed it virtually annuls this constitutional provision that “each House shall be the judge,” &c. “of the qualifications of its own members.” By the terms of this resolution both Houses must judge of the qualifications, &c., of each, instead of each House judging of its own members. By referring all credentials to this committee you deprive this House of being “the judge,” or of even expressing an opinion on the subject; neither House can act separately as the “judge;” but it requires both Houses, acting jointly, to be the “judges.”

By the Constitution each House is to act separately in judging of the qualifications of its own members, while by the resolution this right is denied, as it requires the concurrent action of both Houses before the members can be admitted to either. If three fourths of the members of this House desire to admit a member from Tennessee it cannot be done without the consent of the Senate, wherefore I hold that the resolution is in violation of the Constitution as it prohibits each House from the exercise of the constitutional right to judge of the qualifications, &c., of its own members, as this House cannot act upon the subject without the concurrent action of the Senate. By this new rule all propositions for the admission of members from the southern States must be referred, without debate or vote, to the joint committee on reconstruction. How, then, can this House judge of the qualifications and admit a member when it desires to do so? It may be said by rescinding the resolution. But can one House repeal a joint resolution? Thus the Constitution is held in abeyance by joint resolution of Congress.

Again, article one, section two, of the Constitution provides that “each State shall have at least one Representative;” and by article one, section three, the Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislature thereof, for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote. Yet Congress has been in session for over five months, and in palpable violation of this plain constitutional provision has persistently refused any representation either in the Senate or House from eleven States of the Union, although from some of them, at least, loyal Senators and Representatives, duly elected and qualified, with legal credentials, have been knocking at our doors asking admission, unless they would consent to abandon the great fundamental principle which lies at the basis of our form of government, that each State has the exclusive right to determine who shall exercise the elective franchise, and to manage and control her own domestic institutions and civil polity in her own way, subject only to the Constitution of the United States and the laws made in pursuance thereof. Congress can only lawfully exercise the delegated powers, all others “are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.” Many of the States now represented in Congress do not conform to the invidious discriminations of the disunion committee. Why not exclude their members for the same reason?

Sir, I have not been disappointed in the action of the committee charged with the specific duty of reconstruction. According to all parliamentary rules and usages, it should have been constructed with a majority favorable to the object with which it was specially intrusted. I fear this orphan child of reconstruction will never receive much nourishment from the breast of its unnatural, unfriendly mother. Like military courts-martial, the committee was organized to convict. Their object has been to dismember and destroy, not to restore or build up. This “central directory” has held its star-chamber meetings in secret conclave. Still the country could readily divine what such a committee would naturally be doing. After two months’ session with the credentials of members from eleven States before them, the first bantling ushered into the presence of the House, nurtured on the fructifying pap of the “committee of public safety,” was a constitutional amendment to deprive these unrepresented States of some twenty or thirty Representatives in Congress, to which they are entitled under the Constitution, and without permitting them to be heard by Representatives or otherwise. It is sought to enforce an odious constitutional provision upon eight million people, against their will, and without their assent.

Then a very modest appropriation of $10,000 is asked for to enable them to manufacture testimony in favor of disunion and against the restoration policy of the Administration. Such a request was promptly granted by such a Congress. Next, twenty-five thousand extra copies of voluminous ex parte testimony, prepared by the secret junta, are ordered to be printed, expressly as a campaign document, to be used for the purpose of engendering sectional strife and exciting personal animosities and bitterness between the people. Thus increased taxes are imposed upon the people to further party schemes, disserve the Union, and misrepresent and malign the President.

After three months of the most excruciating labor the “directory” introduce another proposition to admit the State of Tennessee into the Union. The State of Tennessee out of the Union! If so, then the rebellion was a success, the Union severed, and the Government destroyed. Sir, is this theory of a dismembered Union and dead States true? If so, when, where, and by what means was it accomplished? The insurgents passed ordinances of secession. Did we acknowledge their binding force or validity? Surely not; we held them as absolutely null and void. They claimed the right to take certain States out of the Union, and, to enforce it, appealed to the arbitrament of arms. We denied the right and accepted the tendered wager of battle. They waged war against the Government for the purpose of taking the States out of the Union; we prosecuted it on our part to keep them in the Union; and inasmuch as it is admitted that the contest was decided in our favor, it is difficult to understand how the committee come to the sage conclusion that the insurgent States are out of the Union. If this theory be true, the present incumbent of the executive chair is ineligible to the office of President, not having been prior to his election “fourteen years a resident of the United States.”

Sir, the sophistical theory of a dismembered Union is false and fallacious, and cannot stand the scrutinizing test of investigation. According to the reasoning of the committee, the singular anomaly is presented that the States, in some mysterious manner, without any person knowing when, where, or how, actually got out of the Union, though the rebellion collapsed and the Government triumphed. It is urged that the States were guilty of treason, and, therefore, dead States, out of the Union. Every lawyer knows that a State cannot commit treason. Tennessee, never having been out, requires no enabling act at our hands for readmission. Though temporarily overrun by rebellion, she is not obliterated or torn by ruthless hands from her orbit. She still stands as one of the States in the national constellation, without any constitutional right or lawful authority on her part to secede or on ours to force her out.

The Union of these States can only be destroyed or dismembered by consent or force. Consent has not been given, and force has been overcome by force. Thank God, the terrible fratricidal conflict is terminated. The Union has survived the shock and still lives. The nation's blood and treasure have not been sacrificed for naught. If these eleven States are actually out of the Union, why were some of their Representatives retained in Congress, without objection, after the passage of their ordinances of secession and during the prosecution of the war? In August, 1861, Congress imposed a direct tax on these eleven States of between five and six million dollars, which recognized them as being in the Union. In March, 1862, in apportioning representation among the States, fifty-seven members were assigned to the eleven States whose Representatives are now excluded from this Hall. Why apportion them Representatives in Congress if they were out of the Union?

Article four, section three, of the Constitution provides that "no new State shall be formed or erected within the jurisdiction of any other State, nor any State be formed by the junction of two or more States, or parts of States, without the consent of the States concerned as well as of the Congress." Under and by virtue of this provision the State of Virginia was divided, the State of West Virginia admitted by the consent of the Legislature of Virginia, thereby recognizing her as a State in the Union, and the action of her Legislature as valid in giving their consent to her dismemberment.

It is well known that President Lincoln always recognized and regarded the States within the Union, and urged in public and private upon his party the admission of Representatives from the State of Louisiana into Congress. In the adoption of the constitutional amendment abolishing slavery the States lately in rebellion were distinctly recognized as being in the Union, for that purpose, by the Administration. The Supreme Court of the United States recently, with but one dissenting voice, decided to take up and dispose of the business in said States, thus adjudicating that they are States in the Union, and not Territories or conquered provinces.

Sir, I have now shown that for the last four years every department of the Government, executive, legislative, and judicial, has uniformly recognized them as States in the Union, and repudiated the suicidal dogma of a destroyed Union and dead States. The chairman of the committee on reconstruction mooted his favorite theory of conquered territory and dead States in the Thirty-Eighth Congress, but with all his popularity as a party leader and acknowledged ability he was unable to control twenty votes of his own party in favor of the proposition; and when introduced by him in the Baltimore convention was voted down by an overwhelming majority in the house of his own friends. Now, since the meeting of this Congress, new light seems suddenly to have dawned upon the darkness. Heretofore an intimation that the Union was disrupted or severed was regarded as disloyal, but now it constitutes the very quintessence of patriotism. Now, the President and his Cabinet, as well as the brave officers and soldiers who periled their lives that the Union might live, are to be ostracized and repudiated because they refuse to keep step to the revolutionary strides of these radical destructionists.

Mr. Speaker, can it be possible that honorable members are serious when they propose to hold as conquered provinces, and govern by military force eleven States, with eight or ten millions of people, for an indefinite period of time without representation? Will they obliterate these States, and strike eleven stars from the national galaxy? Would they create a Hungary, a Poland, or an Ireland? Shall we turn upon our fathers, abjure our past history, and take to our embrace theories of government drawn from the despotisms of the Old World? I implore gentlemen to pause and consider before they peril all we hold most dear by taking a step so pregnant with danger: to let reason and justice, and not passion or party considerations, control their action. A great responsibility from which we cannot, if we would, divest ourselves devolves upon this Congress. Why should we longer delay the full and complete restoration of the Union? Is there anything to be gained by procrastination? If, as is alleged, there still exists in some parts of the South unkind and even bitter feelings toward the North, it is not likely that oppression and tyranny on our part or the enforcement of the anti-American doctrine of "taxation without representation" will tend to diminish it or increase their respect and love for us. The southern people committed a grave error, and were guilty of a great wrong in waging war against a beneficent Government; and they have been greatly humiliated and severely punished. In their penury and penitence they ask to come back. Like the prodigal son, they have wandered far from their father's house, wasted their substance in riotous living, have been feeding upon husks, have come to themselves and turned their faces homeward. Now, what shall we do? Shall we imitate the elder brother by getting angry, or the kind-hearted father who saw the returning prodigal when afar off, and went forth to meet him? Sir, for myself I am frank to say I have no heart to turn my back upon the returning penitent. If there are still roots of bitterness springing up in the hearts of this people, the surest and most expeditious way to eradicate them is by justice tempered with mercy. Two antagonistic plans, radically different, are pending before Congress and the country:

1. The plan of the committee of fifteen, of a severed Union, dead States, conquered provinces, and public enemies, to be taxed without representation and governed by arbitrary force.

2. The plan of the President: that the ordinances of secession were void; that the States still live and are in the Union; that taxation without representation is against the genius of our Government; that legally elected loyal Representatives should be admitted to their seats in Congress.

On these issues I cannot doubt as to my duty, and shall cordially support the restoration policy of the Administration in preference to the destructive policy of Congress. One will build up, the other destroy; one is life, the other death, to the nation. It is my deliberate conviction, founded upon the best information at my command, that the controlling minds on that committee neither desire nor intend that the Union shall ever be restored. They fan the dying embers of sectional prejudice and passion; they pretend that there is danger of another outbreak in the South, and that the freedmen will be reenslaved, and thereby hope to conceal their covert designs upon the liberties of the people, and more effectually break down the reserved rights of the States, undermine the foundations of constitutional liberty, and erect upon its ruins a consolidated despotism. I say it in sorrow, not in malice, and sincerely hope I may be mistaken.

Mr. Speaker, paradoxical as it may appear, there are persons in this country, nurtured in our midst, basking beneath the protecting ægis of our flag, inimical to our free institutions, hostile to our form of government, ready to overturn it whenever a favorable opportunity is presented; nor, sir, are they confined to the south side of Mason and Dixon's line. The "hammering" has been going on at both ends; at the South it has now ceased. If like obstructions impede our progress at the other end of the line, they must get out of the way, or a like remedy must be applied. The great mass of our people are devotedly attached to our institutions and form of government, and will not tolerate treason or disunion in any section. History is replete with instances in which friendship and devotion have been assumed for the purpose of stealthily disarming apprehended danger and destroying the victim. We may find, when too late, that we have nurtured in our bosoms venomous reptiles ready to strike with poisoned fangs at the heart of the cherished and revered institutions of our fathers.

Forewarned we are forearmed, while those who betray with a kiss are most to be dreaded and shunned.

Sir, why are the threescore and ten constitutional amendments thrust upon the consideration of the present Congress? More in number than in all previous Congresses combined. It is a circumstance pregnant with meaning, ominous of the deep-seated hatred and utter contempt with which that instrument is regarded by a majority of the members of this Congress. Indeed, it is thought unfashionable and in bad taste to speak a word in praise of the old Constitution. If all these amendments were adopted there would scarcely be anything left of it. To us, truly, has ignorance been bliss; for over three fourths of a century we have been plodding along with our old Constitution. Washington, Madison, Franklin, Hamilton, and their compeers, made it. The benighted and sluggish intellects of such men as Jackson, Clay, Webster, and Benton, were impervious to this latter day light, and died in blissful ignorance that a Constitution they had lived under and cherished was so radically defective in protecting the rights and liberties of the people. How weak and frail is human judgment! How strange and inscrutable are the ways of Providence, that the nation should have been suffered to grope its way in darkness so long! But now, suddenly and miraculously as the conversion of the Apostle of the Gentiles, pretended statesmen in the Thirty-Ninth Congress rise up, men assuming to have more purity than Washington, more intellect than Madison and Jefferson, and discover that our form of government is a failure; that our admirable Constitution, with all its symmetrical checks and balances, is an abhorrent thing, to be detested and spurned, and wholly unfit for this moral and enlightened age!

Mr. Speaker, I am sometimes oppressed with serious misgivings, whether gentlemen who find so many radical defects in our Constitution are really in favor of the form of government under which we live. I prefer to let well enough alone, to—

"Bear those ills we have,
Than fly to others that we know not of."

And I trust it will not be esteemed discourteous to the House when I announce that I have as much confidence in the capacity and integrity of the men who made our Constitution as I have in the "central directory," which, if not checked in their revolutionary schemes, will destroy it. I concur in and commend to the House the views of the President so felicitously expressed in relation to amending the Constitution.

Now, I submit, Mr. Speaker, for the candid and dispassionate consideration of the House, whether the paramount interest of the country does not demand at our hands that we should stop this tinkering with the Constitution and apply ourselves to the necessary and legitimate business before us. The people expect and will demand this at our hands. They are grievously oppressed with onerous taxes; let us try and ameliorate their condition and lighten those heavy burdens. Retrenchment of expenses should commence at once in every branch and department of the public service. The tariff should be repealed or reduced to a revenue standard; the lords of the loom are amassing princely fortunes at the expense of the consumer. The Army and Navy should be at once reduced to a peace establishment. The internal revenue is oppressive and bears very unequally, especially on mechanics and artisans; the $600 exemption should be increased to $1,000, and large incomes of $20,000 and upward should pay a higher tax, say twenty to twenty-five per cent. The laws in relation to fishing bounties is class legislation for the benefit of the few at the expense of the consumer, and should be repealed. The nation's gratitude, as well as the claims of justice to our country's brave defenders, demand the passage of a law for the equalization of bounties. These important measures are kept back and neglected in the prevailing mania of this Congress to get rid of the old Constitution.

If we will take up the necessary business, sink the partisan in the patriot, and leave President making to the people, to whom it properly belongs, we still have time and opportunity to render invaluable services to the country. I am not unmindful that you have sacrifices to make and prejudices to overcome in rising above party to the higher plans of statesmanship. I will not claim exemption from its influence; perhaps we have all been more or less subject to its bonds. From boyhood I have been identified with the Democratic party; it may have committed some errors—no finite organization is perfect—still I have an abiding faith in the correctness of its principles and the purity of its motives, and would sooner confide the safety and destiny of our country to its keeping than any party that ever existed in the tide of time; and yet I have ever held in contempt a mere partisan for the sake of party. Our paramount duties and obligations to the country rise infinitely above all such paltry ties and considerations.

Against the judgment and clear convictions of those with whom it has been my pride to act, the people by decisive majorities have sustained the party in power; that expression of opinion, though not according with our judgment, is at least entitled to our respect; consequently, upon entering upon the duties of this Congress I accepted the situation, without any disposition to interpose factious opposition to such measures as the people had indorsed; with an anxious desire to coöperate in the adoption of such measures as would secure enduring peace, prosperity, and unity to the whole country. It, however, soon became apparent that a breach between the President and the radical portion of the party was inevitable, that new political affiliations were forming, old issues becoming obsolete, new ones coming up, and in these mutations strange bed-fellows and old antagonism thrown together.

Viewing the situation merely from a party stand-point, the Opposition would have affiliated with the disaffected faction and opposed the Administration. Such was not our course. Being in favor of the Union and a restoration of fraternal relations between the different States, we gave these measures our support, although inaugurated by an Administration which we had opposed. I am neither an opposer or follower of President Johnson, but will sustain him when right and oppose him when wrong. He has said and done many things, and probably will again, in which I cannot concur. Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, candor and justice require me to say I am deeply impressed with the conviction that President Johnson, considering the new and embarrassing circumstances by which he is surrounded, is doing the best he can for the restoration of the Union and the interest of the whole country, and thus believing, I would be unworthy the high trust confided to me, and of the constituency I have the honor to represent, if I failed to sustain him. I see no reason to impugn his motives, doubt his honesty, or question his capacity. He has served the country long and faithfully in important official positions. His early political training and antecedents are such as to give hope to the friends of the Union and constitutional liberty.

This is no time for captious or factious legislation. The Union of the States and the liberties of the people are imperiled; their true friends must stand unitedly together battling against secession and disunion wherever, North or South, they may show their hydra head or cloven foot. On these issues the President is right, and we must sustain him and hold up his hands. Now, I submit to all candid and fair-minded men whether the ribaldry and vituperation daily heaped upon the President by this radical faction is just and fair. Is he a dog to be muzzled, or a slave that dare not speak? Is an American President to crouch like a whipped spaniel at the feet of revolutionary disunionists or treasonable malplotters? When he communicates his views to the Senate, founded upon information derived from the Lieutenant General and others, in relation to the condition of affairs in the southern States, as he was bound to do by his duty and oath of office, he is charged by a leading radical Senator with making a "white-washing report," intending to convey the impression that he had perjured himself by furnishing a false report. When he intimates to a Senator his opinion in regard to amending the Constitution, the chairman of the committee of fifteen [Mr. STEVENS] tells the House that kings have lost their heads for slighter offense, and brands him as a "usurper."

These are grave charges to be made against the President of their own choosing. Of what heinous crime has Andrew Johnson been guilty, that he should be thus abused by these Robespierres and Dantons? Is it because he is the friend of the people and the people's Government, and opposed to traitors and treason North and South? Has he not breasted the storm, stood firm and unmoved as an adamant rock, while the surging waves of disunion and treason dashed wildly and madly around him? Has he not always been the fearless and incorruptible champion of the rights and liberties of the people? Ah, there is the rub; they know he is too firm to be forced and too pure to be bought. Southern traitors unsuccessfully tried both. He denounced and fought them until they acknowledged themselves whipped, laid down their arms, and sued for pardon. Then his generous nature revolted at the meanness of wreaking vengeance upon a subdued and fallen foe. Criticisms have been indulged in, that in 1861 treason was not nipped in the bud, but then, as now, he scented the danger in the tainted air, and was among the first to raise his warning voice and denounce the treasonable conspiracies against the integrity of the Union.

If these maligners are for the Union, the President is not in their way; but if against it, they will find they have a hard road to travel; but when they show penitence, and retract their disunion sentiments, executive clemency will wipe out all their guilty stains. He is generous and humane, but when they attempt to drive him they will find him firm and unmoved, except by the right.

Mr. Speaker, the country has cause of gratitude that in this national crisis, in this day of extreme peril, the right man is in the right place. All is not lost that is in danger. The President stands as a wall of fire between the people and the revolutionary disunionists who would undermine the foundations of the Government that they might perpetuate their power, revel in peculation and public plunder.

Southern treason is among the things of the past. Northern disunionists must also be put down. The friends of the Union must stand firm and united, encouraging the heart and strengthening the hands of their great champion. As Aaron and Hur stayed up the hands of Moses that Israel might prevail against Amalek, so may our Aarons and Hurs stay up the hands of our Moses, that they may be steady, and before the going down of the sun on the November election our Joshuas will discomfit and utterly overthrow and put out of remembrance these disunion Amaleks. Mr. Speaker, I have an abiding faith that an overruling Providence shapes and directs the destinies of men and nations; that the same protecting hand that lead forth the children of Israel and gave them victory over their enemies; that watched over our feeble colonies in their infancy; gave us Washington to organize and lead our raw recruits and undisciplined militia against the mercenary hirelings and trained veterans of despotism; that gave us such men as Madison, Jefferson, Hamilton, and their compeers to found and establish the best Government the world ever saw; that gave us Jackson to nip treason in the bud, and by the wise and fearless exercise of the veto power throttled the United States Bank, has in these latter days vouchsafed to the nation the incorruptible Johnson to protect and defend the Constitution and preserve and maintain the rights and liberties of the people. His marked character renders him peculiarly adapted to the present crisis.

Springing from the people in the humble walks of life, his sympathies and associations have been with the laboring masses. He refers with pride and pleasure to the log cabin and the reminiscences of western frontier life where he spent his boyhood days. Starting out in life in the humble avocation of a tailor, without the advantages of an early education or rich and influential friends, he has by strength of intellect, application to business, untiring energy, and laudable ambition made his mark in the world, occupying alternately nearly every honorable position from justice of the peace to President. What a proud commentary is here presented for the contemplation of the friends of our free institutions. It is quite natural that Mr. Johnson should cherish a warm attachment and profound reverence for such a Government. He was devoted to and confided in the people, and they never forsook him. It is said he is a "usurper," a grave charge; but the public mind will feel at rest when advised that it emanates from the committee of fifteen, which was organized to convict. His "usurpation" consisted in the exercise of a constitutional prerogative of expressing his opinions on public affairs.

Again he is charged with being a "usurper" for vetoing the Freedmen's Bureau. Sir, that act is the crowning virtue in his life, and the brightest chaplet in his crown. A "usurper" would have accepted the proffered power and patronage, greater and more unlimited than was ever conferred on any President. If a usurper or tyrant, why did he decline it? Would the "directory" have rejected such immense patronage? Never. A measure which, if controlled by a "usurper," would have converted the Government into a military despotism. It provides for dividing the country into districts, with sub-districts of counties, parishes, &c., with hordes of officers, not elected by or amenable to the people on whom they are quartered, with summary power to try, convict, and punish without judicial process, trial by jury, writ of error, or appeal. These officers and agents may be white or black, and a negro may be sent from some other State to Illinois to sit in judgment on our civil officers and others and punish them "by fine not exceeding $1,000, or imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both," and they need not wait the slow process of execution, but ample provision is made for enforcing the judgment by the military, which may also consist of negroes.

It further provides for furnishing at Government expense, in each district, "the freedmen, their wives, and children, with provisions, clothing, fuel, and other supplies, medical stores, medical aid, transportation," &c. Nor is this all. The freedmen were to be educated and have school-houses erected at the public expense. Why should this odious distinction be made in this law against the whites on account of color? A person so fortunate as to have a black skin (a circumstance not under their control) can have "provisions," "clothing," "fuel," "and other supplies," "medical stores," "medical aid," "transportation" with school-houses and education at the Government expense, while the proscribed whites on account of prejudice against their color by this Congress may be hungry and naked and cold, without medical aid or medical supplies, or school-houses, or education, or free passes, and not a dollar can they get from the national coffers. The widows and orphans of our brave white soldiers, who gave their lives that the Union might live, are deprived by reason of their unfortunate color, though many of them are quite needy, from participating in this governmental charity bestowed upon colored persons with such munificence by this Congress.

A short time since a bill was forced through this House by a party vote, and under the pressure of the gag law, appropriating some $10,000,000 for the Freedmen's Bureau. And if the vetoed bill had become a law, the expense of this bureau would have been doubled or trebled. Except for the President's veto this vast burden would have been permanently entailed upon the labor and industry of the country, and coerced by the tax-gatherer from an overburdened people. I am unwilling to vote a tax on my constituents to support in idleness any class of people, white or black. I see no reason why a black man should not earn his support by the sweat of his brow as well as white men. And yet it is known that the galleries of this Hall have for the last five months been crowded with colored persons, who are housed, fed, and clothed at the public expense.

Mr. Speaker, I have no unkind feeling toward the unfortunate colored people; they are free; be it so. I hope it may prove to them a blessing, and am opposed to any law discriminating against them in the security and protection of life, liberty, person, property, and the proceeds of their labor. These civil rights all should enjoy. Beyond this I am not prepared to go, and those pretended friends who urge political and social equality, and conferring special privileges like those in the vetoed bill, are, in my judgment, the worst enemies of the colored race.

But it is objected that on the 22d of February the President made a speech at the White House to the people, in which he indulged in some strictures upon prominent persons as to their loyalty. When a Senator he was bold and fearless in his denunciations of conspirators and traitors against the integrity of the Union, and I know of no reason why he should be less so when representing the whole people as President of the United States. Indeed I have faith that the national inquest by a decisive majority will indorse the sentiments enunciated in that able and patriotic speech.

Again, his traducers charge that he actually suffered unfettered Democrats to stand around him listening to his speech; and that, too, without invoking the aid of provost marshals to hunt them down and incarcerate them in the military bastille on Capitol Hill. Sir, this is a charge of so grave a character I will not presume to interpose a justification. The speech is before the country, and approved by the people. It is well it was made. He is bound by the Constitution and his oath of office to "preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States," and "take care that the laws be faithfully executed." He is the representative of and directly amenable to the people, and when there is a revolutionary conspiracy plotted by a secret "directory" to disrupt the Union, subvert the Constitution, and flieh from the people their liberties, it is meet and proper, as well as his solemn duty, to appeal to the people, expose the perfidious treachery, and denounce the traitors. He had before he made that speech evinced extraordinary forbearance. A majority in Congress had excluded Representatives from eleven States, and virtually decided that the Union was destroyed. His motives and policy of restoration had been bitterly assailed and malignantly misrepresented by the star-chamber conclave and their abettors. They had besmeared him with their choicest Billingsgate, such as "usurper," "whitewasher," "tyrant," "traitor," "copperhead," "rebel," &c. Disparaging comparisons were drawn between him and certain negroes—Fred. Douglass and others. If he had kept silent under such provocations his meekness and humility would have obscured, if not totally eclipsed, that of Moses, the Israelitish lawgiver. He appealed to the patriotism and intelligence of the people, the true source of all power, in vindication of himself and his policy against the assaults of his enemies.

The occasion on which those fitly spoken words and golden sentiments were enunciated will form a memorable epoch in our history. From that day the power for evil was broken. Bad men are held up to the withering rebuke and contemptuous scorn of an outraged and indignant people, and the surging waves of fanaticism are stayed. "The man at the other end of the avenue" has spoken; the faction is paralyzed; the country breathes freer. Their cheeks blanch with terror as they hear the rumbling of the "earthquake." The volcano in its convulsive eruptions has ejected from its crater a solid column of pure Tennessee marble, so firm and immovable that the angry billows of disunion and the howling tempest of treason may dash around its lofty summit, spend their fury in vain, and fall harmless at its adamantine base, and "the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." The majority in Congress may, for the temporary respite left them, scold and snarl at their inevitable destiny; they may denounce the Administration, retard but not prevent the restoration of the Union. The President will stand firm; the people, irrespective of party, will rally to his standard when the integrity of the Union is menaced by open enemies or pretended friends. It is no time for the true friends of the country to fall out by the way; personal considerations and party schemes should remain in abeyance until the Union is restored.

The country has at no time within the last five years been in more imminent peril than at present; the radical majority in Congress are inaugurating measures of the most revolutionary character, which, if carried out, will inevitably involve the country in another fratricidal civil war. Calling themselves a Union party, these gentlemen oppose all measures for the restoration of the Union. Pretending to be a constitutional party, they endeavor to break down its safeguards and destroy it. Assuming to be an administration party, they denounce and oppose the Administration, its policy and friends. One Senator and three members of the House who were legally elected and justly entitled to their seats were voted out that they might increase their majority so as to pass their unconstitutional measures over the veto of the President. No member's seat is secure who opposes their schemes as long as they require votes to carry their measures. Obstacles are brushed out of their way like cobwebs; they stoop to conquer, and hold that the end sanctifies the means. They hope to perpetuate their power and political ascendancy by excluding from Congress and the ballot-box all who oppose their revolutionary schemes.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot flatter myself that I shall be able to present any arguments or considerations to this House which will induce gentlemen to pause and consider. I wish I could. The only hope left is in an appeal to the people, the patriotic masses, who love country more than party. Our patriotic fathers laid broad and deep the solid foundations upon which the magnificent superstructure of civil and religious liberty were reared; for near eighty years, in peace and war, it has answered all the purposes of a most perfect government. It may have faults; what form of human government has not? It has furnished protection and security to all classes of our citizens wherever our flag floats, at home and abroad, on the land and the sea. Our national progress and prosperity, in power, wealth, and civilization, has been a marvel to ourselves and eclipsed the nations of the world. Why experiment with so rich and precious a boon? If we are blessed with a better Government than is to be found elsewhere had we not better bear with it until we know that amendments will insure improvements? It has cost a vast amount of blood and treasure, and is worthy of preservation. It is the only true model for free representative government. It is the asylum of the oppressed, and a secure refuge from the crumbling despotisms of the Old World. We receive with open arms and greet with a hearty welcome the downtrodden people as they come flocking to our shores.

The eyes of the world are upon us. The great experiment of the capacity of man for self-government is being tested. The despotisms and monarchies of the Old World prophesy our utter failure, and that faction and party are the rock upon which we will strike and crumble into fragments. In the meanwhile the friends of free government in the Old World look wistfully on with emotions alternating between hope and fear. This munificent inheritance of free government, bequeathed to us by our cherished and revered ancestry, founded upon the corner-stone of the right of the people to govern, is all our most cherished hopes or loftiest ambition could desire.

A great and responsible charge has been committed to our keeping. As our mental vision looks at the vista before us, seeking to pierce the veil which hides from us the obscure future, we are solemnly impressed with the conviction that the imperiled destiny for weal or woe of this generation, as well as of unborn millions, hang tremblingly in the balance. It is my ardent desire, my sincere hope, that we may severally so discharge our respective duties, under the vast responsibilities that devolve upon us, as to redound to the true interest, highest honor, and perpetual glory of our common country. That when we leave these representative halls for the last time, to be occupied by those who succeed us, when we sever our public relations and retire from this congressional forum, around which cluster many fond and endearing remembrances, to the sanctity of the domestic circle and the quiet shades of private life, we may feel the proud satisfaction of having conscientiously acted our part in this momentous national crisis, in this convulsive struggle for the Constitution of our country and the liberties of the people. I have no higher ambition, no loftier aspiration.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. NEWELL. Mr. Speaker, during all the years of the history of the country the subject of a tariff for revenue and protection purposes has agitated the public mind. With some the question of the revenue has been its primary and that of protection its secondary object; while with others protection has been looked upon as its primary and revenue its secondary consideration. By all parties, and nearly all writers, however, the necessity of a tariff for revenue, which of course would incidentally protect native industry, has been acknowledged and advocated. Nor is the United States an exception to all other civilized and even partially civilized nations as respects the use and necessity of a tariff for the purpose of revenue. The student of history can scarcely point to a country noted for the industry and prosperity of its people which does not owe a great portion of such industry and prosperity to the operation of a judicious system of revenue raised from imports. Even in the cases of countries which at the present day stand forward as the special champions of free trade, their principal revenue is derived from tariffs heavily discriminating against the products of other communities and nations. In no single instance, indeed, do we find absolute free trade to be the rule in any one nation. On the contrary it is not even the exception to the prevailing policy of civilization at the present day, which seeks to build up native industry as the parent seeks to prepare the child, by a course of discipline, instruction, and practical application of these for the varied duties of everyday life. As well might the parent send forth his child ignorant and unskilled in the means of procuring a livelihood as for a young nation to strive to contend with an old one in those peculiar branches of industry which require a large measure of skill and a vast accumulation of capital for their successful and profitable production in competition with the combined talent, industry, and wealth of old and settled communities.

The advocates of free trade forget that national art requires the protecting hand of the central Government as individual art does the fostering hand of the parent. In fact, in leaving the confines of the mere savage condition of society, every step toward a higher and better civilization is made under the protecting ægis of government and law, while, as one phase after another of industrial progress is reached, the people are compelled to legislate to protect the rights of every particular class and every special industrial development; in other words, to provide that the weak are not overpowered by the strong, but that every individual capacity in man has a chance to bring forth fruits meet for the sustentation and preservation of the whole society. Thus the history of civilization has been simply the history of a series of progressive steps by which man has subdued nature to the various uses of society by the organization of labor under the protection of the central authority. In the feudal ages, the free cities were originally communities, under the lead of elected chiefs, organized for mutual protection against the free traders, the robbers, and banditti of those periods. In time their chiefs ceased to protect, and, indeed, became the oppressors of their people. Then the people appealed for protection to the central governments, the emperors. Thus feudalism was protection from those who preferred plunder to honest toil; and modern society, under the lead of national unity, is simply the protection of the whole people, their art and industry, from the adverse competition of communities, in which, under exceptional conditions of civilization, the largest amount of labor consistent with continued existence is extracted from the impoverished and famishing many by the wealthy and pampered few. It is as necessary, in modern times, that society should protect itself from the competition of those who grew rich by oppressing the poor, as in ancient times it was necessary to protect itself from those outside robbers and barbarians who preyed directly upon its weaker members.

The so-called democratic idea, that neither from oppression of the rich or powerful at home nor from the competition of the same classes in our intercourse with foreign nations should society protect itself, would end in anarchy and civil war, and finally in a return to the savage state in which the law of brute force and the condition of native stupidity would have their most perfect development. Free traders contend "that is the best Government which governs the least." But how, then, is it that as civilization gives place to barbarism, Governments become more complex, more varied in their duties, and more extended in the spheres of their action? Either our boasted civilization is a failure and barbarism preferable thereto, or the facts of history give the lie to the theories of free-trade philosophers. Thus, although free trade and simple Governments, with limited central powers, may be the normal conditions of a barbaric people, protection and complex Governments, with extended central powers, are the normal conditions of civilized nations. Barbaric nations, composed of tribes acknowledging but a limited allegiance to a central authority, are weak, both as regards internal order and external defense; while on the other hand, civilized nations, composed of communities acknowledging an extended allegiance to a central authority, are strong both for purposes of internal order and external defense. In considering the question of a tariff for revenue or protection, then, we should, at once dismiss from our minds the fallacy that because it tends to the centralization of power it is consequently opposed to the liberties of the people. This is merely the clap-trap of the political demagogue, and, like the cry of State rights, so successfully used to lead the ignorant and unwary into rebellion against the central authority, should have no weight with the more intelligent and better-educated citizen.

Another free-trade fallacy is, that the protection extended by a tariff on imports to the manufacturing portion of the community is at the expense of the agricultural classes, who, in return for their outlay in increased prices for manufactured articles, receive no compensating benefits whatever. I will not go into a lengthy disquisition upon this branch of the subject. To do so would be but to travel over ground heretofore so often occupied by abler parties. I will say, however, in passing, that the superior markets for agricultural products created by home manufactures must always largely counterbalance the enhanced prices of manufactures, while the tendency of protection to foster such manufactures must ever be to cheapen their products. Capital and labor are always attracted to the most profitable sources of investment, thereby facilitating the tendency to greater cheapness of production. This is the recognized and universal law which governs supply and demand, and is uniform under all conditions of human society. But admitting, for the sake of argument, that in order to foster and encourage manufactures in a merely agricultural condition of society, it is necessary to tax the general public in the outset, on account of certain conditions of labor or capital in older communities, I contend that such tax is a necessary condition of that stage of civilization which calls for its imposition. Nations, like individuals, have their periods of childhood, youth, and manhood. It is necessary that the child should be instructed in the duties of the life upon which he is to enter, and that instruction must be at the expense of individuals or the State at large. Modern civilization recognizes the positive duty and necessity of State education. Now, a merely agricultural people are in a condition of imperfect development. They are in the childhood of national existence. Let them remain in such condition and they will never attain to that acme of prosperity or of civil or military distinction which falls to the lot of their more progressive neighbors. Indeed, in time they become the prey of their more powerful and prosperous rivals. If the State finds it absolutely necessary to tax itself for the education of its children in the theoretical duties of life, why should it not find it still more necessary to tax itself for the purposes of the practical application of those duties?

It will be noticed that the time and expense incurred in preparing an individual for the duties of life are apparently out of all proportion to the benefits derived from those duties. So the expense of preparing a new people, a young and growing nation, for the actual strife of existence appears out of all proportion to the results. But such an expense must be cheerfully borne, or the nation will never take its proper rank among its sister States. As regards modern civilization, what strength has a merely agricultural community? It has the strength of brute force, as compared to modern science and skill, with all their improvements in arts and arms. The southern States of our Republic gloried in this strength; boasted of their agricultural wealth, declared cotton to be king, and defied the intelligence, skill, and science of the North. We all know the result. And such result must always follow a contest between a purely agricultural people and a country in which agriculture, manufactures, and commerce are blended in one harmonious whole, each dependent on all, and all combining to protect and preserve each. But as a child must force itself or be forced by its preceptors or parents to prepare itself for the duties of life, so must a merely agricultural people force themselves or be forced to prepare themselves for a more advanced condition of civilization, in which employments are more varied, and the resources of the nation more perfectly developed. Protection, then, like education, though possibly an abnormal condition of national manhood, is the normal condition of national adolescence.

Since the formation of this Government the opposing ideas of two great men have been struggling for the mastery, and that struggle, apparently, culminated in the late rebellion. For a time it was doubtful whether the followers of Thomas Jefferson or of Alexander Hamilton would control the Government, but the struggle at length, apparently, terminated in favor of the former.

Now, Mr. Jefferson and his followers had a horror of progress in the direction of that civilization which was the rule as respects every leading nation in christendom; while Mr. Hamilton and his followers saw that, even if we would not, the circumstances of our geographical position compelled us to follow in the wake of older countries or to relapse into mere barbarism. Mr. Jefferson would fain have preserved the United States in a mere agricultural condition of existence. He looked upon large cities as sores on the body-politic, and his followers regarded banks and manufacturing corporations as soulless monsters which were continually devouring the substance of the people. Mr. Hamilton, on the other hand, accepted the conditions of modern civilization as the normal state of society, and desired to prepare the people for participation in their blessings and for the mitigation of their evils. Thus we find the Democracy taking for its mission the attempt to preserve society in its merely agricultural condition, in that period of happy childhood, to advance out of which, in the view of that party, was but to encounter nothing but disappointment, distress, and finally universal decay and death. The mission of the Whig and Republican parties, on the other hand, is to prepare the nation for that higher condition and more varied walks of industry which are essential to advanced civilization. The extreme conservatism of the Democratic party was illustrated in its attempt to preserve even slavery itself, the most simple and child-like form of human industry, and one only suited to the most primitive condition of merely agricultural existence. It is not to be wondered at, then, that a party so conservative of a condition of society, which rendered manufacturing industry in its modern form totally impossible, would oppose all measures for the protection of such industry itself. It was not thus so much the principle of protection itself which the older Democratic lights opposed as the attempt to elevate manufactures in the United States to that position and standing in the community which would give them a controlling voice in the councils of the nation and a social status of the most towering proportions. No doubt the leaders of the Democracy instinctively felt that as manufacturing industry prospered, a system founded on an entirely opposite principle must decay; that the wealth and progress of New England would be a standing reproach to the poverty and stationary character of southern civilization. To this day your fanatical secessionist denounces the thrift of New England, and your provident New Englander the shiftlessness of the South. They represent the extremes of our national civilization.

I have said that a merely agricultural country is but in its adolescence, and lacks the bone and sinew of manhood. To be sure it may give raw recruits in abundance to a wealthier and more powerful neighbor on which it is dependent. In this way did Scotland in early times, and does Ireland to this day, supply England with men to fight its battles. In this way does India supply Great Britain with the raw material by which its outlying dependencies are kept in subjection. In this way does Russia draw from her vast steppes those agricultural laborers who fill the ranks of her monster battalions. But it is the manufacturing and commercial elements of those countries, and the aristocratic families in alliance with them, which direct all this brute force for good or evil. Even the sinews of war are directly contributed by manufactures and commerce. What could we have done in the late war for national existence if it had not been that the manufacturing and commercial interests of the country were on our side? An agricultural country cannot stand the taxation necessary to an expensive and long-continued war. Southern finances broke down at the very outset of the rebellion, while northern gathered strength with its progress. Because we were then an agricultural country, we could not sustain the vast accumulation of the old continental money. And on the other hand, the manufacturing interest of Great Britain enabled her to wage a war of a quarter of a century with Napoleon and to subsidize all Europe against him. Had she been a merely agricultural country he might have portioned out Europe as he pleased among the members of his family.

But let me illustrate the wealth and power which manufactures give to a nation in modern times by reference to the sources of our own internal revenue. These sources will show at once the superiority of a manufacturing, as regards the sinews of war, over a merely agricultural people. In round numbers, the receipts of internal revenue for the fiscal year 1865 were $211,000,000. Of this amount the New England States, together with the sea-board States of New York, Pennsylvania, and New Jersey, contributed nearly $150,000,000, while all the western States and Territories, including those on the Pacific slope, contributed but about $40,000,000. And in the western States and Territories those portions devoted to manufactures and commerce contributed the great bulk of the revenue. Thus one district in Illinois contributed more than all the others. And so of other States. Here is food for earnest reflection. If manufactures can contribute such immense sums for purposes of the highest public good—the preservation of the life of the nation—how much can they not contribute for purposes of private use and benefit? Besides contributing thus largely to the public necessity, manufacturing districts also absorb a much larger proportional amount of the national circulation, thus not only saving interest to the Government, but also, by increasing the avenues of industry, furnishing employment to thousands of people. To illustrate, let me take the boot and shoe trade of Massachusetts. The capital invested in this trade last year was $10,037,474; the gross value of stock used $25,040,544; the value of boots and shoes manufactured $52,915,245; the number of male persons employed in manufacture 42,626; of females 12,534; total 55,160. These persons manufactured during the year 7,249,921 pairs of boots and 24,620,660 pairs of shoes.

But this boot and shoe trade is but one of those important branches of manufacture in New England which have contributed so much to the wealth, prosperity, and happiness of her people. Some twenty-six of the leading cities and towns of New England produce products valued at from one to thirty-six million dollars each, and give employment to a large number of persons, male and female. It is calculated that the consumption in the United States of iron, steel, copper, lead, zinc, woolen and cotton goods, leather, and glass is not less than $1,000,000,000 in value. In a few years this consumption will be increased one half. Now, suppose we were compelled to purchase all this vast amount of production from abroad, it is evident that it would exceed all the gold, cotton, and all other commodities annually exported, besides leaving us in debt for over one half the amount. But we should also be compelled to pay greatly enhanced prices for the articles imported, as the demand would be materially increased, while Great Britain and France would obtain complete control of our markets. Fortunately for us, however, the foreign imports for 1864–65 did not much exceed $100,000,000 in value. For 1865–66 I regret these imports will probably exceed double this amount; but should our manufacturing establishments be broken up, the effect upon the country would be fearful to contemplate. In some parts of the West agricultural products could not be given away; wheat would decline to twenty-five cents per bushel; wages would fall in proportion; the fate of Ireland, Turkey, and Spain, which are reduced to mere dependencies of the wealthy manufacturers of Great Britain, would be ours. The public generally are not aware that nearly ninety per cent. of the manufactured goods consumed in this country are the product of the United States. If they were, the freetrader's cry, that protection is obtained at the expense of the consumer, would be robbed of half its terrors. The truth is the foreign import, like our foreign export of agricultural products into Great Britain, is, at least, in periods of normal trade and commerce, but a tithe of the home consumption. It serves, however, to give the foreign manufacturer a lever by which he can operate injuriously on our home market; at one time lowering prices to a point entirely unremunerative to the native manufacturer, and then, when that manufacturer is compelled to succumb to the pressure, raising them to figures far higher than those from which they had fallen. In this way the foreign manufacturer and capitalist extracts the loss he had been at in the effort to break down the home manufacturer and capitalist from the pocket of the home consumer. In a few months in this manner he may destroy the labors of years, throw thousands out of employment, and cause a depression of our home industry which will take years to recover from, a destruction of capital which it will take a decade to recreate, and a disorganization of labor which may never be restored.

It is the internal trade, created by our manufactures, that builds up the country and unites every distant portion of it as with hooks of steel. Behold our vast network of railroads; see the amount of business performed by these roads; the immense number of persons to whom they give employment, from the artificer who builds the complicated engines and magnificent passenger cars to the laborer who constructs the track and keeps it in repair. Then glance at our river and lake steamboats, our canal-barges, our coastwise steamers and ships of all kinds. What is our foreign trade, extensive as it is, and attracting as it does the admiration of the world, to all this traffic, involving an outlay of thousands of millions and giving employment to hundreds of thousands of industrious and enterprising people? But nearly all this great travel and traffic is supported by our home manufactures. It is well known that a vast amount of the immense agricultural products which center in Chicago, Milwaukee, Detroit, Buffalo, and other inland cities never reaches the sea-board, but is manufactured or consumed at various points on the route. Thus New England and Pennsylvania, and even New York, are better markets for the West than Great Britain or France. In the case of these latter countries other nations enter into competition with our products shipped to them, which compels shippers to regulate their prices accordingly. On the other hand, the West has no competitor in our home markets save Canada, and I trust the repeal of the late reciprocity treaty will do away with the injurious effects of that also. But even the expense of shipment from the West to the East eats up the profits of the agriculturist. During the past year corn has been consumed for fuel in portions of Illinois and Iowa. Does not such a fact prove the absolute necessity of a home market for agricultural products and its great benefit in increasing the purchasing power of a community? How immensely is the purchasing power of Pennsylvania increased by her manufacture of iron and her production of coal? How much poorer would she not be were she compelled to import all these vast amounts of the prime necessities of modern civilization? Would not her furnaces die out, her railroads become useless, her great cities decay, and the entire community tend toward barbarism? But what would take place in Pennsylvania in the event of the cessation of her iron and coal trade would only be a sample of what might be seen all over the United States were our manufacturing industry prostrated at the feet of foreign competition and foreign capital. We must preserve this great internal trade and industry, built up at the cost of so much blood and treasure, from the competition of the cheap labor of Europe.

Free trade presents to the American people but two eventualities. Either we must, under its influence, see our manufactures destroyed, or we must reduce the wages of labor to the European standard. In the first event we would place not only ourselves, but the foreign laborers, at the mercy of the capitalists of Europe. In the second, we would introduce into American social life that degradation of labor which is little better than slavery itself. America would then cease to be the refuge of the oppressed of every clime, while the gulf, at all times, unfortunately even in the most favored countries, separating the rich from the poor, would be so widened that mutual hate and distrust would inflame men's minds and create materials which the political demagogue would be constantly fanning into the flame of revolution. In a country and political community in which universal suffrage is the acknowledged inherent right of the people, a state of things in which the interests of labor and capital would be at variance precisely in the ratio that the numbers on one side and the amount on the other increased, and in which the masses had the means of destroying the existing order in their own hands, the political condition would be fearful to contemplate. On the other hand, the only hope for the continuance of republican institutions lies in such an adjustment of the rewards of industry that the laborer shall not only be properly compensated, but be left free to select that employment which is in consonance with the bent of his genius. Every man is born with an aptitude for some particular pursuit in life. It is this diversity which tends to that variety, as necessary in the economy of artificial or industrial life as it is in the economy of nature itself. All men cannot be farmers or physicians or lawyers. On the other hand, the more we are able to vary the industry of a country the greater the number of avenues to employment which we provide. In old, agricultural communities manufactures must be created for the employment of the surplus population or that population must vegetate in idleness, degenerate into vicious habits, or emigrate to other countries. This is but the history of the social life of every people. Now, the factory would not only keep the young men at home, but also create a market for the products of the old. Thus the community would progress toward the goal of social existence, which is when the three great industrial interests of life—agriculture, manufactures, and commerce—are so blended and harmonized as to act and react upon one another, and thus become so mutually dependent that an injury done to one would be felt as an injury to the whole.

But by this comparison between a merely agricultural country and one in which manufactures have been so developed as to add immensely to its wealth and prosperity, I do not mean to be understood as at all disparaging the relative importance of agriculture itself. On the contrary, I regard agriculture as the parent and basis of all other industries and arts, which repose upon it as the child upon the bosom of its mother, and draw their sustenance therefrom. The hardy tillers of the soil also not only sustain but help to save the country. No other branch of industry, in any nation, can send so many or such stalwart men to the field of battle, while from the ranks of the farming classes the cities and towns are constantly recruited with fresh material to replace the worn-out toilers in all professions and trades, in the arts as well as the sciences, in law as well as medicine. It is only that form of society I deplore which rests content in an undeveloped national condition, entirely constituted of persons devoted to but one branch of industry, and that but very imperfectly organized. For be it noted how the inventions of the mechanic and the information of the merchant tend to develop the resources by which the agriculturist adds to the wealth of a country. How far ahead is the farmer of the present day, in all that regards the application of science to his peculiar branch of industry, of the farmer of a half or even quarter of a century ago. During the intervening period some of the most important agricultural implements have been invented and put to practical use. The reaping, threshing, and other machines now add the labor of hundreds of thousands of men to the producing power of the country, while improved machinery of all kinds helps to lessen the toil and increase the productive forces of the husbandman. And are not these inventions and new mechanical appliances the products of the manufacturing industry of the country? And do they not add a thousand fold to the power and importance of agriculture; to its power as a great national interest; to its importance as shedding luster upon those engaged in it, and adding millions to the wealth of the people? Agriculture acts upon all other industrial interests; but these latter, in order to the perfection of national industry, should in turn react upon it. Agriculture is the sun around which manufactures and commerce revolve. But the sun must have its planets and satellites, or its genial influences, and all the blessings of its light and heat must be dissipated in the vacuum of an irresponsive space. In a true industrial system, however, agriculture gives sustenance to manufactures and commerce, while the latter in turn consume her products and increase her powers of production indefinitely. It will thus be seen that the interests of agriculture, manufactures, and commerce are so mutually blended as to be utterly inseparable, and that he who disparages one at the same time disparages all.

I have thus, in this imperfect manner, endeavored to set forth some of the benefits of manufactures to the people and the nation. Among other advantages, I find that manufactures create a home market, diversify the products of industry, increase the avenues of labor, develop internal and external trade and commerce, add to the amount of revenue, and form a basis for the absorption of a large volume of national circulation, thus internally and externally strengthening the national body, enabling it to preserve order and promote industry at home, and to make itself feared as well as respected abroad. To foster and protect an interest fraught with such blessings to the people should be the aim of every patriot. And fortunately the late war, so costly in blood and treasure to the country, has put it in the power of the national Government, without injury to other interests, to place the manufactures of the country on a basis of enduring prosperity. This can be done by so apportioning taxation that its principal burdens shall be made to fall upon the foreign manufacturer and on the realized wealth of the country. Thus of the immense revenue raised in Great Britain, a country most clamorous for free trade as respects other nations, the proportions are as follows:

	Per cent.
Customs.....	32
Excise.....	28
Stamps.....	134
Land and assessed taxes.....	5
Income and property.....	11
Post office.....	54
Miscellaneous.....	5

The revenue commission laid down this principle when it urged—

"The abolition or speedy reduction of all taxes which tend to check development, and the retention of all those which, like the income tax, fall chiefly on realized wealth."

Previous to the war our tariffs were of course imposed without reference to an internal taxation, which did not then exist. Since the war this system has been continued, notwithstanding that the principal burden of taxation now falls upon the manufacturing industry of the country. Thus the internal revenue raised during the fiscal year of 1865 was $211,129,529; while the revenue derived from imports was but $84,928,260. For the present fiscal year the estimate of internal revenue amounts to the large sum of $272,000,000. Now, it is evident that to expect the import duties to increase in like proportion at present tariff rates would be to expect that our home manufactures would be overwhelmed with foreign importations. For be it remembered, (and I desire to draw particular attention to this point,) while the internal tax, principally borne by our manufacturers, as I have shown, has been added to the burdens of the manufacturer, the tariff on imports has not been proportionally increased. By this means the benefit derived from the tariff to the manufacturer is altogether nullified by the internal tax on articles the manufacture of the country. To such a height has this grievance risen that there is scarcely a manufacturing interest in the country which has not its representatives at your doors praying for the reduction or removal of the burdens under which it labors. To such an extent have these burdens reached that I very much fear the result will be to totally crush out a great many branches of manufactures now in their infancy and struggling for existence. Give such branches relief and they will in a few years be placed on a footing of prosperity and permanence which will bear a taxation that would now sweep them out of the field of their operations. In this connection I beg to read the following letter from a prominent iron manufacturing firm in my district. It is only a sample of hundreds of the same description from manufacturers all over the country:

TRENTON, NEW JERSEY, February 21, 1866.

DEAR SIR: Facts in regard to the state of business are worth a thousand theories, when you legislate in regard to the tariff and the internal revenue system. You know how long we have been engaged in the manufacture of iron at Trenton, and that we have both capital and experience. During the last six months of 1865, the price of gold was nearly uniform, so that no profit or loss occurred from the fluctuations in the cost of importing foreign iron.

The result of our six months' operations at Trenton was a loss of $33,702 14, without charging any interest on capital, or any allowance for our personal services. In other words there was an actual loss of capital to the amount of $33,702 14.

During the six months we paid on the work turned out at Trenton internal taxes to the amount of $27,177 53. Therefore it is plain that all the internal revenue derived from our business was taken out of capital, and was in effect actually destructive of our means to carry on business. If no internal taxes had been levied there would still have been a loss of nearly seven thousand dollars.

It is obvious, therefore, that we must shut up our works unless either the tariff on foreign iron is increased, or the internal revenue duties repealed, or both modified so that it is possible to conduct business without loss.

The loss on our product amounted to about six dollars per ton, which will be a fair guide in adjusting the new duties. Either the foreign duty must be raised six dollars per ton, or the internal revenue duties reduced six dollars per ton, or the two systems so adjusted that the difference between the foreign duty and the internal duty shall be six dollars per ton greater than it now is, or we must stop business.

You are at liberty to use this letter in any desirable way, and we ask that the facts may be laid before the Committee of Ways and Means in order that the exact truth from a responsible source may be known.

With great respect, we have the honor to be, very truly, your obedient servants,

COOPER, HEWITT & CO.

Hon. W. A. NEWELL, M. C., Washington city, D. C.

In view of the statements in the above letter, for the truth of which I can vouch on the words of honorable men and respected citizens of my State, it is evident that if the Government fails to place the great manufacturing interests of the nation in such a position that they can move on and be self-sustaining, attracting the capital and skill of the country and the world to them, it will fail to protect its own interests; it will fail to provide the means to meet the interest on the national debt and for the final redemption of that debt; it will fail, in fact, to preserve its own existence; while, on the other hand, it will enable the foreign manufacturer to draw out of the country the very capital needed at home for the organization of manufacturing industry, and for the realization of such a scale of profits on that industry as shall be the future dependence of the Government in the levying of the taxes for its support.

Take the single article of steel, for instance, the manufacture of which had been greatly increased under the tariff previous to the war, and during the war by the high rates of exchange operating as a protection from foreign competition. If an ad valorem duty of twenty per cent. is levied upon steel the Treasury will receive $200,000 from the importation of every $1,000,000 in value. The advocate of a revenue tariff would claim that this would be the easiest way to collect a revenue; and it would at first sight seem so, but that importation takes out of the country the whole $1,000,000 of capital never to return it. We can derive no future benefit from it, as we derived none from the operations which produced the steel. It is wholly lost to the country. On the other hand, if the steel is produced here it gives employment to five hundred men, directly or indirectly. It secures steady work and good wages to miners of iron and coal, machinists, fire-brick makers, builders, farmers, merchants, and in fact every branch of industry in the country, including law, medicine, and divinity. The whole $1,000,000 that the steel thus costs is spread about, circulated broadcast, to support our own people instead of being sent abroad to sustain a rival country. And this article of steel is one of the items which needs protection; for this reason I name it. But you cannot name an industry that is not benefited by the introduction of the manufacture of steel into the United States. Yet foreign steel is now able to compete successfully with the home article, and our steel works are all, or nearly all, either losing money or idle for fear of loss.

But some will say "if we cannot compete with Great Britain we ought not to manufacture." We could compete with her if we could bring our mechanics to work for the starvation wages paid in that country. But surely no man will have the hardihood to say that it is the interest of our Government to crush our people down to the level of those classes. The principle that wherever an article could be produced the cheapest, there it should be manufactured, and the world thence draw its supply, has its advocates; but such a principle tends to the centralization of capital in the hands of a few, who would not only have the power to compel their mechanics to work at their own prices, but, also, the world at large to pay such prices for their wares as they chose to set upon them. Many and many a time have we, as well as other countries, been compelled to pay enormous prices to the manufacturers of Great Britain on account of our own short-sightedness. Taking the article of steel again, if we do not produce it, the foreign manufacturers combine and charge us a high price for it. They are restrained from doing so now by the desire to break up the trade here. It is well known that the competition among ourselves brings down the price of manufactured staple articles to the lowest paying point. The fear is sometimes expressed that the moment a protective tariff is levied on steel, so as to shut out the foreign, the price would go up. So it would, for the moment. But even in that case the Government would only be passing funds from one citizen to another, and there would be no national loss of capital. So soon as the home manufacture became thoroughly established, the competition would bring down prices to the lowest paying point, so that the consumer would soon get his supply as low as it could be profitably afforded.

And I am glad to see that many of the English manufacturers are recognizing the policy of the Government in this matter as the true one for the interests of the country, and are bringing their capital to this country in order to carry on their business here, instead of trying any longer to draw out our capital in exchange for their products. This policy brings not only capital but skilled labor into the country, which is what we so much need. At Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, the celebrated Sheffield (England) cutlery, Westenhelm & Co., are building an immense factory for the manufacture of various articles into which steel enters largely. It will give employment to a very large number of hands, for whom suitable homes are also being erected. One of the large thread manufacturers of England is also about to supply our market, by manufacturing the article here, employing his own capital with which to carry on his operations. Is not this much better than that we should send the cotton to England, at a large expense and risk, perhaps in foreign bottoms, and import the manufactured article in the same manner? There is now being erected in Essex county, in my State, a large establishment for the manufacture of watches. A village is also being built for its accommodation; a railroad station is to be established at the place, and thus value is at once added to the taxable property of the county, population to the country, income to the Government, and capital brought into the country to carry on the business. It can no longer be claimed that we are not old enough, that we cannot supply ourselves.

We have, on the other hand, the elements of success in every branch of industry. With the proper tariff encouragement, such establishments as those I have referred to will extend all over the country, and into every branch of manufacturing industry. No part of the nation will be the special receptacle of the increased wealth which will flow in upon us. Such settlements will be made in the great West to meet its wants, and in the South to rebuild its waste places. The capital, the energy, the experience, and the really valuable industry of the Old World will be transplanted here; the capital for more rapid increase; the energy to seek out new enterprises upon which to expend itself; experience to turn itself to account; and an industrious population to receive a better return for its labor.

One of the reasons why the capitalists and manufacturers of Europe favored the breaking up of this nation and sympathized with the free traders and secessionists was that they saw we were finding out that protection was necessary to the development of our internal resources, and such development would soon bring a young but active competition against them into the markets of the world. Now, seeing that the efforts to break up the Government is a failure they are turning their eyes to this country as a magnificent field for their own means, industry, and enterprise. Let them come; there is room enough for all of them. We are rich in mineral resources. Protect the industry that would develop them, and we shall soon be strong enough to cope with the poorest paid labor in the world, on account of our improved processes and perfected machinery. All the metals and minerals are produced here in abundance except tin and nickel.

But without a proper modification and increase of the tariff we shall have prostration, "hard times," no internal revenue to the Government, and most discouraging prospects for new enterprises as well as established trades. With a proper tariff comes activity in all branches; new enterprises go forward, followed by a development of all our great resources, prosperity everywhere, and an abundance to be taxed, with willingness to pay. National prosperity greater than before known will succeed our present prostration; national strength will rise and show itself in what is now a national weakness—the union of capital and labor. Do not be afraid to tax a manufactured article because you may not be aware that it is made here in sufficient quantity to supply the market. Put on the tariff, and the foreign maker will come with all his capital, his implements, and his labor to manufacture here.

A few weeks since the celebrated political economist, John Stuart Mill, in a speech in the British House of Commons, asserted that within the next hundred years England will cease to be the manufactory of the world. Her coal and iron have heretofore given her great advantages. But her coal is being mined with more and more difficulty, cost, and risk of human life. Some of the mines have reached a depth of three thousand feet, rendering ventilation difficult. The London Times, in a recent editorial, strongly urges economy in the use of fuel, thus indorsing the statement of Mr. Mill. The time will come when the vast manufactures which now give England her supremacy in the world will be transferred to the coal and iron fields of Pennsylvania and the West and Southwest. Shall we encourage our people to make an early advance toward the position nature has intended we shall occupy in the future, or shall we let slip the golden opportunity to seize hold of which, at the proper moment, is the sure gerund of success in the case of nations as well as men?

But not only have Mr. Mill and the London Times warned the British people of the danger which threatens her manufacturing and commercial supremacy on account of the prospective failure of her supply of coal, but I observe in the papers of to-day that Mr. Gladstone, Chancellor of the English Exchequer, in his speech on the budget delivered in the British Parliament on the 3d instant, reiterates the same views, and points to the United States as a country rich in mineral resources and possessing boundless coal deposits. He asserts that we fulfill all the conditions in the future, the limitation or absence of which in England it is to be feared will one day compel labor and movable capital to emigrate to the United States. This remarkable admission of one of the ablest of living statesmen should be accepted as pointing out the future destiny of the United States as a great manufacturing country.

I regret also to state that the effects of the heavy internal taxation are already operating to the benefit of foreign manufacturers and increasing their importations in a most alarming manner, as will be seen from the following table of importations at New York since June 1, 1865-66, compared with the importations for the same time in 1864-65:

FOREIGN GOODS MARKETING AT NEW YORK.
	1865-66—peace.	1864-65—war.
July.....	$19,674,662	$10,684,485
August.....	26,404,412	15,507,970
September.....	25,586,747	12,075,000
October.....	21,852,063	10,159,743
November.....	22,064,390	10,104,219
December.....	19,047,205	10,670,234
January.....	27,219,868	11,711,178
February.....	26,560,301	11,472,456
Total, eight months.....	$188,406,653	$92,385,285

If our exports were increasing in a corresponding ratio there would be some comfort and satisfaction in the above exhibit. But this is not the case. The exports at New York, of all descriptions of produce, including specie, for eight months of the years as above, have been:

	1865-66. July 1 to Feb. 28.	1864-65. July 1 to Feb. 28.

This exhibits a falling off of exports in 1865-66 and an increase of imports, which would indicate that the country is rushing headlong into debt, and at a rate excelling the speed of the most fashionable of modern spendthrifts. The ready sale of our bonds in Europe accelerates the pace at which we are involving ourselves, publicly and privately, with foreign manufacturers and capitalists. The lowering of the price of gold also tends to encourage that over-importation which its former high price repressed. This renders an increase of import duties absolutely imperative. New goods from abroad are sold at a great advance for currency, while our gold-bearing bonds are made the medium of remittance. These bonds will always hereafter be a medium of foreign investment as long as they are made to bear six per cent. interest in specie. Now, however, on account of the difference in exchange, they are obtained at a rate that readily yields nine and ten per cent. The Comptroller of the Currency, in his Report for 1865, page 7, estimates the amount of our securities sent abroad in five years at $713,000,000, and says:

"Our only resource to pay the balance against us has been, and still is, the sale of our securities abroad."

But if we add to this amount of our securities sent abroad as above stated by the Comptroller, the amount sent abroad in previous periods, estimated at least $500,000,000, we have a debt owed by us in Europe amounting to $1,213,000,000. At the rate at which our imports are now going on, say nearly $350,000,000 yearly, an immense sum will be required to pay the balance of trade against us, swelled as it will be with the interest on our securities, which is payable in specie. Whereas, in order to keep the balance of trade in our favor, we ought to sell at least $100,000,000 worth yearly more than we buy, we are on the other hand buying more than that amount yearly than we sell. Now, it is as easy to see that such a state of things can no more last than to expect that a man will live if a physician takes more blood daily from him than his system will make in the ordinary process of digestion and manufacture of the chyle into venous and arterial circulation. Our duties on imports should also be specific rather than ad valorem, as is the case to a great extent in Great Britain, Belgium, and other European countries. This would prevent the immense frauds on the revenue, now of daily occurrence, and which are winked at by custom-house officials. Belgium, a rich and prosperous country, has three hundred and thirty specific to sixty-six ad valorem duties; while the United States has two thousand four hundred and thirty-nine ad valorem to four hundred and seventy-nine specific duties. The ad valorem duties collected in England from 1845 to 1852, were one and a quarter per cent. of the whole amount, while our customs are some forty per cent. ad valorem, offering a premium on fraud such as is held out nowhere else in the world. I have seen it stated in the public journals that the frauds in the New York custom-house range from twelve to twenty-five million dollars yearly.

Mr. Speaker, I have the honor to represent, in part, a State which for its territorial extent is not excelled by any other in the Union as a manufacturing State. And I refer with especial pride, in this regard, to the district represented by my distinguished friend and colleague, [Mr. WRIGHT], which is only second in the Union in the amount of revenue it returns for the support of the General Government. The amount of tax returned in that district last year was $2,629,033 82; in the fourth district of New York, $4,457,835; and in the first district of Pennsylvania, $2,877,938 82. Our constituents have consequently a deep interest in the question now before us. But New Jersey is also great in agricultural as well as manufacturing resources. It is located between the great cities of the Atlantic seaboard; traversed with railroads; of varied and productive soil and unlimited natural resources for improvement. It is destined to be the garden of the vast populations of those cities. In its agricultural products it stands at the present time first in the list of States in proportion to the extent of its territory; in the value of its lands, according to the last census report, the first, notwithstanding its hundreds of thousands of acres of salt marsh and unproductive forests. The products of the State will be immeasurably increased when her present system of internal improvements shall give way to the more beneficent system of general legislation, an event I trust destined soon to be consummated. My constituents are chiefly an agricultural people; as intelligent, prosperous, and honorable a constituency as ever intrusted a Representative with their interests on this floor. While they cultivate the soil they encourage and engage in manufactures; they foster colleges, seminaries, high, normal, and model schools, seats of science and learning. They contribute their full proportion to the support, advancement, and elevation of mankind; and I will say for the benefit of those who delight in deriding New Jersey, that my congressional district is equaled by no other agricultural district in this broad land in the amount and value of its agricultural productions, or in the value of the land composing it for agricultural purposes. In its natural advantages for improvement, or in its proximity to market. Extending, diagonally, nearly from New York to Philadelphia, it is bounded on the one side by an hundred miles of a sea-board, with its immeasurable advantages for summer resort and abundant natural productions; and on the other by a broad river which bears its products to the sea. It is a district of revolutionary renown, around which cluster many glorious memories of that patriot age. There the Father of his Country sustained his greatest trials, there it was that he achieved his greatest triumphs, on the memorable fields of Trenton, Princeton, and Monmouth; and there, too, repose the hallowed remains of men who sealed their devotion to liberty and right with their blood. It is a grand and noble district. I ask no greater honor than to be its Representative, and my only ambition is to faithfully represent it in all its varied interests.

But great as New Jersey is in proportion to her territory as an agricultural, she is destined to be yet greater as a manufacturing State. The revenue paid on manufactures and productions by New Jersey for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1865, was exceeded only by that of New York, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, Ohio, and Illinois; and if we except distilled spirits, by the first four only of those States. In proportion to population New Jersey paid on manufactures a larger tax than either, except Massachusetts, the tax per capita being as follows: Massachusetts, $12 64; New Jersey, $6 59; New York, $6 14; Pennsylvania, $5 81; Ohio, $3 81; Illinois, $2 92.

But the following table will more fully illustrate the value and importance of New Jersey as a manufacturing State. It is a comparative statement showing the district that returned the largest revenue, and its amount, on several articles of manufacture in New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania, also the whole collections on the articles and the tax per capita on each of those States, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1865, prepared by my friend, Mr. Whitman, the admirable Deputy Commissioner of Internal Revenue, to whom I am indebted for other statistical matter:

The tax per capita is computed on the basis of the population of the eighth census, which for the above States was as follows: New York, 3,880,735; New Jersey, 672,035; Pennsylvania, 2,906,215.

Some of the reasons which constitute New Jersey so important a manufacturing State are to be found in the fact of its proximity to large cities where supplies for materials are abundant and good markets for sales of easy access. Then its railroad, canal, and river communications are unexcelled. Its water power is magnificent. It is also in near proximity to coal mines. Within its borders living is cheap, taxes are low, the health of its people unsurpassed. As I have shown, it already ranks high as a manufacturing State. It has long been noted for its large production of glass, and for its iron of a very flexible, ductile, and tensile quality, which are produced in the first and second districts; for its steel of the finest manufacture; for its zinc, including paint from that article, which has become admired the world over; for its enameled leather; and for many other articles which enter largely into the industry of the country. Of late, new branches of industry have sprung up in the State; chief among which is a manufactory of white-ware at Trenton, with a capital of $1,000,000, and which employs over one thousand persons, although in operation but a few years. If this branch of industry is but appropriately encouraged by protection, that part of the State will indeed become the Staffordshire of America. This great interest, I regret to say, now languishes for want of protection; and I respectfully call the attention of the Committee of Ways and Means especially thereto.

In connection therewith I beg the Clerk will read the following letter from the secretary of the company. I do so because this branch of manufacture is a new one in the country. Immense quantities of crockery are now imported. It is a bulky and expensive article to transport, while it requires an unusually large proportion of manual labor in its production, thus giving employment to a large population.

The Clerk read as follows:

TRENTON, NEW JERSEY, February 21, 1866.

MY DEAR SIR: I received yesterday a note from F. Kingman, Esq., with your request for some statistics relating to the manufacture of crockery. You desire further that they shall be in the form in which we wish them to appear before Congress. This it is perhaps rather difficult to comply with, inasmuch as we have not digested any particular "form" of presentation for our statements. Indeed it might be troublesome to put into a few brief sentences all we think necessary to say in our own behalf. I will, however, state our case in as concise and workable shape as may be, at the same time thanking you for your kind expression of a wish to aid us in this matter.

It will be needful, in the course of this, to repeat portions of my letter of January 17. And first the following statement of relative values of potters' materials in England and America, gold taken at a par valuation:

Kaolin, or China clay, ton of 2,000 pounds worth in Trenton $23; in Staffordshire $10. Ground flint, same weight, worth in Trenton $19; in Staffordshire $9. Ground felspar, same weight, worth in Trenton $20; in Staffordshire $12. Coal, ton of 2,240 pounds, worth in Trenton $5; in Staffordshire $2. Labor is paid at rates at least one hundred per cent. higher than those of the English manufacturers. There are, in addition to above, other minor articles, chemicals, &c., which will range at about same ratio of difference. This statement was made up from the best information we have upon the subject; the English values being supplied by reliable persons lately connected with the "potting" interest in Staffordshire, while the American rates are those actually paid by us when gold was at par.

The most important items by far of this statement are "coal" and "labor." Indeed all other items of the cost of production of our wares are of comparatively minor importance. It is closely estimated that seventy-five per cent. of the producing cost is absorbed by these two heavy items of expense.

Our processes of manufacture are accomplished almost entirely by manual labor; and heat must be used without stint. Perhaps no machine will ever be made to manipulate clay like the human hand, although it is probable that invention may smooth this rugged way somewhat. But the inventive genius native to our soil has not found time during the turmoil of war for these new charges lately transplanted from a land where labor-saving and fuel-saving machinery would not seem worthy of consideration, because of the plentiful supply of workmen, and the coal at their doors.

Labor and coal, then, are the main points in which we must compete with England. That labor is more easily and cheaply obtained there than here does not require proof.

We have said in the statement above that we pay not less than one hundred per cent. advance on a gold basis upon English rates of labor. This we believe to be a low estimate. Much of our ware is made "by piece," and we know of many articles for which we paid in gold times three times as much as the English manufacturer.

Taking the coal used by the latter of all kinds, and two dollars per ton will be found a high estimate, while we now pay (in currency) eight and one half dollars, and have paid within two years over thirteen dollars.

Observe the quantity of coal used by any pottery, and you will be struck by this statement of difference in favor of the Englishman.

And now the argument for a protective system may be fairly and rightly strengthened by the following brief narration of the rise and progress of this manufacturing interest in our city during the last few years.

Before the rebellion a few small potteries were here, struggling hard to maintain a somewhat precarious existence. The skilled laborers who were here, Englishmen, asked and obtained their own prices. The duty at that time was thirty-five per cent. ad valorem.

With the war came the advance on gold. However much we may deplore the inflation produced by a depreciated currency, certain it is that the high price of gold was, in the absence of more tariff, a benefit and protection to us. At once others saw this evident fact, and soon new firms began to appear; intelligent, practical workmen, uniting with capitalists to build new potteries, and to take advantage of the temporary "protection" of the times. More hands were brought over from England, boys were apprenticed to learn the various trades, and from a nucleus of four factories we now have altogether twelve larger ones, employing about one thousand hands and representing nearly one million dollars of invested capital. This sum may appear small when compared with the capital in many other kinds of manufacture, but any potter knows that $1,000,000 worth of crockery, or rather the crockery produced by working $1,000,000, would make a small mountain if it could be piled together.

Potting is a very bulky business, requiring a great deal of room and much labor for a comparatively small money value. The Staffordshire potteries cover a large district of country. It is usually a non-speculative trade, prices keeping generally steady in common times. The men engaged in it, both manufacturers and dealers, are honest, non-speculative men, who do not often fail and cheat their creditors.

It seems clear, then, from the fact that this business has so greatly increased during the war, that what it wants (and we think what it ought to have, for the benefit of the governmental revenue) is "protection." That this need not mean "prohibition" is plain from the fact that foreign goods were largely imported and sold when we had the protection of from two hundred to two hundred and eighty per cent. premium on gold. People will have their plates and cups and saucers, and they ought to be able to enjoy their daily bread without the aid of John Bull. The Government cannot lose by adding this privilege to the birthright of an American citizen; in this case "without distinction of color" we suppose it will have to be.

We have had but five per cent. additional duty put upon foreign goods during the war, and if Congress desires to foster and assist the introduction of new branches of art into the country, they should not be unwilling to protect us when circumstances will no longer do so. "Gold is much lower now," it may be said, "and yet you flourish." True, but we are only sustained for a short time by the pressing needs of those now in process of "reconstruction," assisted by the anger of Neptune and Æolus, who have wrecked or damaged a great deal of crockery lately. It is almost certain that in the coming summer Britannia will have it all her own way, and that we shall be "fallen among the pots."

To know what kind of ware is made here, be particular to notice that our goods come under the second clause of paragraph four, section nine, of the tariff act of July 1, 1864, beginning, "on all other earthen, stone, or crockery ware, forty per cent." Were this made sixty per cent., it would not in the least diminish the revenue by keeping out any foreign earthenware, merely because of the increased duty, but we should feel that the manufacture of crockery was on a pretty sure footing in this country; and there is every reason to believe that it would continue to increase rapidly, paying large excise taxes into the national Treasury. If any change were made in this section of the tariff, it would be necessary, also, to change the duties upon china, white and decorated; these, however, would seem nearer to the class of luxuries than the other, and there would not be the same hesitancy felt to put duty upon them. All kinds of ware, china as well as common, should be made in the United States, and will be, if Congress will help us.

Trenton is not the only point, although it is the principal one, at which crockery is manufactured. The best American ware is made here, but all parts of the country are more or less interested with us in the success of this business, for every State has some pottery interest.

I remain, sir, very respectfully, yours,

JAMES P. STEPHENS,
Secretary Manufacturing Pottery.

Hon. WILLIAM A. NEWELL, Washington, D. C.

Mr. NEWELL. On the subject of window and hollow glass, a most important branch of industry, I have also before me the following interesting letter from a well known and honored constituent. Indeed, all the information I have from all parties engaged in manufacturing industry is to the effect that further protection is absolutely necessary, for the reasons I have given in the former portion of my remarks:

BALSTO, April 22, 1865.

DEAR SIR: Unacquainted with any other member of the New Jersey delegation in Congress, I venture to address you upon a subject of great interest to all engaged in the manufacture of window glass. A committee was appointed at a meeting of glass makers to represent their grievances and the state of their business to the commission raised to revise the United States excise and revenue laws, and I have no doubt of the faithful performance of their duty; but as yet I have seen no indication of relief from Congress in our branch of business. We report monthly under oath the gross amount of our sales, and after making such deductions as are allowed by law, pay six per cent. on those sales. This, during the war, was done with great cheerfulness, inasmuch as every reputable citizen desired to aid the Government to the full extent of his ability, and the constant inflation of the currency enabled him to secure remunerative prices for articles made. But upon the fall of Richmond a change occurred, and many manufactured articles were greatly reduced in price, and window glass fell below the cost of production and heavy losses were sustained. As window glass is a perishable article when kept in packages in warm weather, it was necessary to make sacrifices during the last summer to avoid greater sacrifices anticipated by the importation of foreign glass, induced by the rapid fall of gold and general depression in the industrial community. On all these losses the Government has inexorably levied the tax of six per cent. It would seem that taxes should be uniform and equal, and imposed upon goods in possession or upon profits, and not upon absolute losses.

Now, there are two large paper mills in this vicinity, each of which produces monthly more than twice the money value that I do, with less capital and trouble, and by law are taxable only three per cent. on their sales. This remission of one half the tax paid by other manufacturers was brought about by newspaper editors and demagogues with the view of reducing the price of printing paper and by the argument clamorously urged that the diffusion of education and knowledge could only be accomplished by means of paper. But as the factories above mentioned, and most others in this country, make nothing better than common wrapping paper for grocers and hardware dealers, it is difficult to see how they can be deemed to assist in disseminating learning. I would remark that the present system of levying and collecting excise duties is expensive, cumbersome, and inquisitorial, and that the law seems to be calculated to oppress the honest and to provoke the dishonest to the commission of crime. Though I have written this hurried note without consulting any one engaged in the business, I think from former interviews with Hon. A. K. Hay, and other glass makers, that they will concur in the statements and opinions herein expressed.

With the hope that you will also concur and be able to afford relief to our depressed trade in the rearrangement of the tariff and excise laws, and with an apology for my importunity,

I am respectfully yours,

T. H. RICHARDS.

Hon. WILLIAM A. NEWELL.

I am happy to know that the Committee of Ways and Means have greatly relieved this important branch of industry by exempting window glass from excise duty.

Another branch of manufacture lately established in my State is that of watches. A large manufactory of that description has lately been organized near Newark. An extensive flax factory has also been established in Paterson, the seat of the largest paper, cotton, silk, thread, and locomotive factories in this country. And lately the most beautiful fabric of silk-velvet and tapestry has been produced in Newark which will compare favorably with the best articles of European manufacture. A branch, also, of Clark's spool cotton manufacturing establishment at Glasgow, which supplies thread for the civilized world, is shortly to be located at the same place, bringing six hundred Scotch female operatives.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, in view of the great needs of the manufacturing interests of my district and State and of the country generally; in view of the fact that we must rely almost altogether upon these interests for the means to meet the interest on our now colossal public debt, I feel it my duty to demand of this House that protection which is absolutely necessary, not only for the welfare of those interests, but for the preservation of the Government. From all these great industrial interests of the country we have cries of distress coming up daily to our doors. Will we heed them? Or, on the other hand, will we allow the principles and policy which came near destroying this nation to be again the principles and policy of the Government? If the latter, then woe to the stability of our institutions and the perpetuity of the freedom they were created to preserve.

An increase in our revenue tariff on importations is the only way which I see open to us in order to remedy the evils of over importation. It will increase the prosperity of home manufactures: it will check foreign importations, and gradually prepare the way for a safe return to specie payments.

The policy of European manufacturers and capitalists, which is based on the principle of cheapening labor, in order to compete with foreign countries, is fraught with revolution and ruin to American interests, and even to the stability of our institutions. The very nature of our Government and the social habits and customs of our people demand that the laborer should have such a fair and reasonable share of the profits of industry as will enable him to enjoy, not only the comforts, but even the luxuries of life. Here education is universal. Here one man is as good as every other man. Here the doctrine of human rights, socially, politically, morally, and religiously, has received its widest application. By no possible means can you unite in America a social aristocracy with our political democracy. I warn gentlemen of the folly of such an attempt. What do these ten-hour and eight-hour movements indicate but a steady determination on the part of the American mechanic to assert the principle that he is not a mere beast of burden; that there are other faculties within him than those that are merely instinctive, as it were, for the preservation and sustentation of life; that the ideal as well as the actual, the artistic as well as the mechanical, the beautiful as well as the useful in him needs to be unfolded and developed? The same God who fashioned the dark brown earth created the flower that springs therefrom,

"A thing of beauty and a joy forever."

The Scripture says that "man shall not live by bread alone." Neither can we brutalize the image and likeness of his Maker by ill-paid drudgery and unrequited toil without violating the eternal principles of truth and justice and suffering fearfully therefor. By the late war we vindicated the right of man to his own labor and the enjoyment of the fruits thereof. Having rescued the negro from the bondage of chattelism, let us not permit the white man and the negro together to be crushed under the iron heel of a European civilization, which claims that the only way to build up national industry and prosperity is by reducing the laborer to the lowest minimum of compensation that will support existence.

Mr. HUBBARD, of Iowa, obtained the floor, but yielded to Mr. SPALDING, who moved that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule and referred to the appropriate committees:

By Mr. CONKLING: The petition of A. P. Seymour, and others, praying a change in the law taxing the circulation of State banks.

By Mr. LAFLIN: The remonstrance of citizens of Watertown, Jefferson county, New York, against the passage of the bill to reorganize the Federal judiciary.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, May 21, 1866.

Prayer by Rev. Dr. FEASTON, of Birmingham, England.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of Friday.

Mr. WADE. I move that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with. There is no necessity for reading the action of the Senate on all those pension bills that were passed on Friday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the Journal can be dispensed with by unanimous consent only. No objection being made, its further reading will be dispensed with.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, transmitting a copy of the correspondence between the Secretary of State and Cornelius Vanderbilt, of New York, relative to the joint resolution of the 28th of January, 1864, upon the subject of the gift of the steamer Vanderbilt to the United States; which, on motion of Mr. MORGAN, was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WADE presented a communication addressed to him by the Secretary of War, transmitting information in relation to the petition of Mrs. Sarah A. Brewer, widow of Major General Anson L. Brewer, praying for a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CHANDLER presented a memorial of the Board of Trade of Bay county, Michigan, praying for an appropriation by Congress for the improvement of the harbor at the mouth of Saginaw river; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON, it was Ordered, That the petition and other papers in the case of Lydia Cramer, executrix of Moses Shepherd, be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred a communication from the Secretary of War, covering a letter from General Dyer, chief of Ordnance, in relation to the legislation necessary to fix and establish the position of the Chicago and Rock Island railroad at Rock Island, Illinois, so as to enable the War Department to occupy that island for military purposes, reported a bill (S. No. 330) making further provision for the establishment of an armory and arsenal of construction, deposit, and repair on Rock Island, in the State of Illinois; which was read and passed to a second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a bill (H. R. No. 3) to revive the grade of general in the United States Army, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. POMEROY, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was recommitted the bill (S. No. 224) to aid in the construction of a southern branch of the Union Pacific railway, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes, reported it with an amendment.

BILL RECOMMITTED.

Mr. WADE. I move that the bill (S. No. 239) to provide for the probate of and for the recording of wills of real estate situated in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, which was reported adversely by the Committee on the District of Columbia, be recommitted to that committee.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. RAMSEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 331) requiring agents of the Post Office Department to give bond in certain cases; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. NESMITH asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 332) to provide for the construction of a wagon road from White Bluffs, in Washington Territory, to Helena, in Montana Territory; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia.

Mr. POMEROY. I ask leave to introduce a bill of which no previous notice has been given. I do it by request.

There being no objection, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 333) to incorporate the American Cotton Company of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

ELECTION OF SENATORS.

Mr. WILLIAMS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency and practicability of providing a uniform and effective mode of securing the election of Senators in Congress by the Legislatures of the several States, and that they have leave to report by bill or otherwise.

MRS. ABIGAIL RYAN.

Mr. WILLEY. On Friday last I entered a motion to reconsider the vote on the passage of the bill (S. No. 328) for the relief of Mrs. Abigail Ryan. I ask leave of the Senate now to withdraw the motion to reconsider that bill, finding that it is all correct.

Leave was granted.

LEONARD ST. CLAIR.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. On Friday last, by a mistake, House bill No. 371, to grant a pension to Leonard St. Clair, was omitted to be acted upon. I ask that it may now be taken up and passed. It was omitted on Friday by a mere mistake, not being marked on my docket. I move now to take it up.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 371) to grant a pension to Leonard St. Clair.

The Secretary of the Interior will be directed by the bill to place the name of Leonard St. Clair on the pension-rolls of the United States as a pensioner, at the rate of eight dollars per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GOODRICH AND CORNISH.

Mr. CONNESS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution No. 77.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. R. No. 87) for the relief of Ambrose L. Goodrich and Nathan Cornish, for carrying the United States mail from Boise City to Idaho City, in the Territory of Idaho. It proposes to authorize the Postmaster General to audit and settle, as to him may appear just and equitable, the demand of Ambrose L. Goodrich and Nathan Cornish for carrying the United States mail on route No. 16001, from Boise City to Idaho City, in the Territory of Idaho, from the 5th of July, 1864, until the 1st of July, 1865. The Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads reported the joint resolution with an amendment, to insert at the end of it the following:

And also to audit and settle, in like manner, the demand of Daniel Wellington and J. C. Dorsey, for extra services in carrying the United States mails on route No. 14602, between Carson City and Aurora, in the State of Nevada, from July 1, 1862, to June 30, 1865.

Mr. CONNESS. There is a report accompanying the joint resolution from the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator ask for the reading of the report?

Mr. CONNESS. Perhaps it is best that the Senate should hear it. It is a very short report. However, if there is no demand for its reading, I shall not insist upon it.

Mr. CLARK. I wish to have it read.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

The Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to whom was referred the joint resolution for the relief of Messrs. Goodrich & Cornish, report as follows:

That during the fiscal year 1864-65, Messrs. Goodrich & Cornish, at the general request of the citizens of Idaho, carried the United States mails between Boise City and Idaho City three times a week, as appears from the testimony of the postmasters at the places named, and that they have received no compensation for said service; that in consequence of the discovery of new and attractive mines in that Territory a large mining population had emigrated there, who were entitled to mail facilities, for which no provision had been made by the Government. Therefore the committee recommend that the Postmaster General be authorized to audit and settle the claim of Messrs. Goodrich & Cornish as to him may seem just and equitable.

Mr. CLARK. I am a little sorry that the committee have not reported something further in regard to the facts in this case.

Mr. CONNESS. There are other papers and letters from the Post Office Department on the subject.

Mr. CLARK. I should like to have some information as to the services rendered, and what may be the amount required under the joint resolution.

Mr. CONNESS. If the letters from the Second Assistant Postmaster General accompanying the resolution are read they will give that information.

Mr. CLARK. I do not know, of course, what papers precisely the Senator refers to; but perhaps it would be as well if the Senator could give us the information himself.

Mr. CONNESS. I cannot at this moment without examining these letters.

Mr. CLARK. Would it not be better to let it lie over until some examination can be had?

Mr. CONNESS. I have no objection to letting the joint resolution lie over until the Senator can examine it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution before the Senate will be laid aside by common consent.

Mr. CONNESS subsequently said: I ask the Senate now to resume the consideration of House joint resolution No. 77, as I understand there is no objection to it.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution, the question being upon the amendment reported by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads to add to it the following words:

And also to audit and settle, in like manner, the demand of Daniel Wellington and J. C. Dorsey, for extra services in carrying the United States mails on route No. 14602, between the towns of Carson City and Aurora, in the State of Nevada, from July 1, 1862, to June 30, 1865.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I would inquire how much is the amount of this claim.

Mr. CONNESS. I will say to the Senator that after this amendment is adopted, I propose to limit the claim in both cases.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I ask the Senator if the two cases stand on the same ground.

Mr. CONNESS. I will say that the last claim has already been passed upon by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads of this body, and the Senate has passed a bill for the relief of the parties, which is now lying in the House of Representatives. We propose to add to it this resolution and put both in one measure. I propose, however, to limit both.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONNESS. I now move to amend the resolution by inserting after "1865" in line ten, the words, "provided the amount to be allowed shall not exceed $8,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONNESS. I now offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of the resolution as amended:

Provided, That the amount to be allowed shall not exceed $20,000.

I will say that that is the amount provided for in the bill for the relief of Wellington & Dorsey which has already passed the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended; the amendments were concurred in. It was ordered that the amendments be engrossed and the resolution read a third time. The resolution was read the third time and passed. Its title was amended by adding the words, "and of Daniel Wellington and J. C. Dorsey for extra services in carrying the mail."

SURVEYS OF UPPER MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. RAMSEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 139.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 139) to provide for surveys of the upper Mississippi and Minnesota rivers.

The bill as introduced by Mr. RAMSEY proposed to appropriate $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the survey, under the direction of the Secretary of War, of the upper Mississippi river from or near the falls of St. Anthony to the upper or Rock Island rapids, with a view to ascertain the most feasible means, by economizing the water of the stream, of insuring the passage at all navigale seasons of boats drawing four feet of water.

The second section proposed to appropriate $5,000 for an examination and survey, under the direction of the Secretary of War, of the Minnesota river from its mouth to the mouth of the Yellow Medicine, in order to ascertain the practicability and expense, by slack-water navigation or otherwise, of securing the continued navigability of that stream during the usual season of navigation.

The Committee on Commerce reported the bill with an amendment to strike out the second section.

Mr. RAMSEY. Mr. President, the bill before us provides for an examination and survey of the Minnesota and the upper Mississippi rivers in order to ascertain the character of the obstructions to their navigation, and the means adapted and expenses incident to their removal. The examinations are proposed to be made under the direction of the Secretary of War by engineers of the Topographical corps, aided by the practical experience of river experts. They are to be made in accordance with a prudent custom, which requires a particular examination and an estimate before appropriating money for objects of improvement. In this way desultory and inordinate expenditures are avoided; useless or frivolous projects are detected; the merits of every proposition are thoroughly investigated, and Congress is enabled to judge of the proportion between the cost of an improvement and its value. During the late war appropriations for the improvement of our great rivers and harbors were in a large measure suspended. That this economy, under the circumstances, was justifiable and wise few, I presume, will venture to dispute. And in view of the present condition of the Treasury all of us, Mr. President, will admit the necessity of restricting future expenditures in this direction to the smallest sums commensurate with the importance of the objects sought to be attained.

In regard to the improvement of the Minnesota river, for the survey of which the bill, as originally introduced, appropriates $5,000, I will merely remark that if the result of the examination shall indicate that any very considerable sum will be required to render the river navigable at all seasons, except when obstructed with ice, I may not apply to the national Treasury for the money to make the improvement; but as the stream, though perhaps the most important tributary of the upper Mississippi, flows almost entirely within the limits of the State of Minnesota, I may ask Congress to authorize Minnesota to undertake the improvement in such way as she may see fit, either in her State capacity or by appeal to private enterprise. For this reason, Mr. President, I hope that the amendment to the bill which has been reported from the Committee on Commerce may be rejected, and that my honorable friend from Michigan, the chairman of the committee, will not urge its adoption in consideration of the importance of the examination, and the very moderate sum appropriated to make it.

But, Mr. President, the bill further provides an appropriation of $20,000 for the survey of the upper Mississippi river, from the Rock river rapids to the head of navigation, a distance of some five hundred miles, in order to ascertain some practical mode of making this portion of the river navigable for boats drawing four feet in those cycles of low water which occur with us at regular intervals, and seem to be governed by certain and well-defined physical laws. I hope that no Senator will be deterred from approving this appropriation by any apprehension that it will initiate a large and uncertain expenditure; for I think that I shall be able to show that the improvement which is desired may be effected at a very moderate cost. What is wanted is a practical, sensible examination or survey—not a refined, scientific investigation of the regimen and hydraulics of the river, which might prove curious rather than useful.

If the Department to which this survey is proposed to be intrusted will designate competent officers who will be willing to consult practical and intelligent river men, I have no doubt but that the survey can be completed in a single season, and a feasible plan of improvement recommended which can be accomplished with little expense.

The improvement of this great artery of commerce, Mr. President, is a national work. When completed it will so increase facilities for effecting commercial exchanges, and so reduce the cost of transit of the great staple products of the Northwest to the Atlantic and the Gulf, that no part of the country will lose by the improvement, but all will gain. I therefore ask the indulgence of the Senate while I present a few considerations sufficient, in my opinion, to commend the improvement of the upper Mississippi river to the favorable consideration of Congress and of the country.

In doing this I propose to enter into no discussion of the constitutional authority of the Government to make the improvement. I assume that the possession of this authority, in the broadest amplitude, has been most emphatically settled by a series of acts which have received the sanction of the people of the United States, and of every department of the Federal Government; and that in the discussions that have taken place in and out of Congress upon the various provisions of the Constitution under which the exercise of this authority is claimed, and more especially upon the intent and objects of the framers of the Constitution in conferring on Congress the power "to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the States," the argument is exhausted.

If the practice of appropriating money from the Treasury of the United States for the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi river and its tributaries is of more recent origin than the practice of appropriating money from the same source to render navigation safe and easy on the Atlantic coast, it is readily answered, that in the earlier days of the Government but a very inconsiderable portion of the population of the United States had passed the Alleghany mountains; that steam had not then conquered a current too rapid for ascending navigation; that by the treaty of San Lorenzo el Real, in 1795, the southern boundary of the United States was fixed at the thirty-first degree of latitude north of the equator, and the western boundary in the middle of the channel or bed of the Mississippi river from the northern boundary of the States to the thirty-first degree of north latitude; that thus the greater part of the valley of the Mississippi belonged to Spain, who claimed the exclusive right to navigate the river south of the thirty-first parallel, and a right in common with us to the residue; and that, although by the treaty of Paris, of the 30th of April, 1803, Napoleon ceded to the United States the colony or province of Louisiana, with the same limits that it had in the hands of Spain, when it was ceded by that Power to France, by the treaty of St. Ildefonso, of the 1st of October, 1800, conflicting claims and pretensions to portions of the Territory were not definitely adjusted until the Administration of Mr. Monroe, when the boundary line between Spain and the United States, west of the Mississippi, was fixed with precision by an article of the same treaty, in virtue of which the Floridas were acquired.

Provision for the improvement of the seaboard was made in one of the earliest acts of the first Congress, under the present Constitution of the United States, entitled "An act for the establishment of light-houses, buoys, beacons, and public piers," approved by President Washington on the 7th of August, 1789. Similar laws were enacted on the 22d of July, 1790, on the 3d of March, 1791, on the 2d of March, 1793, on the 2d of March, 1795, on the 30th of May, 1796; and since then, with a few special exceptions, provision for the same purpose has been made in the general appropriation laws. The history of this legislation is thus summed up by President Jackson in his message of December, 1830:

"The practice of defraying out of the Treasury of the United States the expenses incurred by the establishment and support of light-houses, beacons, buoys, and public piers, within the bays, inlets, and harbors, and ports of the United States, to render the navigation thereof safe and easy, is coeval with the adoption of the Constitution, and has been continued without interruption or dispute."

That the power under which these expenses have been and are being incurred is as applicable to the Mississippi river as to the Atlantic coast, and is as full and perfect in reference to one as the other, is attested by the general course of legislation upon the subject. The earliest appropriation for the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi river is to be found in an act of Congress, approved 24th May, 1824. Since then Congress has at various times made appropriations for the improvement of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Arkansas, and Red rivers, amounting in the aggregate to $3,703,800. The latest legislation in the premises was in 1853, when appropriations were made for continuing the improvement of the Des Moines rapids and for removing obstructions in the mouth of the river, by a two-thirds vote of both Houses of Congress, over the vetoes of President Pierce.

Even those theorists who have admitted with the greatest reluctance any degree of authority in Congress to make what are commonly called internal improvements, have time and again conceded the constitutionality of such improvements as may follow the examination and survey proposed in the bill before us. At a convention assembled in the city of Memphis, on the 12th of November, 1845, Mr. Calhoun, in considering how far the aid of the General Government could be invoked for purposes of internal improvement, said:

"As to the improvement of the valley of the Mississippi—what, then, can the General Government do? The invention of Fulton has, if I may be allowed the expression, turned the Mississippi river and its tributaries into an inland sea, of equal importance in its navigation with the Chesapeake and Delaware bays. It is, therefore, a matter peculiarly within the jurisdiction of the Federal Government, and deserving in the highest degree of its police and protection. This is not a matter to be left to individual States. It is one of high national importance. We may safely lay down as a rule, that whatever can be done by individuals they ought to accomplish; whatever is peculiarly within the province of States they should effect; and whatever is essentially within the control of the General Government, it should accomplish. I believe the free and uninterrupted navigation of these inland seas (so to speak) is within the peculiar province of the General Government."

Again, the national importance of the improvement of the Mississippi river is discussed with great ability in an elaborate report made to the Senate by Mr. Calhoun on the 26th of June, 1846, from the select committee to whom the resolutions and memorial of the Memphis convention were referred. Though we may reject many of the conclusions of this report, and deem many of the distinctions taken to be unsound and delusive, we will not dissent from the unanimous opinion of the committee that Congress has the power, under the Constitution, to improve the navigation of the Mississippi river; and that it is clearly embraced in the power to regulate commerce among the States.

Now, Mr. President, having regard to relative population; to the respective amount and value of commerce, tonnage, and navigation; or to the general proposition that the internal trade of all nations greatly exceeds their external, I hold it to be undeniable that the appropriations heretofore made for the improvement of the Mississippi and its waters have not been in a just and fair proportion to those for improvements on the Atlantic coast. Without going into any minute calculation, it may be safely asserted that the expenditures for the one have very many times exceeded those for the other. To these expenditures upon our eastern frontier I certainly interpose no objection. On the contrary, I approve of them all, believing the objects to be general, not local; national, not sectional. I advocate no narrow, contracted, or selfish system of legislation; but I do claim that while vast sums have been appropriated for the survey, fortification, and improvement of the sea-board, and for the support of a Navy to protect our ocean commerce. equal attention has not been accorded to objects of public improvement in the interior, standing on the same ground of constitutional authority and the same principles of public policy.

The waters of the Mississippi drain an area of 1,244,000 square miles. They are navigable by steam 16,674 miles; and according to an estimate of Mr. Benton, are boatable 50,000 miles, of which 30,000 are computed to unite above St. Louis, and 20,000 below. The commerce which floats upon these waters moves, not to a local market, but to the markets of the world. It enriches the whole Atlantic commercial region. It is a copious source of revenue to the canals, railways, and navigating interests of the East. The cities of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore are participators in it, in common with St. Paul, St. Louis, and New Orleans. This commerce affects the exchanges of the world, supplies the elements by which alone foreign commerce can be conducted, and contributes to the customs revenue by furnishing the commercial marine the outward-bound freight which is to be exchanged for the return cargo. For internal trade is the foundation of foreign commerce, which is called into being and sustained by the domestic commodities furnished for export. In another form, it is an extension of it, distributing its freights. Each react upon the other, and any attempted discrimination in favor of one to the prejudice or exclusion of the other defeats itself.

In the upper Mississippi valley are situated the great food-producing States. Four of these States—Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa, and Illinois, as well as the new Territories erected west of Minnesota and a vast region extending north far into British North America, to which a railroad is now in progress of construction from St. Paul—are directly interested in the improvement of the upper Mississippi river. But are these the only parties interested? By the census returns of 1860 it appears that New England raises barely a sufficiency of wheat to feed her population three weeks; and that for six months in the year even New York is dependent on the Northwest for her breadstuffs. The tables which are annually laid upon our desks from the Treasury Department show that the products of the Northwest have, during the recent war, sometimes constituted as high as seventy per cent. in value, of all our domestic exports, exclusive of specie. Is not the proposition a true one, that in the same proportion they have contributed to the customs revenue and sustained the public credit? One thousand dollars' worth of Minnesota wheat exported to Europe will purchase there in exchange $1,000 worth of duty-paying articles. From the returning imports the Government, under existing tariffs, derives an average duty in gold of at least thirty per cent., or $200. Whatever, therefore, by cheapening existing rates of transportation, stimulates production, enlarges the basis of foreign commerce; and in the improvement of the navigation of the upper Mississippi, not alone the grain-growers and stock-raisers of Minnesota, Iowa, Wisconsin, and Illinois have a direct interest, but also the inland carrier, the eastern consumer, the ocean navigator, the consumer abroad, the foreign importer, the buyer of imported fabrics, the miners of Montana, Idaho, and British North America, and the national Treasury itself.

The late civil war, Mr. President, has so changed the character of our foreign commerce that the leading staples of the South no longer constitute, as formerly, the bulk of our exports. Food has for a number of years taken the place of cotton, rice, and tobacco, and it is reasonable to suppose that for some years to come the settlement of European balances will largely depend upon the exportation of food. I regret that this should be so. I regret that the industry of my own State is confined, too exclusively, I think, to the culture of grain. I know that owing to our distance from eastern and foreign markets this culture has been unremunerative to our farmers; that in exporting the products of our harvest fields we are exporting the substance and richness of our soil; and that if we continue so unprofitable a business under existing disadvantages, depending upon railroads for distant transportation, we must decline to poverty. Hence the pressing and patent necessity for improving the great natural artery which has been fashioned to our hands by the Almighty Architect. The cost of transportation by the Mississippi river has been estimated at three mills per ton per mile, while by railroads of ordinary grades the usual estimate is from twelve and a half to thirteen and a third mills. This gives a difference in favor of river transportation of more than three hundred per cent. The experience of the last few years has demonstrated that bulky commodities will not bear the charges of railroad carriage for any great distance. Where articles are perishable, or where time is an element of value, railroads can be used to advantage; but the fact is notorious that during the past year, with an average price for wheat in New York city of more than two dollars per bushel, the same wheat at shipping points on the Mississippi river in Minnesota has brought during the winter an average of but eighty-five cents per bushel; to us a ruinous disparity.

Let me also call the attention of Senators to the fact that though nearly four million dollars have at various times been expended for the improvement of different portions of the Mississippi river and its leading tributaries, not one dollar of this sum has at any time been expended to improve the long line of navigable river which lies between the rapids of Rock Island and the falls of St. Anthony, and which is the natural drainage of a region larger than all of western Europe, and as fertile as any upon which the sun shines. Without referring to the present rapid development of outlying settlements in Dakota, Montana, and British North America, all more or less interested in this improvement, I will cite from the United States census the increase which was had in population; in cultivated lands, in agricultural products, and in domestic animals in the bordering States of Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa, and Illinois, from 1850 to 1860:

Remarkable, Mr. President, as is the progress thus indicated in the decade from 1850 to 1860 in these four States, these returns but faintly show the present situation of the same States. Notwithstanding the decline of immigration, and the stagnation of business in many portions of the country during the war, the material advancement of the Northwest in the last five years has been unparalleled by any equal period of peace. I will not occupy the time of the Senate with statistics of the increase, in population and productions during the last five years, of the States of Wisconsin, Iowa, and Illinois, but will content myself with submitting a few statements which will illustrate the progress of Minnesota in this period—a State with which I am most familiar, and from which the growth of the other States may be inferred. The State of Minnesota has 2,746 miles of shore line of navigable waters.

In 1865 the number of steamers registered at the single port of St. Paul was 89, with a registered tonnage of 3,088.52, with a carrying capacity of 4,973 tons, and valued at $607,500. The number of arrivals and departures of steamers at St. Paul in 1865 was 2,117.

Three steamboat companies transact business on the upper Mississippi—the Northwestern Packet Company, from Dunleith and Dubuque to St. Paul; the Northern, from St. Louis to St. Paul; and the La Crosse and Minnesota Steam Packet Company, from La Crosse to St. Paul. Details of the business done by the latter company in 1864 and 1865 have been furnished me, which I herewith submit, premising that by multiplying the sums total by three a sufficiently accurate estimate of the business upon the upper Mississippi river in 1864 and 1865 can be arrived at:

Receipts by the La Crosse and Minnesota Steam Packet Company at La Crosse, Wisconsin, during the season of navigation of the year 1864, from March 20 to November 27.

multiplying the difficulties. Let us bear these facts in mind, and the remedy at once suggests itself: close up these sloughs or a sufficient number of them, direct the water into one channel, and its immense volume will open to itself an "unvexed course to the sea."

A line of piles driven diagonally and filled in with fascines at the head of each slough will so turn the force of the current as to cause permanent deposits of sands upon the face of the barrier, which in a few years, by the growth of vegetation, will become self-sustaining, and always secure such outlet against further waste.

This assertion does not rest on mere conjecture, but has been verified by the experience of the summer of 1864, when the labor of twenty men, one day, in merely driving a few stakes and filling in with brush, raised the water in the channel ten inches between St. Paul and Pine Bend, and secured navigation for small boats through, which otherwise could not have reached above Prescott.

We do not propose in any case to attempt to change the channel of the river or dig canals, but simply to stop the leaks and make all the water available for navigation.

Having thus briefly given our views as to the obstructions caused by diverted forces, we come to the matter wherein the river cannot by its own force contribute to its own improvement.

The Upper Rapids of the Mississippi, as they are known, extend from Le Claire, in Iowa, to Davenport, and consist of a series or succession of boulders and projections interspersed with many reaches of smooth and deep water.

For an average of perhaps three months in each year these rapids are impassable for loaded boats, and all freight has to be taken over in barges and lighters and reshipped at Davenport, thereby causing a vast loss in time and money. Added to this is the Rock Island bridge, stretching diagonally across the channel, and which is never passed without danger, and proves a perfect barrier in windy weather.

The rocks projecting into the channel of the river can all be removed and perfectly safe and deep navigation secured by the judicious expenditure of a few hundred thousand dollars. The most dangerous rocks in Hell Gate, East river, have been successfully taken out, and in fact we need not go so far for an illustration, but look at the improvements made in the Lower Rapids, in spite, we may almost say, of the stupidity and inefficiency of the parties in charge.

That rocks can be cut off and removed from under water are indisputable facts; that the work can be done by contract rapidly and cheaply all will admit; and that all internal improvements attempted by the Government directly have been either failures or completed at a cost vastly beyond what the same would have been done for by individuals, are also facts.

The difference in cost between the plan here proposed and a canal around the rapids, can hardly be estimated. Probably the locks alone would be double the cost of removing all obstructions, and aside from that, the delay in passing so many boats up and down, would cause a loss in a few years equal to the original outlay.

Nature has given us this noble river almost perfect to our hands. It has hitherto answered our purpose with all, and furnished us a cheap communication with the ocean, but the time is coming, and in fact now is, when that line of communication must be made perfect, and then the powerful tug, with its four barges laden with their forty thousand bushels of wheat, can float uninterruptedly from the falls of St. Anthony to New Orleans, and return laden with the sugar and cotton of the South.

Multiply railroads as we may; stretch them from the East and the West, and yet a few years finds them crowded with local business which their simple construction has developed. The Mississippi is our chief dependence; its capacity is unlimited; it requires neither switches nor double tracks; it only requires a limited outlay to render it perfect for all time.

G. A. HAMILTON.
RUSSELL BLAKELEY.

We the undersigned having had long experience in the navigation of the upper Mississippi cordially approve of the plan proposed above for its improvement.

D. S. HARRIS,

H. L. BEEDLE,
WILLIAM F. DAVIDSON,
EDWARD H. BEEBE,
N. F. WEBB.

These gentlemen are among the most enterprising and experienced navigators of our western rivers, and where they are known, as they are throughout the valley of the Mississippi, their approbation of the views of Messrs. Hamilton & Blakeley will commend the plan to the favorable consideration of the public and I trust to that of the Congress of the United States. Should it receive the approbation of the engineers to be detailed by the Secretary of War, if the bill under consideration receives the favorable action of Congress. I am informed by excellent authority that four feet of water can always be obtained between St. Paul and Prescott, Wisconsin, and five feet below the latter point to Dunleith, at a probable cost not exceeding $250,000.

As I believe I can best accomplish my purpose in having the honorable Committee on Commerce, who have now before them the bill from the House of Representatives making the

From Maine to Florida, from Minnesota to Louisiana, all are equally interested in the question of cheap food; and any appropriation and expenditure for the improvement of this river is of national importance and equally benefits all.

Polk and the other means of transportation, we shall at once be surprised at the disproportion existing between them. There are three lines of railways connecting the Mississippi with the lakes, which are available in a greater or less degree to Minnesota, Wisconsin, and northern Iowa: these are, first, the Milwaukee and St. Paul road, extending from La Crosse to Milwaukee, which can receive and forward about twenty thousand bushels of wheat each day, which will require some sixty cars for its transportation, and which together with merchandise and passengers, is about the limit of its ability, with its present facilities for elevating; second, the Milwaukee and Prairie du Chien road, connecting the points its name indicates, and which elevator has a possible capacity of forty thousand bushels per day; third, the Illinois Central road, from Dunleith to Freeport, and thence by the Northwestern road to Chicago, whose elevator has a possible capacity of twenty thousand bushels a day.

The route by the way of Savannah and Racine is too far down the river, and its equipment and facilities are too limited to be of much benefit or to exercise any marked effect on the general result; it is not therefore considered in this connection. The same reasons, but with increased force, apply to the Rock Island road, which has a local business equal to its utmost capacity.

The Illinois Central road, for a greater part of the year, is blockaded with freight from the Dubuque and Sioux City road, and is forced to neglect its local business in order to furnish an outlet for the country immediately contiguous, and cannot be relied upon for the transportation of a bushel or a pound from above McGregor.

The Prairie du Chien road has at least half its capacity absorbed by the contributions of the McGregor Western road, and at the present rate of increase, will in a few years be unable to move more than that connection will demand.

We now come to the La Crosse route, which is the principal outlet on which Minnesota and Wisconsin must depend, and while that road is now taxed to its utmost capacity, the question arises, what are we to do in the time to come?

The capacity of all roads is vastly increased by laying another track the entire distance, but there is no probability that the present owners of either of the upper roads will embark in an enterprise requiring such an outlay for many years to come, even if it should ever be their policy.

The Lake Superior road, should it ever become a fact, will, in connection with the Minnesota Valley road, open an outlet for five or six months in the year, and if the necessary accessories of elevators and a line of propellers are provided, prove of immense value to the commerce of the Northwest; but the benefits arising from these lines of communication are necessarily local, and will be confined to the country north and west of St. Paul. The great markets of the world are situated at the outlets of navigable rivers, which in this country are at the East and South; produce will not come up the Mississippi to reach the lakes at Superior, unless it is transported at a loss, and no fact is better known and understood in transportation than this, namely, that whenever you divert freight from its only legitimate course, which is the most direct and the shortest, you have to compete with lines possessing these advantages, and rates which are remunerative to the direct route prove losing ones to the indirect. The Minnesota Central road will only add to the burdens now imposed upon the La Crosse and Prairie du Chien routes to the lakes by opening up a communication with a rich and productive part of Minnesota. Its continuation south and a connection with the Northern Missouri railroad will open a line of communication with St. Louis, and furnish that great market to Iowa and Minnesota; but all experience shows that a railroad through a rich and productive country is in a few years hardly able to transport more than it creates and develops.

In view of these facts, what remains for the country but to make available the great highway prepared for us by nature, and by a judicious expenditure render perfect that which is nearly so already: that highway whose capacity is unlimited, and which can bear the mighty burdens of the three hundred million people who will one day live on its course?

The question now is simply as to the best way of doing what all admit must be done; and on this point we beg to offer the following suggestions as the result of our own experience confirmed by that of many prominent river men: first, as to the cause of the low water in the channel; this, it must be evident to all, cannot be because there is not enough water in the river, but because it is spread over so vast a width and divided into so many channels.

From bluff to bluff, a dike leads from one to four miles, this vast high way spreads out, offering many routes divided by islands, sand bars, and deposits of drift; and, of course, is better than all others, but even this varies at different seasons, and is liable to changes and dangers. The islands which form so remarkable and picturesque a feature in the upper Mississippi, are formed by primary deposits of sand, which by the wonderful fecundity of nature, are soon covered with vegetation, and permanently divert the water from its direct course. Every such diversion reduces the volume of water, and consequently lessens the current, which effect causes new deposits, and they, in turn, new islands, thereby increasing and

From the mouth of the Minnesota to the Rock Island rapids, the Mississippi is characterized by almost innumerable wooded islands. The main volume of the stream is confined to one channel, but branches from it ramify in various directions, forming sloughs, as they are generally named, and making its water course with inclosed islands, seldom less than a mile in width. The low water in the channel of the river is caused by the numerous diversions created by these islands. Each slough subtracts a large amount of water from the main channel, and by decreasing the current allows the formation of deposits. To ascertain the cheapest and most feasible mode of stopping these leaks, and rendering all the water in the river available for navigation, is the object of the examination proposed in the bill before us. That this can be done at a very moderate cost, and in a very simple way, I am well satisfied. In a paper prepared by a skillful engineer and by a gentleman with an experience upon the river of more than twenty-five years, it is suggested that a line of piles driven diagonally and filled in with fascines at the head of each slough, will so turn the force of the current as to cause permanent deposits of sand upon the face of the barrier, which, in a few years, will become self-sustaining, and always secure such outlet against further waste. As this paper possesses much practical interest I will here ask the indulgence of the Senate while I read it:

The time seems to have arrived when the improvement of the upper Mississippi river should no longer be a problem without a solution. The vast increase in the productions of the northwestern States, their vast exports of wheat and other provisions, and their corresponding importation of all articles except food, demand that this question, second in importance to none that has been before Congress since internal improvements were first made a part and parcel of the policy of the country, should be met and answered.

It is unnecessary, at this late day, to speak of the importance of the Mississippi river, that great spinal column through which circulates the vitality which feeds and sustains so large a proportion of the people of this country and of Europe, and without which civilization would not have reached beyond the lakes at this time.

The interests of not only the States in the valley of this mighty river, but of the whole country, de-usual annual appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors, accept this bill as an amendment to that, I shall, Mr. President, after having now called the attention of the Senate to the subject-matter, permit the bill to be passed over informally for the present.

The kindred measure, likewise so important to the preservation of the navigation of the upper Mississippi river, which sometimes since I presented to the Senate—I mean the Senate joint resolution No. 64, in these words:

Whereas the Mississippi river is one of the greatest highways of inland commerce in the world, affording, together with its connecting rivers, many thousands of miles of navigable waters for the cheap transportation of agricultural, mineral, manufacturing, and other bulky products; and whereas to insure safety and economy in such transit the navigation of said stream must be protected from all obstructions, whether natural or artificial, especially as the methods of transfer on barges towed by steamers, and requiring much larger channel-way than heretofore, are now coming into general use on the western rivers; and whereas the necessities of land travel and railway connection render it very desirable that the proper steps should be taken for bridging said stream at such points as may be found practicable for effecting continuous freight lines from west to east, and under such conditions of structure, as to height, channel-way, position of piers, and plan of operation, whether by draw or otherwise, as will not, by any possibility, operate to render the navigation of said stream dangerous to the lives of passengers or the safety of cargoes; and whereas it is proper that the Congress of the United States should protect the navigation of this highway of inland waters from the obstructions of private persons or interested corporations, and yet should concede such privileges in regard to bridging the same as may not interfere with the rightful claims of river commerce, and in order to do so should be furnished with accurate information on the points stated to guide its legislation and prevent it from doing any wrong in the premises: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War be directed to appoint a commission, to consist of three officers of the corps of Engineers of the Army, to examine and report at the present session of Congress, if practicable, and if not, before the next session of Congress, upon the subject of the construction of railroad bridges across the Mississippi river at such localities and upon such plans of construction as will offer the least impediment to the navigation of the river; and that the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to defray the expenses of said commission.

I trust it may receive the favorable consideration of that committee and be ingrafted as an amendment upon the bill now before them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be regarded as postponed for the present, no objection being made to that course.

QUARTERMASTER GENERAL'S CLERKS.

Mr. WILSON. I move to take up the Senate joint resolution No. 96, providing for the transfer of certain clerks to the office of the Quartermaster General.

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that thirty-seven clerks of the first class, two of the second class, and one of the fourth class, from the ordnance department, ten of the first class from the subsistence department, and four of the first class from the office of the Secretary of War, shall be transferred to the office of the Quartermaster General, and proposes to appropriate $65,800 for the payment of their salaries for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Where does this come from?

Mr. WILSON. I will simply say in regard to this matter that the resolution is based upon a recommendation of General Meigs. He desired to have these clerks classed higher, but the committee thought they would transfer them to his office in the same classes they are in at present.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I ask whether the matter has been submitted to and received the approbation of the Secretary of War.

Mr. WILSON. It was sent to us indorsed by the Secretary of War.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Approved by him?

Mr. WILSON. I understood so.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think, from the recent course taken with regard to the clerks in the different Departments, that the proper place for this measure would be on one of the appropriation bills.

Mr. WILSON. If the Senator desires that course to be taken, I have no objection to letting this resolution lie over and be put upon the Army appropriation bill when it comes here.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Army appropriation bill is here.

Mr. WILSON. It can lie over until we take up that bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. In the mean time I think the Committee on Military Affairs had better inquire whether it meets the approbation of the Secretary of War. I am very unwilling to act in matters of this kind until they receive the real approbation and recommendation of the head of the Department.

Mr. WILSON. The resolution was sent to us by the War Department. I accept, however, the suggestion of the Senator from Maine, and will consent to this resolution lying on the table for the present, and I will make an effort to have it put upon the Army appropriation bill when it comes up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be laid upon the table, if there be no objection.

RECONSTRUCTION.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I desire to make a remark to Senators, in consequence of the notice which I gave a week ago that I should to-day call up the joint resolution reported by the committee on reconstruction, which has already been passed by the House of Representatives. I am obliged, to-day, to ask the indulgence of the Senate, and to say that I shall not desire them to proceed with that matter until Wednesday. I am utterly unable, myself, to take charge of it; but whatever may be my own condition on Wednesday, I shall expect the Senate to proceed with the consideration of the subject. I defer calling it up until Wednesday morning, when I hope to have the attention of the Senate to it.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPOINTMENTS.

Mr. WILSON. I move to take up the House joint resolution No. 134, relative to appointments to the Military Academy of the United States.

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that hereafter the age for the admission of cadets to the United States Military Academy shall be between seventeen and twenty-two years; but any person who has served honorably and faithfully not less than one year as an officer or enlisted man in the Army of the United States, either as a volunteer or in the regular service, in the late war for the suppression of the rebellion, and who possesses the other qualifications prescribed by law, shall be eligible to appointment up to the age of twenty-four years. Cadets at the Military Academy are hereafter to be appointed one year in advance of the time of their admission, except in cases where, by reason of death or other cause, a vacancy occurs which cannot be thus provided for by an appointment in advance; but no pay or allowance is to be made to any such appointee until he shall be regularly admitted on examination as now provided by law; nor is this provision to apply to appointments to be made in the present year. In addition to the requirements necessary for admission as provided by the third section of the act making further provisions for the corps of Engineers, approved April 29, 1812, candidates shall be required to have a knowledge of the elements of English grammar, of descriptive geography, particularly of our own country, and of the history of the United States.

Mr. JOHNSON. Will the honorable chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs state what is the reason for requiring the appointments to be made a year in advance?

Mr. WILSON. This joint resolution comes from the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives. The chairman of that committee was last year, a member of the Board of Visitors at West Point, and was very anxious to have the changes made in the law which this resolution proposes. The first change is to raise the minimum age of admission from sixteen to seventeen, so that boys shall not enter so young as heretofore, but shall be more mature. Then it provides that young men who have served in the Army, either as officers or as soldiers, may be admitted up to twenty-four years of age. The object of the provision requiring the appointments to be made a year in advance is to give the persons appointed an opportunity during that year to fit themselves to enter the Academy. Then the resolution provides for increasing the standard of admission now required. Very little is required by this increase. I think it ought to be much larger than it is, and that the institution ought not to be a primary school; it ought to be a higher school; but there is objection to that. The increase here provided for is very slight indeed—English grammar, history of the United States, and small matters of that kind.

Mr. JOHNSON. The honorable member will permit me to ask him if there is no qualification required now. There is, I think, a pretty rigid one.

Mr. WILSON. But very little qualifications are required now. This is an addition to those qualifications. I should like the Secretary to read that portion of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of that portion of the joint resolution being asked for, it will be again read.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Before the reading of that section, I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts for a moment to the fact, and I suppose it will be recollected by him, that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY] presented to the Senate, at the last session, a proposition, which had a good deal of strength in the body, changing the mode of appointing cadets to West Point. It was then presented to the Senate under circumstances which prevented its full consideration. I was not willing to support it at that time, because its merits could not then be fully understood and considered. It was proposed as an amendment to an appropriation bill. All Senators know that the proposition could not very well be considered in that connection, with the opposition to it as legislation upon an appropriation bill; but as it is a very important proposition, I think, more important, perhaps, than any provision of this bill, if it have any merit at all, it is due to the Senator from Rhode Island that we should wait until he returns before we propose to change the present plan. I cannot state to the Senate what was the proposition of the Senator from Rhode Island, but I think it was that there should be a board in each State for the examination of candidates; that the member of Congress from the district should present the names of a certain number of young men, and those young men should go before the board, and should be examined with a view to their physical qualifications for the military service, their intellectual qualifications and capacity, and also with regard to their education; that they should be examined by the board in advance, so as to prevent so many failures in the institution. I am not prepared to say that I am in favor of the proposition of the Senator from Rhode Island; but to say the least, it is worthy of the consideration of the Senate; and if the Senator from Massachusetts will not object, I will move to postpone this bill for a reasonable time until the Senator from Rhode Island shall return.

Mr. WILSON. I have certainly no objection to the bill going over for that purpose, although I must say to the Senator that I expect little to come of the postponement. It will be found very difficult to devise any plan that will be satisfactory to Congress, and especially to the House of Representatives, changing the mode of appointment of cadets at West Point. However, at this stage, I will allow the bill to lie over. It is from the House of Representatives; no amendment is proposed to it; and I will allow it to lie over until the return of the Senator from Rhode Island.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution now before the Senate will be postponed by common consent, no objection being interposed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (S. No. 379) to establish in the District of Columbia a reform school for boys;

A bill (H. R. No. 564) to annul the thirty-fourth section of the declaration of rights of the State of Maryland so far as it applies to the District of Columbia; and

A bill (H. R. No. 601) to grade East Capitol street and establish Lincoln square.

ADMISSION OF COLORADO—VETO.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move to take up the bill which was vetoed by the President of the United States for the admission of the State of Colorado. I think a proposition of that sort ought to be considered.

Mr. WADE. I hope we shall not take up that bill now. I hope it will be permitted to lie awhile before we take it up.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Senator from Ohio, who is to some extent responsible for this measure as chairman of the Committee on Territories, desires not to take up the bill to-day; but if he is willing to say to-morrow at one o'clock, so that all Senators shall know that the bill is to come up at that time, I am willing to modify my motion, and will move to take up the bill with a view to making it the special order for to-morrow at one o'clock. Perhaps before taking up a measure of this sort, we ought to give notice a day in advance, so that Senators may be here. I have therefore no objection to modifying my motion so as to move to take the bill up with the view to make it the special order for to-morrow at one o'clock. I will state to the Senator that I name to-morrow for the reason that the Senator from Maine has notified the Senate that on the next day he expects to call up a question which will occupy, unquestionably, the Senate for a number of days; what length of time none of us is now able to say. It is proper that within a reasonable time the message of the President of the United States should receive the consideration of the Senate, and I do not think that we ought to wait until the Senate has disposed of the reconstruction proposition. Therefore I think it is right that we should either to-day or to-morrow take up this bill. My present motion is to take it up; and then if it is taken up I shall move to make it the special order for to-morrow at one o'clock.

Mr. WADE. I hope the bill will not be taken up now. I do not think we can at this time definitely fix a proper time to consider the bill. The Senate is very thin. I believe several members are now absent. I do not know when they will be here. When it is taken up the Senate ought to be full, and I cannot say that that will be to-morrow or the next day. I do not think it is best for us at the present time to take it up, and I hope we shall not do so.

Mr. SUMNER. There are one or two of the Senators who are now absent who are to be here to-morrow, which is the time proposed by the Senator from Indiana for the consideration of this question. I think that we may expect to-morrow a reasonably full Senate. I am inclined to think, still further, that we ought not to postpone the consideration of the question. I do not think that a veto message of the President has ever before in our history been so long postponed. It has been considered from day to day, and discussion has been allowed to go on until a conclusion was reached. I am not aware that any message of that character has ever been laid upon the table and there allowed to sleep as if it was not to be proceeded with. It seems to me that the Senate ought to proceed with it at an early day, that the question may be definitively settled. As it stands now, the question is not definitively settled. It is an open question still whether the State of Colorado shall be received into the Union. It ought to be closed.

Mr. WADE. I have had some little experience as to these veto messages, not so much nor so often formerly as now; but I know very well they have been treated precisely as any other measure has been treated here. There is no reason that I know of why they should be considered in any other light than any other measure that is important before the body, and they have always been so considered. The Senator from Massachusetts says that we have proceeded immediately to take them up and consider them, and not laid them on the table. That is not my experience. When what was called the homestead bill, in the days of Mr. Buchanan, was vetoed, it lay here nearly three months, if I am not greatly mistaken, before it was finally settled. It was laid on the table, and adjournments took place, precisely as upon any other question that was deemed by the body important, and which they wished to discuss. I see no reason why we should at this time take up this message. I do not think we are ready to dispose of it properly at the present time, and I do not think the friends of the measure ought to take it up at this time.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I certainly would not ask the Senate to consider a bill when it could not be properly considered; but the Senator from Ohio has not stated any reason why the Senate is not prepared to consider this bill. It was pressed upon the attention of the Senate more than a month ago. It was said we were in a condition to consider it then. We did consider it and rejected the bill. Then, again, there was a motion to reconsider, and after further protracted debate a different result was arrived at in the Senate, somewhat astonishing to some of us. After two debates in the Senate upon the bill it finally went to the President of the United States. He did not agree with the Senate in its last vote; he thought the Senate was right in its first vote. Now that question is before us, presented as an important question by the President of the United States for our consideration. I know of no reason why the Senate is not prepared to consider it. The Senator from Ohio gives no reason. The question of the admission of a State into the Union is a very grave and important one. It loses none of its gravity and importance by the fact that it is now accompanied by the veto of the President of the United States. It is due, I think, to the dignity of that message that it should be considered at an early day. For this reason I have moved to take the bill up with the view of making it the special order for to-morrow.

Mr. WADE. The Senator asks me why I am not ready to take up this bill now, and I am very frank, as I am on all occasions, to tell him the reason. I am a friend to this measure, notwithstanding the veto of the President. I have come to the conclusion that this Territory ought to be admitted as a State for a good many reasons that might be assigned, but which it would not be proper to argue now. I wish to deal with this question as I do with all others that I am in any way intrusted with the charge of. I do not think the bill is as likely to be successful if we take it up now as it would be if we were to postpone it a little longer, and when I have a measure at heart that I intend to pass I intend to take every honorable means that I can to pass it. I do not think it is politic now for the friends of the bill to take it up. That is all I have to say about it. As one of the friends of the measure I hope it will not be considered now, and for the reason I have given.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Senator from Indiana thinks that this matter ought to be considered immediately because, he says, a month ago the Senate considered the measure and rejected it, but afterward adopted the measure and sent it to the President who has vetoed it, and now a proper courtesy on our part requires that we should consider it immediately. I do not know but that the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio ought to be listened to from another consideration besides that which he has given. It seems that Colorado had a very hard time of it. We passed an enabling act, two years ago, saying to the people of Colorado that if they desired a State government, they might vote upon the proposition, adopt a State government, and we would receive them. At the first vote after the enabling act was passed, Colorado rejected the proposition. Upon a reconsideration of the question, however, the people of that Territory adopted the proposition, and now send us a State constitution, and ask for admission. The President took the matter into consideration, because it suited him, or directly in accordance with the provisions of the enabling act itself, I believe, the President was authorized by a proclamation to admit the State; but instead of doing so, he sent the proposition for admission to us, and said, "I leave this matter to Congress." Congress took it into consideration. It is true that the Senate, upon the first vote, like the people of Colorado, rejected the proposition, and left the State out. The President said to us that he was willing to leave it to us, and whatever we might do on the subject, I understood, he was perfectly willing to give his sanction to. However, the Senate, after first rejecting it, reconsidered the proposition and then adopted it, and said to the people of Colorado that they could be admitted. This shows a change, not only on the part of the people of that Territory, but a change, after reconsideration, on the part of Congress. Now, sir, let us give a little time to the President of the United States. I am satisfied, upon all the precedents and all the history of Colorado, that if he has a short time, he will send us, in the course of a few days, a message withdrawing his veto message. Let him have the same time that the people of Colorado had to consider the proposition, and the same time the Senate had to reconsider it, and in all probability he will come to as correct a conclusion as the people of Colorado and the Senate of the United States.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I voted against the admission of Colorado, but I am quite willing to leave the question of when this veto message shall be taken up, within reasonable limits, to the friends of the measure. As I differed from them with very great reluctance, and was disposed, if I could, to vote with them, I am certainly not disposed to press its consideration at a time which is inconvenient to them and against their wishes. I am willing that they should take their own time, and shall therefore vote with my friend from Ohio on the motion to take up this question, he being chairman of the committee which has the bill in charge. I think it is proper to comply to a reasonable extent with his wishes on the subject.

But I rose merely to say that I can see no occasion for the suggestion that by deferring the consideration of this bill a discourtesy would be committed toward the President. It so happened that the message was not read upon the day on which it was laid on the table. It was suggested by a Senator at that time, who was desirous that it should be read on that day, that not to read it then would be not treating the President with that respect which was due to him as President in relation to the message itself. It also so happened that before that suggestion was made I had made a motion to go into executive session; and I replied at that time that nothing like a want of respect or a disposition to treat the President with disrespect existed, so far as I was concerned. I see that the idea has been caught at and that some presses have taken pains to represent that there was intentional discourtesy on the part of the Senate.

Now, sir, I wish to repel that idea here, and utterly. It so happened that when that message came in we were engaged in a debate and the consideration of a bill. The message was not read but was laid on the table of course, and we proceeded with that bill to a late hour in the day, when we were all fatigued. The time arrived at which we usually adjourn, but it was absolutely necessary for certain purposes to have an executive session that evening, and I moved an executive session, not willingly but because it was necessary, thinking we could dispose of the matters that required immediate attention then. Then was interposed the question of reading the veto message. I insisted upon my motion, for I thought at that late hour it was hardly worth while to take up a message which was to be listened to at any rate with respect and attention, and have it read at that period of the evening, but it might as well come up in the regular order of business the next morning. I think still that was the correct course. I utterly repel the idea for myself and for all others of the slightest intention on the part of anybody (because I know that it did not exist) to do anything that was at all out of the way, or improper, or disrespectful to the President of the United States. As is well known, I am not in the habit of treating any officer of this Government who is charged with public duties with any disrespect whatever, either in words or acts, and I believe that to be the general disposition of the Senate itself.

I only notice this because it shows a disposition to make a mountain out of a mole-hill, and construe what was merely an ordinary proceeding in the course of business into something that was not intended or in any way designed; and, I will add, on the suggestion of my friend from New Hampshire, [Mr. CLARK,] that these questions are not questions of courtesy, at all; they are questions of business. We pass a bill; we send it to the President; when he gets ready, within a certain time which is limited, he returns the bill to us, if he sees fit, with his objections. When we get ready and think that the time has properly arrived to consider them, we consider them and come to our own conclusions. It is a matter of business deliberation in which the good of the country is involved, the ordinary course of legislation, which has reference to the good of the whole, and not a mere courtesy to an individual, whatever may be his position, whether he happens to be the President of the United States, who objects to a bill, or whether he happens to be a chairman of a committee who may have charge of the bill, or anybody else who is interested in the bill and desires to be heard upon it, or that a particular course should be taken. It is for the Senate to decide; and on all these questions, as an individual I am to act with reference to the question itself, and not with reference to what may be the wishes of others in relation to it. When it comes before me, as a Senator I act in my own time and in my own way, if agreeable to the majority here, which upon each question has a right to decide. And now, sir, I say that if we should conclude that the proper time for the consideration of the objections of the President to the bill has not yet arrived, it is to be construed, so far as I am concerned, and I trust all others, into a mere opinion that we will consider it at another time when we are better prepared in our own judgments to take it into consideration.

Mr. HENDRICKS. In the main I agree with the Senator from Maine in his suggestions upon the question of business. I think it would be better that we should consider all such questions as questions of business rather than questions of courtesy. But the Senator is aware of the fact that it is usual, because perhaps the question is a grave one, and because of the weight that is given to an executive communication, to consider veto messages and bills accompanying them at an early day after they are communicated to the Senate. A very lengthy postponement of it is likely to be understood by many as an intentional one, as a matter of discourtesy to the President.

The Senator is aware of the fact that when the Senate pass a bill, and the House of Representatives amends that bill in important particulars, and sends it back here, we consider those amendments at an early day; perhaps because it comes up in the course of business, but also, I think, for the reason that there is a question in dispute between the two Houses, and that question ought to be settled. Then when there is a question of difference between the President and the Senate, that question of difference ought to be settled at an early day, I think, as a question of business.

To the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio I have no particular objection, of course. He has a right to select a time when he thinks he can carry his measure instead of losing it. I do not quarrel with him about that, and on this particular question I think the opinion of the Senator from Ohio is entitled to a great deal of weight. A year or two ago the Senate passed the enabling act upon the assurance given to the Senate by him that there was a large population in Colorado, he thought about sixty thousand or over, and that the current of immigration was setting in very rapidly into Colorado, and that there soon would be a very large population, fully justifying the admission of the State. Then, when the bill came up a month or so ago, the Senator said that in all that he was mistaken, that he was misled, and that there seemed to be a much less population there than he had supposed. Clearly the evidence justified the opinion that the Senator then expressed, for no man can question that there is much less than sixty thousand inhabitants in that Territory, and at that time the Senator thought it to be his duty, without having either the fear or respect of vetoes before his eyes, to oppose the admission of Colorado on the ground that the population of the Territory was so inconsiderable. The other day when the bill passed he was not able to show us that there had been any increase of population since he said to the Senate that the population was too small to justify the admission. It is possible that if we postpone this bill now the Senator will again change his opinion. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. HENDERSON] suggests that if we give the President an opportunity he may change; but I have more reason to hope that the Senator from Ohio, having already occupied three grounds upon this question, may occupy a fourth directly if we give him some time. But I think the question ought to be considered.

One word in reply to the Senator from Missouri. He intimated that the President, in communicating this business to the Senate at an early day of the session, had said that the subject was referred to Congress and that he would abide by the decision of Congress. The President, in that communication, did not say so; it does not authorize that construction to be put upon his communication. The President first states the facts; then he says:

"The proceedings in the second instance for the formation of a State government having differed in time and mode from those specified in the act of March 21, 1864, I have declined to issue the proclamation for which provision is made by the fifth section of the law, and therefore submit the question for the consideration and further action of Congress."

That is all. No opinion is expressed by him, no intimation expressed by him. The President could issue no proclamation upon that proceeding out in Colorado. The law did not authorize it; it was not justified by any law either of the General Government or of the Territorial Legislature; it was an irregular proceeding, a party proceeding, gotten up by the chairmen of the committees of the different political parties of the Territory, and the election was not such as is usually held. Delegates to the convention were appointed by county conventions, as if you were appointing delegates to a political convention in a State or Territory. It has none of that regularity which we expect in such grave proceedings when a State is to be brought into the Union.

But, Mr. President, it is not proper now to discuss the merits of the question. In the absence of any sufficient reason why the bill should not be considered, I think it is due to the importance of the question, to the importance of any executive communication, that we should consider it at an early day. If the Senate decides otherwise, I am individually entirely content.

Mr. WADE. I did not intend to say anything more about this matter, but the Senator from Indiana has insinuated that I have vacillated a good deal on this question. I agree that my course upon it has not been entirely what would seem consistent to one unacquainted with all the facts of the case. I voted against this bill at first, and on the reconsideration I voted for it. I gave no reasons for my last vote, because I do not care so much about giving reasons generally for the course I take here. I suppose that my reasons are to be judged by my votes. My votes always manifest the strongest reasons. Whoever searches the record will find my opinions much oftener from my votes than from anything I say in the Senate. But I think I had very good reason in this case to change my vote between the time I first voted against the bill and afterward on the reconsideration voted for it. Although I was upon the committee that reported the bill, and endeavored to obtain all the facts within my reach, I found that I had not got hold of all the facts that really existed in the case, when the bill was reported. When the bill was reported I differed from the other members of the committee on Territories who thought that there were sufficient reasons for permitting the State to come in. But after that vote was given we had a great deal of additional light thrown upon the subject from the records of the different departments of this Government showing the population to be greater than was supposed when the bill was first up, and when that vote was given, and that the wealth and the ability of the Territory to maintain a State government were infinitely greater than any member of the Senate had before supposed. I believe the fact to be that no Territory in the West had shown at the time of its admission as a State a greater amount of wealth or equaled the amount of taxation paid in this Territory.

I shall detain the Senate but a moment further, for I am not going to argue the question nor enter into a lengthy explanation as to my votes on the subject. I wish simply to ask whether ever before in the history of this Government there was a veto by a President of a bill for the admission of a State. You may trace every Administration from the time that States were first admitted till now, and this is the first instance when an Administration has seen fit to veto a bill which Congress had passed admitting a State into this Union. There has been no uniformity in regard to the practice of Congress in the admission of new States, and consequently they have been admitted sometimes with a larger and sometimes with a smaller population, and that has hardly formed any criterion. It has been said, and I think properly said, as a general thing, there should be about population enough for a Representative in Congress; but that rule has not been adhered to; we have vacillated one way and the other just as the circumstances of the case seemed to require. But the question is one peculiarly within the jurisdiction of Congress, and less than any other within the province and observation of the President of the United States. This is the first instance where the people of a Territory wanted to come into the Union and where Congress had passed an enabling act for that purpose, that the President has turned round and put his veto upon the bill for their admission, so as to keep them out. You cannot find any other instance in which it has been done, and you will probably never find one again. We have not been very exacting of the Territories when they desired to become States. Generally, whenever the people of a Territory have come together and said they were able to maintain a State government, Congress has rather considered the question as one belonging to them than to anybody else. We are not the guardians of Territories so as to say that when they are willing to relieve the General Government of the burden of sustaining a territorial government and they are able to maintain themselves we will prevent them from doing it; but we have generally accommodated them and said, "If you are willing to relieve us from the burden of sustaining a territorial government and to take upon yourselves a State government, we are very glad to invite you in." That has been the general course of Congress, but it has been departed from by the President upon this occasion, and I am not going now to scrutinize his reasons for it. He may have good reasons. Undoubtedly they are satisfactory to himself; but they are not quite as satisfactory to me and I hope they are not to many members of this Congress. His action is novel, and I hope it will not be repeated by any Executive hereafter when Congress gives its assent to the admission of a State. But I am not going to argue that point now. If I have voted both ways upon this subject, I have only to say that the evidence was made to appear very differently on the different occasions when the measure was up, and that is the reason I changed my vote.

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. President, I am unwilling that this question shall be treated as a question of courtesy to the President of the United States. I prefer that it shall be regarded, as I think it really is, simply as a question on the order of business. I believe it is in that way that the Senator from Indiana has chosen to present it—a question on the order of business. Now, looking at it in that light, it does seem to me that the Senate ought not longer to postpone its consideration. It has been already unduly postponed; postponed, I think, longer than any such measure ever before was postponed.

But as I have said, it is simply a question on the order of business, and it is not a question of principle, nor am I disposed to regard it as a question of courtesy; therefore I am very much disposed to follow what seems to be the inclination of the Senate. I do not wish to interpose any individual opinions of mine to go across those of Senators who have this measure specially in charge. If the Senate is not disposed to proceed with its consideration to-day, if there is obviously a majority against it, I am perfectly willing for one that for the present it should subside. At the same time I cannot say that without expressing the opinion that the Senate does owe it to itself and to the question at issue not to allow its consideration to be too long postponed.

Having said this, perhaps I have said enough in reply to the practical observations that have been made by Senators who have preceded me; but there seems to have been a disposition to open the main question; different Senators have expressed their opinions with more or less fullness on that. I shall not follow them in that. This is not the time for such a discussion. That time may come. It has already been before in this Chamber, and then I had ample opportunity to say what I chose to say. Perhaps hereafter I may deem it proper to take another opportunity; but so far as I am personally concerned I am in no haste to speak. I have no disposition to press the matter.

I cannot take my seat, however, without making one remark in reply to my friend from Ohio. He says that he is for the admission of Colorado now, notwithstanding the veto of the President. To that I reply that I am against the admission of Colorado now, notwithstanding the veto of the President. I, for one, mean always to stand by the principle that no State shall be received into this Union from this time forward with a constitution which disavows the first principle of the Declaration of Independence. On that principle I stand, and I shall take advantage of every opportunity that is given to me to uphold it, whether by any Senator on this floor or by the President of the United States.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I was out of the Chamber at the time when this matter was called up, and I desire to ask whether the question now is on taking up the bill at this time for consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. CLARK in the chair.) The question is on taking up the bill and making it the special order for to-morrow at one o'clock.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I am very anxious to get before the Senate, if it be possible, prior to Wednesday, and to have the action of the Senate upon it, a bill reported by the Committee on Public Lands, which is a very important one. It relates to the public lands in the States that have been in rebellion. It is a bill which has already been passed by the House of Representatives, and has come to the Senate, and I look upon it as one of the most important measures, perhaps, upon which we shall act during this session. I hope that the bill will not be taken up at this time, but that an opportunity will be afforded to take up the bill to which I allude.

Mr. JOHNSON. The motion made by the honorable member from Indiana is not to take up the bill now, except for the purpose of affixing some day on which it shall be considered. He has proposed to-morrow. Perhaps that is too short a time, and as the friends of the bill ought to have, in some measure, the fixing of the time at which it is to be considered, I would suggest to them that they name some day when the matter shall be considered.

I regretted very much to see the Senate a few days since refuse to take up the message; and I also regretted to see that treated as an intention by the Senate to act discourteously toward the President; and I still more regretted to see it stated that that was considered to be the purpose of the honorable member from Maine and those who agreed with him at that time and who objected to the consideration of the message. I certainly never supposed that the honorable member from Maine intended any such thing or was capable at any time of showing any discourtesy to any branch of the Government. As far as I am concerned his disclaimer was perfectly unnecessary. And I am equally sure that the majority of the Senate could not have contemplated any such discourtesy to the President; but I submit to the friends of the bill for the admission of Colorado whether it is not proper that some day should be fixed on which the subject may be considered. If to-morrow is too soon, say to-morrow week or this day week; we shall all then be notified of the time when the matter is to be called up and can all be at our posts to vote as we may think it our duty to vote. I will add that although so far no discourtesy has been designed to be shown to the President of the United States, yet perhaps it would look a little discourteous, whether designed or not, if we should refuse to fix some day at which the question shall be considered. I appeal, therefore, to my friend from Ohio to name some day next week or this week on which he will agree to take the measure up.

It is not my purpose, because the matter is not before the Senate, to answer one of the suggestions of the honorable member from Ohio, which would have been more proper, perhaps, if the bill were before Senate than simply on a motion to take it up, that this is the first time when a President of the United States has vetoed a bill for the introduction of a State into the Union. That may be true; but it is not the less true that he has the constitutional right to veto it; just as much right to veto a bill of that description as any other bill that the Congress of the United States may pass. The honorable member is mistaken in supposing, too, as he seems to suppose, that this measure comes before us by force of an enabling act. I do not understand that to be the condition of things. What the enabling act authorized the people of the Territory to do was to vote under certain restrictions and at certain times, and at the election held under the authority of that act they rejected the constitution by a majority of some three or four thousand.

But I conclude with asking the honorable member from Ohio, or the friends of this measure, whether it is not advisable, looking to the wishes of all the members of the Senate, that some day should be set aside at which this measure should be considered.

Mr. WADE. I should not say another word if it had not been insinuated that if we treat this measure as we do other measures the President will be somehow called in question in regard to it.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have not said so.

Mr. WADE. You appealed to us, saying that if we delayed it might be so construed, or so understood, or something of that kind. Now, I disclaim all such considerations and all idea that such an effect can follow. I do not know whether the President supposes, or anybody else supposes, when he has exercised his constitutional right that nobody denies him, and has sent a bill back here for our reconsideration, that we should not treat it precisely as we do any other question, or any other message coming from him, I care not what. Why should we not treat it as we do his annual message, or any other message, with regard to which we act precisely as we do with reference to any other question that is before us? If we are not ready to take it up we postpone it; and the President has no right to consider that he is treated with any courtesy or any discourtesy whatever we may do with it, unless we treat him with disrespect in relation to it.

Our time, our manner, our way of dealing with the veto message of the President is within our own power, precisely the same as every other question. There is no difference between it and other measures, in that respect, in my judgment; and therefore I have forbore to say anything about the question of courtesy, nor will it influence my action because it cannot affect the President at all. We are entirely independent, as he is independent, any further than he is bound by the Constitution within ten days to make up his mind and send back a bill either approved or disapproved, and he generally has taken the longest time in which to do it. There is no reason why he should not do so, if he is not ready to make up his mind earlier; and it is no discourtesy to us that he goes to the extreme of his rope on the subject. It can be no discourtesy to him if we take our time to consider his message. There is no question of courtesy or discourtesy in the matter at all.

As to the manner of taking up this bill, my course upon it is precisely what it has been with every other bill of which I have had charge. I am anxious that the bill of which I am in favor should pass; and if I stand behind it to conduct it through the Senate, I will always, so far as I can, make use of all honorable means to secure its passage. If I think one time is more favorable to it than another, I will take that time, if the Senate will give it to me. I do not think the Senate ought at present to fix a time for the consideration of this bill, because several Senators are absent and there is a very important measure just before us, and about to come up which will take some time. I do not know that we ought now to fix a time for this matter. I prefer to leave it under the control of the Senate, from day to day, without making it a special order.

Here let me say that I have never been able to understand the reason why Senators are so intent upon making questions special orders. They have no more force than other bills which are not made special orders. A Senator can move at any time to take up a bill, and the order of business is entirely within the control of a majority of the Senate from day to day. I may add that if I am to conduct this bill I shall take no longer time than I think is necessary to bring it fairly before the body, taking no advantage of one side or the other, seeking nothing but the deliberate judgment of the Senate upon it, and desiring action when all can be present. If it was so now that that could be done, I should not delay the measure a moment; I would as soon have the vote taken to-day as any other day. There are several Senators absent, however, who ought to be here to pass their judgment upon it. I cannot tell when they will be back. When they are here, if any Senator suggests to me that he wants the bill taken up, and I can see no good reason to the contrary, I shall very cheerfully move to take it up, and that without any attempt to take advantage of one side or the other. I expect always to act in subordination to the deliberate will of a majority of this body fairly expressed. I never ask for any snap judgment on any measure I have in charge, however strongly I may feel on the subject. That is not my habit, and it will not be on this occasion. I want the bill to pass, but I want a fair expression of the Senate upon it, with all present who see fit to be present. The question of amending the Constitution is coming up in a day or two, and we have been told that when it is once up we ought not to depart from its consideration until we get through with it. I think, then, that at this time we ought not to take up this bill for action. I think it had better lie on the table as it is, with my assurance that, so far as I am concerned, at the earliest time when it can be taken up so as to get a full expression of the Senate upon it, it shall be done.

Mr. HENDRICKS. With the permission of the Senate, at the suggestion of gentlemen around me I will modify my motion so as to take up the bill with the view of making it the special order for to-morrow week. I want no snap judgment, to use the language of the Senator from Ohio; and I am glad to hear him say that he does not. I was a little afraid perhaps that he did, from the fact that one evening here, when a couple of Senators were sick, he insisted upon a vote just then, and said he had a right to take advantage of their sickness. I do not want any snap judgment on this question.

Mr. WADE. I have no objection to having the bill made the special order for to-morrow week, with the understanding, however, that it will be of course superseded at the will of those having charge of the reconstruction matter, if that should then be under consideration. I have no objection to naming that time, hoping that the Senate will then be full, and if it should not be, I can move a postponement.

Mr. HENDRICKS. If the report of the committee of fifteen should be the business then before the Senate, of course it would take precedence of a special order, so that there can be no difficulty upon that question.

Mr. WADE. Very well, then, I have no objection to that. It is some time ahead, and I hope we shall be ready then.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I should like to have a further understanding with the Senator from Ohio. I shall go with him, if there is any considerable portion of the friends of this bill absent at the time who cannot be here and that want to vote on it, to postpone it until they can be here. If it is the will of this body that Colorado shall come in under the circumstances, I want her to come in. I do not want to pass any bill here because I find some Senators absent, and I shall always vote to postpone a measure until there can be a full hearing upon it. Now, if it should so happen at the time the measure is taken up that there should be an absence on the other side of the Senate, I shall want to postpone it, and I hope the Senator from Ohio will meet me in that sentiment. I shall want to postpone it, if it shall be found at the time that there is any considerable number of Senators who are opposed to the bill absent, and I want the same position to be assumed by the Senator from Ohio, in that event, that he assumes in regard to an absence on his side of the Senate. Then, sir, I modify my motion so as to make the bill the order of the day for to-morrow week, and then everybody will know it is coming up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana moves to take up the bill

(S. No. 74) for the admission of the State of Colorado into the Union, and to make it the special order for Tuesday week. The Chair will divide the question, because it requires two different votes. The first is carried by a majority and the other by a two-thirds vote. The first question is on the motion to take up the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana now moves that the bill be made the special order for Tuesday week, at one o'clock.

The motion was agreed to, two thirds of the Senate voting therefor.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the fortification appropriation bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the Senator from Maine will not press the consideration of that bill, because I represent, in behalf of the Committee on Finance, a very important bill, which I should like to bring to the consideration of the Senate. The bill he now proposes to take up is the same one which he proposed to take up on Thursday last. There is no necessity for pressing it now. Last week he gave notice of his intention to call up to-day a question in which the whole country feels a great interest, and I did not intend to resist its being taken up. Why not now take up the report of the committee on reconstruction, and proceed to dispose of it? There is no occasion for proceeding to the consideration of the fortification bill now, and I trust therefore it will not be pressed.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If the honorable Senator will take pains to inquire a little he will perhaps come to the conclusion that it is hardly worth while to press his bill this morning. I made my motion, supposing he would not do so. If he would inquire of the Secretary of the Treasury, who, I see is present, he would not insist upon his motion now, I think.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not act here as the agent of the Secretary of the Treasury; I act on my own responsibility.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will give a reason, then, why the Senator's bill should not be taken up. I had a resolution in my hand on Friday, which I did not get a chance to offer, calling for some information which I deemed it necessary to have before that bill came up. On presenting it to the Secretary of the Treasury to see if I could get the information, he remarked to me that he was not quite ready to afford it, and that he would not advise that that bill be taken up until I could get the information which I required; and on that suggestion I supposed the bill would not be pressed now. I should be unwilling to proceed with it under these circumstances because I am not prepared to do so.

With regard to the bill which I have called up, the fortification bill, I do not know that it is of great importance that it should be taken up this morning instead of another day, except that I desire, as I said before, to have it out of my way, because there are other matters to which I must afterwards give my attention, and I do not like to be embarrassed with it. It is a very short matter; and if the Senate will allow it to come up it can be disposed of in less than half an hour without the slightest difficulty in the world. Then my object will have been accomplished; and if the Senator from Ohio is disposed to ask the Senate to take up his bill notwithstanding the fact that I am not ready, I suppose after he has stated his views, I can secure a postponement if I desire it. Although he represents a very important bill from the Committee on Finance, I believe I have the honor of representing an important bill from the Committee on Finance, also, which has been before this body, reported, and on the table for several weeks, while his has been before the body not yet for a single week, for it was reported, I believe, last Tuesday—not a week ago.

Under the circumstances, I do not mean to have any further controversy, either of an "excited" or an unexcited character, with the honorable Senator from Ohio on that subject. The question is for the Senate to decide. If they decide that the Senator from Ohio shall be allowed to take up his bill to the exclusion of other business, and proceed with it under the circumstances, very well. I am not more interested in it than anybody else.

Mr. SHERMAN. I came here this morning with the expectation that the Senator from Maine would call up the joint resolution reported from the committee of fifteen, which has excited so much attention; and I have yet heard no reason given why it has not been called up. Perhaps a reason was given when I was not in my seat; but I see no reason myself why that subject should not be proceeded with, or if there is a reason, it should be stated to the Senate. We must conduct our business with some kind of order, and when notice is given of a proposition to take up a particular measure of great importance, we ought to know the reason why it is not done.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will state to the Senator that I gave notice this morning why I could not call up that report until Wednesday.

Mr. SHERMAN. I did not hear it. Then I will state further to the Senate that I show little feeling about this matter, chiefly from what occurred here on Thursday. I represented a bill which was reported from the Committee on Finance. I had no interest in it. It was a bill prepared at the Treasury Department, and came to us in the ordinary course of business, and was reported by the committee without the assent of the chairman. That bill, standing before the Senate, has just as good a right to be heard as if it had the assent of the chairman of the committee; and yet, when I endeavored to bring it up on Thursday, he treated it in a very discourteous and improper manner. It was late in the day, and perhaps he was fatigued, and I was not disposed to hold the Senator to a very rigid account; but when I read over the debate which occurred in the Senate then, it seems to me now that he must perceive that the whole of that debate on his part was discourteous, unkind, and uncharitable to the committee of which he is a member. When a bill was reported from that committee by me as representing a majority I considered that it had just the same right in the Senate precisely, and should receive the same consideration, as if it had obtained the consent of the chairman, and that it was not necessary to have his consent in order to have it reported. But he announced when the bill was reported, much to my surprise, that he would not only vote against it and oppose it, as he had a perfect right to do, but that he would not allow it to be taken up if he could help it, or words to that effect. When I endeavored to get it up on Thursday he showed a great deal of feeling against it.

I know the Senate will bear me witness that in our relations to each other, and in regard to the business of the Senate, I have generally deferred to the wishes of the chairman of the Finance Committee; but when he endeavors to set up his opinion and his wish against the order of business reported from the Committee on Finance, I think he ought to give to the decision of the committee the same consideration that the members of the committee usually give to his motions when he makes them. For this reason on Thursday, for the first time, I believe, I resisted the taking up of a bill reported by him; and I did it only because I understood his purpose to be to oppose the bill I reported by direction of the committee; an unreasonable opposition, an opposition that was extraordinary in its character, and urged with a good deal of heat. Now the Senator states a reason for desiring delay. If he had communicated it to me I would not have antagonized with his bill. He now states that he desires information from the Treasury Department. If he really desires that information—and, as a matter of course, what he says is conclusive on that point—I do not wish to urge this bill against his wish to acquire that information. After the fortification bill is disposed of I may desire to call up the bill for the purpose to-morrow of presenting my views to the Senate on the subject, and then if the Senator desires delay for the purpose of obtaining information from the Treasury Department I will not object.

As I stated on a former occasion, the bill in my charge is one of great public importance, intended to reduce the interest on the public debt, carrying out perhaps a favorite idea with me, that we should not in time of peace present to the world the spectacle of paying a higher rate of interest on our public securities than any Christian nation of these times, and going into the markets of the world with our bonds at a lower rate for gold than any nation of Christendom, I believe. It was to enforce this view, to save, if I could, this undue amount of interest, that I presented this bill and urged it on the consideration of the Senate. I will no longer urge it at present, after the declaration of the Senator from Maine that he desires information; and as the reconstruction question is postponed until Wednesday, I will not now resist the taking up of the fortification bill, but I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate to take up the funding bill to-morrow, so that I may be able to present my views upon it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. After I had given notice that I would have no further controversy with him on this subject, it was quite unnecessary for the Senator from Ohio to repeat what he chose to say on Thursday evening, that I had conducted in an improper manner with reference to this matter. I think, having said that once—and even then I suffered it to pass without reply, although I really felt the remark somewhat—it was rather unnecessary that he should have taken pains to repeat it this morning. Now, sir, it so happens, I believe—I must say it, although I do not like to talk about myself—that I am the only man in this Senate who never is suffered to get in the slightest degree excited without having somebody in the Senate and somebody out of the Senate make remarks upon it. [Laughter.] If I allow my voice to rise above its ordinary pitch it is remarked that I am under excitement, and the newspapers seem to think it a very considerable thing. [Laughter.] Well, sir, I think it proves that I am so universally acknowledged to be an amiable man and an excellent-tempered man that when I do get excited it is worthy of remark, which is not true of any other member of the Senate, because they may have all sorts of fights here and it does not seem to amount to anything; nobody says anything about it; it seems to be treated as a matter of course. My friend from Maryland [Mr. JOHNSON] may get into a heat and it is treated as a matter of course, and nothing is said about it. So with my friend from Iowa, [Mr. GRIMES], and my friend from Massachusetts, [Mr. SUMNER], and everybody else. [Laughter.] But, sir, let that pass.

I did feel somewhat annoyed about the charge that was made, coming from a member of the committee, and the gentleman who is second on the committee. I was annoyed that he took pains to express his opinion that my course of conduct in regard to this matter was improper; and I really felt hurt this morning that he should have taken pains to repeat it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I felt it, and therefore I said it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator had expressed his feelings once, and I think that after three nights sleep he might have got over that annoyance sufficiently to have held his tongue on a subject on which he had already once spoken. I think he must have been a little excited, although he does not show it so much in the tones of his voice.

Now, sir, allow me to say, that the honorable Senator reported his bill by order of the majority of the committee, not a particular order that he should report it, but after the vote was taken, that it should be reported by the consent of the chairman of the committee, whose business it was to report it if he chose to do so; but he chose, as a matter of courtesy, to pass it over to the honorable Senator who had introduced it. That is the way it came to be reported by the Senator; otherwise it would have been reported by me, and been under my charge as chairman of the committee. That is the simple fact about that. I gave notice in the committee (as I always do when I intend to act in that way) that when the bill came into the Senate I should oppose it by all means in my power; and when it came into the Senate and was reported apparently with the assent of all the committee, I stated the same thing. I know and understand what effect these financial measures have upon the money market always, and that they are made a matter of trade and speculation; and I for that reason took pains to say that the committee was not unanimous upon the bill, and that I myself was opposed to it. I went no further at that time.

Sir, I have a perfect right to say, and any member of a committee has a right, when he understands that a bill is reported not with the approbation or sanction or pledge of the majority of the committee to it, but simply by leave of the committee in order that it may be brought into the Senate and presented to the Senate, to state that fact. It has been done repeatedly, and I had a perfect right to say, as I did say, that the bill, although reported with the consent of a majority of the committee, was not reported as the decision of the committee. The Senator's opinion of the impropriety of that thing he may entertain; but I maintain that I had a perfect right to do it and there was nothing improper in it, and I should do the same again under like circumstances if I chose to do it. That is all there is of that.

When the Senator remarked that he should bring his bill up, and when he antagonized that to mine, I said, it is true, that I was opposed to taking up his bill, not only for the reason that I wished another to come up, but for the reason that I was opposed to it and hoped it would not come up at all; but I meant by that to express nothing more than I had said before; and that was, that I was opposed to his bill. The Senator, however, chose to understand that as an indication that I meant to try every parliamentary method to prevent action on his bill. That was an intention which did not exist in point of fact; which I never thought of. I meant merely to state that I was opposed to it and hoped it would not come up. I remain of the same opinion still. Undoubtedly the Senate will take it up in its own good time, and then we shall have action upon it. I have no feeling about it, not the slightest in the world; but burdened as I am with business, and in fact unfit to do any business at all, and having staring me in the face in the course of a few days the tax bill, which I must take the principal charge of, if I am able to do so, or pass it over to the honorable Senator from Ohio, and the reconstruction business, I did wish to clear the table of these little matters which ought to go to the House of Representatives. Now, sir, I do not feel that I am under any special responsibility for the business of the Senate; but, so far as I am, I hope the Senate will indulge me in all reasonable requests.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 255) making appropriations for the construction, preservation, and repairs of certain fortifications and other works of defense, for the year ending June 30, 1867.

The bill was read.

The Committee on Finance reported one amendment to the bill; which was on page 2, after line eighteen to insert:

For Fort Popham, Kennebec river, Maine, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time and passed.

FUNDING THE NATIONAL DEBT.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now move to take up the funding bill with a view to have it assigned for to-morrow at one o'clock.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will say to the Senator from Ohio that I do not mean to oppose the taking up of the bill, but it may be that after it is taken up to-morrow and he has stated what he wishes to say upon it, I may then desire further time to consider it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I shall have not the slightest objection to the Senator's taking time in order to obtain further information and discuss the proposition. All I desire now is that it may be taken up and made the special order for to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 800) to reduce the rate of interest on the national debt, and for funding the same.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the bill be postponed to and made the special order of the day for to-morrow at one o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

CHANGE OF NAME OF VESSELS.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to take up Senate joint resolution No. 52.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. R. No. 52) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to change the name of the steamboat City of Richmond to City of Portland.

The Committee on Commerce reported the joint resolution with an amendment to add the following:

And also the owner of the schooner Lucinda Van Valkenburg to Camden.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to hear why these changes are proposed. It seems to me to be very injurious to change the names of vessels unless there is a positive necessity for it. Great wrongs have been perpetrated in this way.

Mr. MORRILL. The practice is quite uniform. There is never any difficulty or danger in this class of cases, provided proper caution is exercised. I know there have been instances, as the Senator from Massachusetts supposes, where vessels that had a bad reputation have had their names changed. That is always injurious, and the committee, in no instance that I know of, of late, have reported a bill upon such a state of facts. The facts in this case are these: this steamer City of Richmond is a new steamer, eighteen months old, I think, and has been purchased by a company who are running her now between Portland, in the State of Maine, and St. John. They have a fancy that it would suit their convenience better to have her name changed to City of Portland. There is no public necessity for it, of course, as there is not in any of these cases, but the facts are such in this case that no injurious effect whatever can come of it.

Mr. WILSON. That is all I want to know.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. While I am up I will explain that amendment. It is to change the name of a schooner on Lake Ontario, I think. It is a very small matter any way. I have here a note addressed to the Senator from New York, [Mr. MORGAN], in which the party desires the name of this vessel changed, simply as a matter of convenience, because her present name is an unconscionably long one and a hard name to spell. The facts in this case are not unlike those in the case of the City of Richmond. She is a new vessel.

Mr. GRIMES. Is she a British vessel?

Mr. MORRILL. Oh, no; she is an American-built vessel.

Mr. GRIMES. Both of them?

Mr. MORRILL. They are both American-built and both new vessels.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

MINERAL-WATER BOTTLES.

Mr. MORRILL. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 265.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 265) to protect the manufacturers of mineral waters in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes. It provides that all manufacturers and vendors of mineral waters and other beverages in bottles, upon which their names or their mark or marks shall be respectively impressed, may file with the clerk of the supreme court of the District of Columbia description of such bottles and of the name or marks thereon, and cause the same to be published for not less than two weeks successively in a daily or weekly newspaper published in the District of Columbia. It is to be unlawful for any person or persons hereafter, without the permission of the owner or owners, to fill with mineral waters or other beverages any such bottles so marked, or to sell, dispose of, or to buy, or to traffic in any such bottles so marked and not bought by him or her of such owner or owners; and every person so offending is to be liable to a penalty of fifty cents for every bottle so filled, or sold, or used, or disposed of, or bought, or trafficked in, for the first offense; and of five dollars for every subsequent offense, to be recovered as other fines in the District of Columbia.

The Committee on the District of Columbia reported the bill with two amendments. The first amendment was in section one, line four, after the word "beverages" to insert "by law allowable;" so that it will read:

That all manufacturers and vendors of mineral waters and other beverages by law allowable in bottles, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the third section of the bill in the following words:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the fact of any person other than the rightful owner thereof using any such bottles for the sale therein of any beverage shall be prima facie proof of the unlawful use or purchase of such bottles as aforesaid, and any owner or owners, or agent of such owner or owners, who shall make oath or affirmation before any justice of the peace that he has reason to believe, and does believe, that any of his bottles, stamped and registered as aforesaid, are being unlawfully used or are concealed by any person or persons selling or manufacturing mineral waters or other beverages, that the said justice of the peace shall thereupon issue a process, (in the nature of a search-warrant,) directed to any policeman, commanding him to search the premises, wagons, cars, or other places of the offender or offenders where said bottles are alleged to be, and if upon such search any bottles so marked shall be found, to bring the same, together with the person or persons in whose possession they may be found, before said justice of the peace, there to be dealt with according to the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JOHNSON subsequently entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SUMNER. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 11.

Mr. MORRILL. I should like to know what that bill is.

Mr. SUMNER. It is a very well-known bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts moves to take up the bill (H. R. No. 11) to facilitate commercial, postal, and military communication among the several States.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope that will not be taken up.

Mr. SUMNER. Let us dispose of it to-day.

Mr. MORRILL. That bill involves a constitutional question. I hope the Senator will allow me to-day to clear the Calendar of matters pertaining to the District of Columbia. I have here half a dozen very small measures that I have been waiting some time to get an opportunity to pass, and if I do not get to-day I am sure I shall not get a day this fortnight. I think the public interests will be much better subserved by passing these practical measures than by going into the discussion of an abstract constitutional question to-day. I wish to dispose of these bills now, and it is possible that we can pass the Senator's bill afterward. These bills are small matters which will take no great time anyway.

Mr. SUMNER. I do not like a remark that the Senator has just made.

Mr. MORRILL. I will withdraw it, then, for the sake of conciliation. I do not know what it was.

Mr. SUMNER. He speaks of a certain bill that has already passed the House of Representatives twice, and been on the point of passing the Senate, I do not know how many times, and has just failed, through the extraordinary and superhuman exertions of my excellent friend, as an abstraction. I believe the bill that I wish to have proceeded with is a practical measure; that there is nothing abstract in it. It is to meet and cope with the railroad monopoly in New Jersey. But if I can have the Senator's favor hereafter on another occasion—

Mr. MORRILL. I will favor the honorable Senator with all I have to say on that bill the first time he gets it up, if he will allow me this indulgence to-day, which will not be much.

Mr. SUMNER. Then I hope the Senator will bear in mind that one good turn deserves another, and if I make no opposition to his proceeding with his measures to-day, he will be very indulgent to this measure which has the sanction of the House of Representatives, and has come here for the sanction of the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL. The honorable Senator does not require me to state my opposition until I accept that compromise.

Mr. SUMNER. Under these circumstances I withdraw my motion.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC OF WASHINGTON.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 510.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 510) to incorporate the Academy of Music of Washington city. It authorizes Max Strakosch, William G. Pope, Max Maretzek, W. G. Metzgerott, Joseph J. May, B. F. Isherwood, John G. Clark, Henry C. Sherman, Carl Bergman, and F. C. Adams, or any five of them, to receive subscriptions to the capital stock of a company to be denominated the Academy of Music of Washington, District of Columbia, which company is to have the usual powers and privileges of a corporation. The capital stock is to consist of ten thousand shares at fifty dollars a share. The president and directors are to be authorized, on behalf of the company, to purchase and hold in fee-simple, or lease for a term of years, real estate in the city of Washington sufficient to enable them to erect thereon a building suitable for operatic, dramatic, and other entertainments, in such manner, and upon such terms, as may be by them deemed for the best interests of the company.

The Committee on the District of Columbia reported the bill with an amendment to strike out the seventh section of the bill, in the following words:

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That the said company are hereby authorized to borrow money to an amount not exceeding their capital stock, upon bonds to be issued by said company, secured upon their property and franchises: Provided, That no bond shall be issued for a less sum than $100, and bearing a greater rate of interest than seven per cent. per annum.

Mr. MORRILL. I am rather inclined to hope that the Senate will negative this amendment. This seventh section authorizes the company to borrow money on mortgage of the franchise and capital stock. The committee, as a general statement, were rather opposed to the principle. I did not suppose it was of very much importance anyway, but those who are interested in the enterprise have called upon us to say that they deem this section very important to the success of the academy. On the whole, as I suppose no possible injury can result from it, I am rather inclined to hope that the Senate will allow the Academy of Music to have their own way on that subject.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. WILSON. Some days ago, in debate, I alluded to Lieutenant Colonel McKelvy, nominated as marshal for western Pennsylvania. I stated that he had been tried by a court-martial and ordered to be dismissed, and would have been dismissed the service and imprisoned had it not been for the interference of friends. I received a communication from a gentleman of character and standing making that statement, stating that he would have been not only dismissed the service, as he was ordered to be by a court-martial, but would have been imprisoned had it not been for the interference of General Moorhead, of his district. I have since had placed in my hands a copy of the record of the trial, and I rise simply to say that on examining the papers, they do not justify the statement made to me and which I repeated to the Senate. I have no disposition certainly to do him the least injustice in the world, and I therefore make this explanation.

METROPOLITAN MINING COMPANY.

Mr. MORRILL. I now move the Senate to take up for consideration Senate bill No. 178.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 178) to incorporate the Metropolitan Mining and Manufacturing Company. It authorizes John Ford, George D. Williams, Thomas W. Hyde, Oliver Edwards, Charles H. Herd, Samuel A. Fulton, Charles Otis, Charles A. Eccleston, George W. Holmes, Joseph E. Hollis, John F. Brodhead, and Lewis P. Moody, or any five of them, to receive subscriptions to the capital stock of a company to be denominated the Metropolitan Mining and Manufacturing Company. The capital stock of the company is to consist of twenty thousand shares of $100 each.

The president and directors are to be authorized, on behalf of the company, to purchase and hold by deed for a term certain or in fee-simple, lands and other real estate, and to carry on the business of mining for iron ore and other native minerals, and manufacturing and preparing the same for market; and to issue bonds not exceeding one half of the capital stock, upon such terms as may be deemed for the best interests of the company; but no bond is to be issued for a less sum than $100, or bearing interest at a rate exceeding six percent. per annum.

The Committee on the District of Columbia reported the bill with an amendment, in section one, line nine, after the words "Metropolitan Mining and Manufacturing Company" to insert "of the District of Columbia."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRIMES. I will inquire of the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia where this company is to do its mining.

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator will see that I propose to confine the company to the District of Columbia. They will have no power outside of the District.

Mr. GRIMES. I ask for the reading of the amendment again.

The Secretary again read it.

Mr. GRIMES. I do not understand that that limits the power of the company to transact its business entirely within the District of Columbia. That is merely fixing the name of the company. This corporation has very large powers. As the bill now stands, it seems to me they can transact their business anywhere in the world.

Mr. POMEROY. I do not know that there is any law against a company incorporated in the District going wherever any State has a mind to let them go. I do not know anything about this company. I never paid any attention to it until this moment. I know that one State, the State of Iowa, for instance, will make a corporation, and that corporation will do its business in New York. My State, and all the States, will incorporate a company, and the first we know of the company their office is in New York or Boston, and they are doing business there. Now, I do not know but that Congress has as much right as a State in this respect. Of course Congress cannot incorporate, or at least ought not to incorporate, a company to allow it to do business in a State against the laws of that State; but if it is in harmony with the laws of the State, I do not know that that is an objection which ought to defeat the bill. I confess, in regard to this company, I cannot conceive what business they are going to do in the District; but then I am not posted as to that. I never heard of it before. But the simple provision that they may do business outside of the District is only giving to a corporation of the District the same power given to the corporations of every State, because there is no State in the Union which does not create corporations that carry on their business outside of the State. Of course they have to do it in accordance with the laws of the State where they live, and in harmony with those laws, not against them. So with this company; I suppose it can travel all over the United States.

Mr. GRIMES. I think the Senator is mistaken in point of fact. I think there are a great many States that refuse to incorporate companies to go beyond the State to transact business. I do not believe that the State of which I am a citizen ever has, or ever will, consent to charter a corporation whose whole business shall be transacted beyond its jurisdiction. It is not good faith to the other States. One State refuses to grant to certain persons a franchise, and then they go over the State line, and there, by some hocus pocus in legislation, secure a franchise from another State and then come back into the State that has already refused the franchise and do business there. I do not know anything about this company. I understand the Senator from Maine proposes to amend the bill so as to limit it, but it may be possible—I do not suppose it is in this instance—that these identical men endeavored to obtain a charter, for instance, in Pennsylvania or Nevada, and were refused, and now they come here to the national Government and ask us to give them just such a charter as has been refused by those local Legislatures, and then go into Pennsylvania or Nevada and transact the very kind of business which the authorities of those States refused to bestow upon them the authority to do. Suppose we grant this charter and the State of Nevada or the State of Pennsylvania denies them the privilege of exercising their franchise; do you not suppose they will insist upon exercising it under this law? They will insist that here is the imperial Legislature of the country that has granted them the franchise, and that that franchise overrides all State authorities on the subject.

Mr. POMEROY. The Senator from Iowa did not entirely comprehend the point I made. I did not say that the State of Iowa and the other States inserted in the act of incorporation itself a provision that they might go anywhere, but they go without such a provision. The Senator will be reminded that some railroad companies of his State have their offices and do their business in New York. The same remark is true of my State and of all the western States. There is nothing in the charter about it.

Mr. GRIMES. But the entire property of those railroad companies is in my State; their entire business is done there, with the single exception that the treasurer's office is kept elsewhere; and they are incorporated under our law.

Mr. POMEROY. The meetings of the stockholders must be held within the jurisdiction of the authority making the corporation, but the directors' meetings are not held there at all. Take, for instance, the Hannibal and St. Joseph railroad, in the State of Missouri. They have never had a directors' meeting there, but the stockholders' meetings are always held there.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think the Senator from Kansas is mistaken upon the law of this question. After very great argument, and in a very important cause, it has been decided in the State of Indiana that a corporation has a life only in the State that creates it by her laws, and can exercise its franchises by its board of directors only in that State. I think in 1 Black the same doctrine is incidentally decided by the Supreme Court of the United States in regard to the Ohio and Mississippi Railroad Company. I do not think the board of directors can hold a meeting outside of the State in which the company is incorporated unless that State and the other State both concur in the proposition that they may do so.

Mr. POMEROY. The point I was making is a matter of almost every-day occurrence. There is hardly a week that the directors of corporations created by the laws of Missouri and Iowa and Kansas do not meet in New York or Boston to do the business. It a matter which occurs constantly; and it is because the capitalists are there.

Mr. GRIMES. What does that prove? They are not the corporators.

Mr. POMEROY. They have the functions of the corporation.

Mr. GRIMES. They are the mere agents of the corporation, and have no more authority than the president of the road has, when he goes to buy iron or anything else.

Mr. POMEROY. All the authorities of the corporation are exercised for the time being by the board of directors.

Mr. GRIMES. Only such as are delegated to them.

Mr. POMEROY. The directors always have delegated authority. They are chosen in the first instance by the stockholders in the State; but, after having been chosen by the stockholders in the State, they have, during the time they are in office, the entire control of the franchise. The only point I wished to make in this connection was—I know nothing about this company—that if a State could make such a corporation, why could not the General Government do it. The State of New York has a general law, under which corporations are constantly being organized to go all over the country. You find companies incorporated under the general incorporation act of the State of New York doing business in every State of the Union. It is a matter of constant occurrence that parties who have franchises from the States have their offices and do their business wherever they find it for their interest to do it, even outside of the State that created their corporation; but their directors are all chosen inside the State, and the stockholders' meetings are always held there.

Mr. MORRILL. I will explain this bill as I understand it. In the first place it associates certain gentlemen together as a body politic and corporate, and declares that "it shall be lawful for the said corporation to have a common seal, sue and be sued, plead and be impleaded, and have and exercise all the rights, privileges, and immunities for the purpose of the corporation hereby created." The rest of the sections, down to the section giving certain power, are taken up with the organization of the company. The sixth section, which bears on this question of authority, reads as follows:

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That the president and directors are hereby empowered and fully authorized, on behalf of said company, to purchase and hold by deed for a term certain or in fee-simple, lands and other real estate, and to carry on the business of mining for iron ore and other native minerals, and manufacturing and preparing the same for market.

That seems to be the full scope of the bill. There is another section which touches on the question of authority, and I believe that is all there is, and that is the fifth section:

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That the president and directors for the time being shall have power to ordain, establish, and put in execution such rules, regulations, ordinances, and by-laws as they may deem essential for the well-government of the institution, not contrary to the laws and Constitution of the United States or of this act, and generally to do and perform all acts, matters, and things which a corporation may or can lawfully do.

So that the question of power would seem to be about this: these persons are associated as a body politic and corporate, with the privilege to use a common seal, and with the great privilege of being sued and to sue. Then they are to have the right as a body-corporate, an artificial person, to purchase and receive the title to real estate for the purposes of carrying on the business of mining and manufacturing.

Mr. GRIMES. Where are they to do that?

Mr. MORRILL. Wherever they can make the bargain. They are an artificial person, and being so, there is no limitation that I know of either in the Constitution of the United States, or any of the States, that they shall not be at liberty to make the bargain. There is nothing more common than for persons associated into a corporation, and thereby becoming artificial persons, to have the right to trade, the right to make bargains, the right to sue in any of the courts of the States, the right to carry on business. Why not? Is that against the policy of the law in any particular whatever? Is there any State or national law that is opposed to the policy of two persons associating themselves together as an artificial person and doing what is perfectly legitimate and lawful to be done by contract in those States? That is this bill and nothing more.

Mr. CLARK rose.

Mr. MORRILL. Before the Senator gets up to criticize I want to anticipate a difficulty which I am afraid he saw and which I did not see until I read it just now, and that is in the fifth section, giving to the directors authority to make "by-laws not inconsistent with the laws of the United States." I think that might be obnoxious to the criticism of my friend from Iowa, that they might claim to do some things by virtue of this authority which would not be permitted in the States. I move, therefore, to amend the fifth section by inserting, after the words "United States," in the sixth line, the words, "or of any State," so that the authority to be exercised under this bill shall always be in submission to the laws of the States.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think this is rather a grave matter, in view of the fact that this corporation cannot exercise any of its functions or franchises in this District. There is no mining to be done here. Now, I wish to ask the Senator whether, under the clause of the Constitution which confers upon Congress the power of exclusive legislation over the District of Columbia, it is proper for us to pass a bill creating a corporation when we know that that corporation is not for the District of Columbia, when we know that it is not to transact business in the District of Columbia, but with a view to mining somewhere else. Is that within the spirit of the provision of the Constitution conferring upon Congress the power to legislate for this District? It does not seem to me to be within the spirit of that provision.

Mr. CLARK. I was going to call the attention of the Senator from Maine to much the same consideration that has been presented by the Senator from Indiana; and that is the question whether there are any persons as proposed in this corporation who contemplate undertaking the business of manufacturing within this District. If there be an association of gentlemen who desire to manufacture or to mine here, and who think it necessary to have an act of incorporation to enable them to do so successfully and properly, I have no objection to granting them an act of incorporation; but if it is an act of incorporation to bring into existence an artificial person to run all over the Union, then I say we ought not to grant it. What would be the result if every State in the Union should come to enacting corporations of that kind? Suppose the State of New York should pass acts of incorporation authorizing a body of gentlemen to mine all over the country; the State of New Hampshire should pass acts of incorporation authorizing people to manufacture all over the country; and the State of Pennsylvania should pass acts of incorporation, if they could do so, authorizing people to bank all over the country, and then you set these fictitious persons running all over the country to find some opportunity of doing business; what would be the condition of the country? It seems to me that these acts of incorporation should be made auxiliary to the business of the country. Where this necessity is shown first, or a convenience in any way of operation, then we ought to grant it. I have no great opposition to granting acts of incorporation to proper parties within the District; and if in the prosecution of that business in the District they find it necessary to go into other States and operate there, I have no objection. If, for instance, you should incorporate an insurance company to do business in this District, and they should find it necessary to run into all the States of the Union in a legitimate way, I have no objection to it. But I have a very great objection to incorporating this company for the purpose of sending them elsewhere, when they are not doing or desirous of doing business here. The Senator from Maine, undoubtedly, knows whether these people propose to go into business here; whether they are an association of gentlemen undertaking it here, or whether he is creating an artificial person to enable it for speculative purposes, or for some purpose outside of the District, to do business. I think he will see a very great objection to doing that. I think we should not pass this bill without grave consideration.

Mr. WADE. I voted in committee for this incorporation, and for several others like it. Some of them, I believe, have passed. I have not been able to see the importance of the arguments that have been made against this bill. A corporation is, in law, an artificial person for any purpose that may be described in the charter of incorporation. The States are in the habit everywhere of granting acts of incorporation for certain prescribed modes of business, and when the parties are incorporated they do business all over the Union. They can do, unless the law prohibits it, just what a natural person may do lawfully, and nothing more. The object of the incorporation is barely for the purpose of perpetual succession. When a great business is contemplated that requires more capital than ordinarily belongs to one individual, and a great many, in order to carry it on, have to concentrate their means together, it is convenient for them to have a charter of incorporation, because, without it, when any member of the company dies, the whole company is dissolved, and it passes into the hands of administrators. Therefore these acts of incorporation do nothing more than to enable them to continue their business, notwithstanding the death of some of the parties.

As to the objection of their doing business outside of the authority that grants the incorporation, almost all your important corporations do that. Why, sir, look at your insurance companies of Hartford, Connecticut. They are doing business all over the United States to the amount of millions, and I do not know but of hundreds of millions, everywhere. Look at your companies for transportation, all over the country, everywhere. Your banking institutions do business in every State, all over the Union, without any objection whatever. In short, they can do just what a natural person may lawfully do, and they cannot do anything more. All the advantage the company has by being incorporated is, as I said before, that they may do business wherever they please, and on the death of some of the members, their company is not entirely dissolved. A great business cannot be carried on without it, and as they get no additional advantage in a State over a natural person prosecuting the same business, I do not know why it should not be granted if it is a lawful business. The States, of course, may put them under such restrictions as they please, and some of the States perhaps have prevented foreign corporations transacting business within their limits, or have modified the terms of their charter, and prescribed under what circumstances and limitations they may do business. But in the absence of any such thing a corporation may do all lawful business that a natural person can do. They cannot do anything more. It strikes me there is really but little in this objection that if we incorporate them here they will do business somewhere else. I expect they will; but if they do a lawful business, beneficial to themselves and the community, such as mining or manufacturing, I do not see how anybody is to be injured by it. If any State objects to it, they may fence them out, probably; but they do not see fit to pass acts of prohibition against these corporations generally, and therefore I think they have been beneficial, and I see no kind of objection to it.

Mr. GRIMES. I move to amend the bill—

Mr. MORRILL. I have some other measures which will not lead to debate, and I will allow this bill to pass over by common consent and call up some other bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the further consideration of this bill be postponed until to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read by their titles and referred as indicated below:

A bill (H. R. No. 379) to establish in the District of Columbia a reform school for boys—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

A bill (H. R. No. 564) to annul the thirty-fourth section of the declaration of rights of the State of Maryland, so far as it applies to the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

A bill (H. R. No. 601) to grade East Capitol street and establish Lincoln square—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

AMERICA FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY.

Mr. MORRILL. I now ask the Senate to take up for consideration Senate bill No. 296.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 296) to incorporate the America Fire and Marine Insurance Company of Washington, District of Columbia. It authorizes J. L. Kidwell, Francis Wheatley, Esau Pickrell, J. B. Davidson, and Thomas I. Davis, of Georgetown, District of Columbia; and Benjamin Beall, B. L. Jackson, Joseph F. Burr, Augustus E. Perry, and Frederick Koonce, of Washington, District of Columbia, or any five of them, to receive subscriptions to the capital stock of a company to be denominated the America Fire and Marine Insurance Company of Washington, District of Columbia. The company are to have the usual powers and privileges of a corporation. The capital stock is to consist of twenty thousand shares of fifty dollars each.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHESAPEAKE AND POTOMAC TIDEWATER CANAL.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask the Senate to take up for consideration Senate bill No. 281.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 281) to authorize the Chesapeake Bay and Potomac River Tidewater Canal Company to enter the District of Columbia.

Mr. WILLEY. The Committee on the District of Columbia have reported an amendment as a substitute for the entire bill, and I therefore suggest that the reading of the original bill be omitted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the original bill will be dispensed with, if there be no objection, and the amendment only be read.

The Secretary read the proposed substitute, as follows:

That the Chesapeake Bay and Potomac Tidewater Canal Company, incorporated by the General Assembly of the State of Maryland, at the January session thereof, 1836, by an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Chesapeake Bay and Potomac River Tidewater Canal Company," be, and the same are hereby, authorized to extend their canal from the point where it strikes the boundary line of the District of Columbia, thence in and through the said District to the Anacostia river at any point thereon above Bidding's bridge.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the said company are hereby authorized and empowered to take, purchase, and hold, for the purposes of this act, so much real estate and other property as shall be necessarily required for the proper construction of the extension aforesaid, and for the construction of all proper and convenient basins, locks, reservoirs, docks, and wharves, to be connected with said extension. And where the said company shall not be able to procure such real estate by purchase from the owner thereof, or the owner thereof shall be a femme covert, infant, non compos mentis, imprisoned, or resident beyond the District of Columbia, then application may be made by the president of said company to the chief justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia for the appointment of three persons, who shall be freeholders in said District, as a commission of inquest of damages, and who shall go upon and inspect any property proposed to be taken by said company for the purposes contemplated by this act; and before any person so appointed as such commissioner shall proceed to act, he shall take an oath or affirmation that he will fairly and truly value the damages sustained by the owner or owners of any property by the use and occupation of any such real estate, water rights, or other property, by said company; and said commission shall reduce their inquiry or finding to writing, and sign and seal the same, and it shall then be returned to said chief justice, who shall file the same in the office of the register of deeds of the city of Washington. But no such inquiry shall be had until after ten days' notice thereof has been served on the owner of the real estate so to be taken, when he resides in the District of Columbia, or by publication of notice in one or more of the daily newspapers published in the city of Washington for twenty days where such owner resides beyond the said District. When the owner is a femme covert, the notice shall be to her and her husband; when he is a minor, to his guardian; and when he is non compos mentis, to his committee, or the person having the charge of his estate. The said report shall be confirmed by the supreme court of the District of Columbia at its next term after the return of said report, unless for cause shown to the contrary. And where good cause is thus shown, the said chief justice shall set aside said inquest, and appoint another similar commission, who shall qualify in the same manner, and whose inquiry shall be taken, returned, filed, and confirmed, or set aside for good cause shown, in the same manner as the first inquiry was taken, returned, filed, and confirmed, or set aside. And such commission or inquiry shall be renewed as often as may be necessary, until the inquiry made shall be confirmed. Such inquiry shall describe the property taken by metes and bounds, and the valuation thereof shall be paid or tendered within ten days after the confirmation of such inquiry by said district court; and when such valuation or damages are so paid or tendered, said company shall have a full and perfect right to enter upon, use, occupy, and enjoy any property so valued during its corporate existence, and all expenses incurred by such inquiry shall be paid by said company.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for said company to levy, demand, and receive such even tolls and rents for the use of the wharves and docks of said company on said extension, or for freight transported by said company, or for the passage through said extension of boats, rafts, or any other water craft, as a majority of the directors at any regular meeting shall assess therefor: Provided, That the Congress of the United States shall at all times have power to increase or reduce such tolls or rents.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That said canal extension, when completed, shall forever thereafter be esteemed and taken to be a public highway for the transportation of all goods, commodities, or produce of every kind and description, and for all canal-boats, rafts, or other water crafts of every kind whatever, upon the payment of such tolls or rents as are authorized to be imposed by this act.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the said company shall permit all public property belonging to the United States to pass through said canal extension free of all charge or toll; and the said company shall, from time to time, as may be required, lay before Congress a just and true account of their receipts and expenditures on said extension, with a statement of the clear profits thereof.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That, subject to the aforesaid provisions of this act, all and singular the provisions of the aforesaid act of the General Assembly of the State of Maryland, entitled "An act to incorporate the Chesapeake Bay and Potomac River Tidewater Canal Company," relating to the powers, liabilities, and authority of said company, in operating and using their canal, shall take effect and apply to the extension aforesaid in the District of Columbia.

SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That this act shall be deemed a public act, and shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage, and shall be subject to alteration or repeal by Congress.

Mr. WILLEY. I move to amend the amendment in section one, line twelve, by striking out the word "Bidding's" before the word "bridge" and inserting the word "Benning's."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That correction will be made as it is a clerical mistake. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee as a substitute for the original bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed. Its title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the Chesapeake Bay and Potomac River Tidewater Canal Company to enter the District of Columbia, and extend their canal to the Anacostia river at any point above Benning's bridge."

COLORED SCHOOLS IN WASHINGTON.

Mr. MORRILL. I now move to take up Senate bill No. 247.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 247) donating certain lots in the city of Washington for schools for colored children in the District of Columbia.

The Commissioner of Public Buildings is required by the bill to transfer to the trustees of colored schools for the cities of Washington and Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, for the sole use of schools for colored children in the District, all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to lots numbered one and two in square numbered five hundred and fifty-four, and lots one, two, and eighteen in square nine hundred and eighty-five, in the city of Washington, those lots having been designated and set apart by the Secretary of the Interior to be used for colored schools for present purposes.

The Committee on the District of Columbia reported the bill with amendments. The first amendment was in line four, to strike out the word "transfer" and to insert the words "grant and convey."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in lines nine and ten, to strike out the words "one and two in square numbered five hundred and fifty-four, and lots;" so that the clause will read:

All the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to lots numbered one, two, and eighteen in square nine hundred and eighty-five.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was at the end of the bill to strike out the words "for present purposes," and to insert:

And whenever the same shall be converted to other uses they shall revert to the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MORRILL. I now ask the Senate to consider Senate bill No. 246.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 246) relating to public schools in the District of Columbia. It provides that the eighteenth section of the act entitled "An act to provide for the public instruction of youth in the county of Washington, District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved June 25, 1864, shall be so construed as to require the cities of Washington and Georgetown to pay over to the trustees of colored schools of those cities such a proportionate part of all moneys received or expended for school or educational purposes in them, including the cost of sites, buildings, improvements, furniture, and books, and all other expenditures on account of schools, as the colored children between the ages of six and seventeen years, in the respective cities, bear to the whole number of children, white and colored, between the same ages. The money is to be considered due and payable to the trustees on the 1st day of October of each year, and if not then paid over to them, interest at the rate of ten per cent. per annum on the amount unpaid may be demanded and collected from the authorities of the delinquent city by the trustees.

The trustees may maintain an action of debt in the supreme court of the District of Columbia against said cities of Washington and Georgetown for the non-payment of any sum of money arising under the act of June 25, 1864.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WASHINGTON GAS-LIGHT COMPANY.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to take up House bill No. 558.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 558) to amend the charter of the Washington Gas-Light Company was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend the charter of the Washington Gas-Light Company in the third section by substituting the word "February" for "January;" and also to increase the capital stock of the company $500,000, subject to the same liability as is provided in the eleventh section of the original act of incorporation, approved July 8, 1848.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RAILROAD CONNECTION AT WASHINGTON.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 264.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 264) to grant certain privileges to the Alexandria, Washington, and Georgetown Railroad Company in the District of Columbia.

The bill proposes to give the consent of Congress to the Alexandria, Washington, and Georgetown Railroad Company using steam power in drawing cars on the structure across the Potomac river erected by that company, under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to extend the charter of the Alexandria and Washington Railroad Company, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1863, and along the railway now laid by the company, or which may be hereafter laid, under the provisions of that act, along Maryland avenue and First street west, in the city of Washington, to the present depot of the Washington branch of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, subject always, and in all particulars, to such restrictions and regulations concerning the use of such steam power as the corporation of Washington may, by its ordinances, at any time impose upon, or at any time require of, the railroad company.

Mr. GRIMES. I understand that that bill grants to this company the power to run its trains through Maryland avenue and across Pennsylvania avenue at the foot of the Capitol grounds.

Mr. MORRILL. And across the bridge.

Mr. GRIMES. And across the bridge?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. GRIMES. I hope that such a bill will not be passed. That is a question that has been brought before Congress for eight years, to my certain knowledge, and I believe we have always refused to grant the privilege. By some sort of legerdemain this company has during the war exercised, as a sort of war right, the privilege to run steam cars from the depot of the Baltimore and Ohio road down to the bridge; but I always understood it was to cease with the war. I see by the newspapers that it is constantly attended with destruction of property, and I believe in several instances with loss of life. The understanding was that a connection was to be made by a tunnel on the other side of the Capitol.

Mr. JOHNSON. That was the proposition made by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company some years ago.

Mr. MORRILL. I think the Senator from Iowa is misinformed, perhaps, about the facts.

Mr. GRIMES. What facts?

Mr. MORRILL. The general facts. This bill makes no alteration in, gives no additional right beyond, the act of 1863 authorizing the Alexandria, Washington, and Georgetown railroad to extend its road by Maryland avenue and make connection with the Baltimore and Ohio road, and also to build a bridge across the Potomac river; but it was not to use the motive power of steam except by the consent of the city of Washington and of Congress. The inference, perhaps, might be fairly enough that Congress would give its assent. Now, as a matter of fact, all that time and something more, since the passage of that act, this road has been operated by steam and is so operated now. I suppose nobody would think it desirable to limit the use of steam over their own bridge. On Maryland avenue there is no objection of course to the use of steam. It is a very broad street and the use of steam there would find its parallel in most of the large cities of the country—in Philadelphia, for instance, and Baltimore. The cars run for a much larger distance through a much more dense population in the city of Baltimore.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Not by steam.

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, by steam, both at this side of the city and on the other. Through the most dense part of the city, for a short distance the cars are drawn by horses; but the distance you go by steam before you reach the depot in Baltimore is much greater than the distance from the bridge up Maryland avenue. The only point of difficulty about this at all, to my mind, was whether they ought to operate this road by steam in front of the Capitol, across from Maryland avenue to the depot; but that has been done for three long years and more; it is done every day. The accident to which the Senator alludes—there was an accident—was caused by an engine coming in collision with a horse car; but it was the fault of the horse car and not the fault of the railroad. The corporation of Washington have given their assent, and the bill is predicated upon the assent which has been obtained from the city of Washington.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Does the bill allow them to pass in front of the Capitol grounds on the west?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, sir; but I have no objection to that being stricken out.

Mr. GRIMES. Strike out all after "1863" in the tenth line.

Mr. MORRILL. We have a bill now before our committee, and I think it has been reported in the House, changing the location of this route, as it manifestly ought to be, from the rear to the front, requiring them to tunnel under the streets in front of us. That is contemplated and that will be done; but I suggest whether gentlemen really believe there is any necessity at this moment for interfering with the practice which has obtained now for three years.

Mr. GRIMES. Then what is the use of passing the last part of this bill?

Mr. MORRILL. The reason is obvious. While this road was being run by the War Department under the war power we did not any of us feel exactly like running against the engine driven by such a power; but now they have surrendered it to the company and the company do not feel that they are authorized to run the road by steam, as it has been run for the last three years, without the consent of Congress, and I think they are very right about it.

Mr. GRIMES. I move to strike out all after "1863" in the tenth line.

The Secretary read the words proposed to be stricken out, as follows:

And along the railway now laid by said company, or which may be hereafter laid, under the provisions of the said act, along Maryland avenue and First street west, in the city of Washington, to the present depot of the Washington branch of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, subject always, and in all particulars, to such restrictions and regulations concerning the use of such steam power as the corporation of Washington may, by its ordinances, at any time impose upon, or at any time require of, the said railroad company.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Now read the first ten lines.

The Secretary read as follows:

That the consent of Congress be, and the same is hereby, granted to the Alexandria, Washington, and Georgetown Railroad Company to use steam power in drawing the cars of said company on the structure across the Potomac river erected by said company, under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to extend the charter of the Alexandria and Washington Railroad Company, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1863.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That bridge runs right along side of the Long bridge, as it is called. The objection before was that it would make the bridge dangerous to travel on.

Mr. HENDERSON. This is a new bridge, right by the side of the other.

Mr. MORRILL. A little distant from it. There will be no difficulty on that score.

Mr. GRIMES. If the amendment which I have proposed shall be adopted, it will give to this railroad company the privilege of passing over the railroad bridge by steam; but it will deny to them, or rather it will fail to confer upon them, the right to pass along Maryland avenue and in front of the Capitol grounds on the west by steam. This company has from the time it changed its ownership been constantly grasping after these privileges. As an army takes a fortification, it has been approaching the proposition that is now before us by parallels and by regular approaches, until finally it has a bill here which gives it unlimited sweep right through the city, and where, certainly as long as I have been here—eight years—and a good many years before, I know Congress utterly refused to allow them to pass with steam power. One of the schemes for enlarging the public grounds around the Capitol is to take in the very ground over which this road now passes. Grant them this franchise, and then where will you be if you conclude in the future to extend the grounds in that direction?

Mr. JOHNSON. We can alter or repeal the act.

Mr. GRIMES. But of what value is a provision reserving the power to alter or amend one of these charters?

Mr. JOHNSON. It depends on Congress.

Mr. GRIMES. But there is an appeal at once made to vested rights. There never was an interference with a charter made yet, and I presume never will be as long as the Government stands. The reservation of the power does not amount to a thing; it never was exercised and it never will be exercised. I would just as lief grant a charter without any reservation of the right to alter or amend as to grant it with that. But I understand that this railroad company have the privilege now from the city authorities of running through Maryland avenue; I do not want to cut them off immediately from running through Maryland avenue; but if you pass this bill the way it is now they will not any longer talk about coming up and making a tunnel east of the Capitol and avoiding Maryland avenue and First street west; they will have got all they want.

Mr. MORRILL. They are very anxious for the tunnel.

Mr. WADE. Put a limitation on them.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I have tried to stand in the way of this thing for several years. They had a bill up here formerly to tunnel Capitol hill, and that bill I was willing to allow to pass with certain amendments which I deemed very essential to the preservation of our own rights and the rights of the people here; and after it was amended they abandoned the bill. If they could not have it just according to their own notion, and if a time was fixed within which they must get it done or lose their privileges—that was one of the amendments—they chose to abandon the bill, and we have not heard of it since. Their first application was precisely what it is now, and the Senate never would consent to encourage for a single day the proposition which they first brought forward and insisted upon so long, to pass directly in front of the Capitol grounds where there is so much passing on foot continually across Pennsylvania avenue. We have been obliged, however, to submit to it during the war. Now it would be very much safer, if they really mean to get a bill to authorize a tunnel and to go down the other way, to let the matter stand just as it is at present, let them go on at their own hazard, because nobody has interfered with them, they having permission of the city of Washington, and we not interfering. It would be better to do that than it would be to pass a bill giving them this right, because, as the honorable Senator from Iowa says, we all know that when they once get the right by law and get the power that is acquired under it, it is almost useless in a legislative body to attempt to deprive them of it.

I hope the day is not very far distant when we shall extend the Capitol grounds. It is very evident to everybody that the grounds now are disproportionately small for the building which stands here. I remember several years ago I had a long conversation with Senator Douglas on the subject. He took a great deal of interest in the matter, and I took a good deal of interest in it, and we both walked over the ground, looked all around, and came to our conclusion as to what ought to be done with reference to the Capitol grounds in our judgment. We did not think there could be any dispute about it whenever Congress got time to do it. We agreed that we would, if we could, go on the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and see if we could bring it about; but when the committee was made up we were not put on. I thought then, and think now, that when we do move in that matter, we ought to go to Third street west, taking in the two squares between First and Third streets, and go out to the depot on the north, and as far on the south side. We own the land on one side of Pennsylvania avenue all the way to Third street, and we ought to take in the other side.

Mr. JOHNSON. Permit me to ask whether a bill did not once pass to that effect.

Mr. FESSENDEN. No, sir; no such bill.

Mr. JOHNSON. Did it not pass the Senate; I mean?

Mr. FESSENDEN. No.

Mr. GRIMES. There was a report made in favor of it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. No, never a report made in favor of that. There was afterward a report made by Mr. Bayard, as chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, but it did not go as far as that.

Mr. JOHNSON. You proposed to go to Third street?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Our idea was that when we did move we ought to go to Third street on the west, to the depot building on the north, and as far on the south. We thought that on the west front we should go to Third street just as far as our public grounds extend on the one side of Pennsylvania avenue. Whether that will ever be done or not I do not know; but certainly the grounds should be extended somewhat on the west front, and if we are to extend them on that front of the Capitol it would be very unwise for us to embarrass ourselves with a permission given by law to a railroad company to establish themselves there, because we should be troubled with claims for damages and things of that sort, and it would be said that we were interfering with rights heretofore granted, and claims would be urged upon Congress and of one kind and another. My own idea has been always that the cars ought to cross above instead of going around where they do. They ought to cross the river above instead of running on a bridge alongside the Long bridge. I think so still. It would be somewhat more expensive to them undoubtedly; but it would be a great deal more convenient for the public. They would be more out of the way, and they would leave the lower part of the city and the principal avenues undisturbed. To do that they would have to go a little further round, and therefore it would cost them a little more; and I have always found in my experience in regard to railroad bills that when the interests of a railroad came in collision with the interests of the public before legislative bodies the interests of the public always have to give way. It is so invariably. It has been always found that they could not stand against the interests of a railroad company, for some mysterious reason or other that I never could exactly comprehend, even if I could see how the thing was brought about.

Now, I have an objection to their running a steam engine across their bridge right alongside of the Long bridge. If the Long bridge is to stand, there must always be a great deal of travel over it by carriages of all descriptions, and a great many horses to and fro; and as the country across the river settles still more the travel will increase; and to have an engine come steaming along directly by the side of that bridge, with horses and carriages on the bridge as they often are very thick, will, in my apprehension, lead to a great many very serious accidents. I always objected to it on that account.

I state these things with regard to this proposition to give by law the right to pass here by the Capitol. I am opposed to it utterly; but as to the other matter of crossing the bridge, I do not take so much interest in, as I do not risk my own neck down there.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I rise simply to answer one or two points made by the Senator from Maine. The present Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has, to some extent, examined the question of the extension of the Capitol grounds. In so far as I know, that committee is only divided in regard to one question, and that is, whether it is well to take in the squares immediately north and south of the grounds east of the Capitol. I do not think it is proposed by any member of the committee now to extend the grounds on the west to Third street. So far as I am concerned, although there is great weight in the name of Senator Douglas brought in in favor of that enterprise, I should not think it proper to entertain the proposition now. The cost of securing those grounds would be enormous. They are not necessary, and I do not believe that the greatness of this country consists at all in the extent of the pleasure grounds for the accommodation of the people of the city of Washington. My judgment is that one line of railroad connecting the North with the South, even through the great city of Washington, is worth a hundred or a thousand acres of pleasure grounds.

I do not know anything about this particular bill; I did not know it was here; but I should dislike very much to see us return to the old proposition of being carried from the depot here across the Potomac river in carriages or in omnibuses. I never saw anybody inconvenienced by the running of these trains along the public grounds. This is a great matter, the connection of the northern and southern railways. At the last session of Congress, or at the session before, you granted the privilege of constructing a bridge across the Ohio river. You were content that the steamboat navigation of that great stream should be obstructed to some extent that you might make one connected line of road between the North and the South, connecting the Indiana roads and the Kentucky roads. I favored it, although to some extent it interfered with the navigation of that great river; and why? Because it was of prime importance as a public measure to connect the great lines of railroads of the southern States with those of the northern States. So here, the road between this city and Baltimore is, to some extent, a trunk road, connecting the State of Virginia and those lying to the south of it with the States lying to the north.

This is a question of commerce, not a question of pleasure grounds, not a question whether the people of Washington can come and hear the music on Wednesday and Saturday evenings. I think that is unimportant. I should like to see this elegant building surrounded with sufficient and suitable grounds. We all agree about that; but that we should cut off a great line of commercial communication for the accommodation of a few people in this city is a proposition that to me has no force. I live in a city of a good deal of progress, which within four or five years has doubled its population, and why? Because there are eight first-class railroads that concentrate there, and we have furnished a union depot almost in the very heart of the city, where the traveling community from all portions of the world can come in and step from car to car without expense or delay. In that city there is no delay in transshipment, no hack hire, no omnibus business, but the old and the young can step right in that splendid depot from one train of cars to another, and they come in and out of the city by steam power running through the main streets of the city of Indianapolis, and there is no inconvenience about it. At the crossings of the streets we have men stationed to admonish the people of the approach of the cars. I say that that railroad connection in the city of Indianapolis is worth hundreds of thousands of dollars to the city and to the whole country, and the advantage to the traveling community of all sections of the country is incalculable. It is a great thing to make these connections; and what is it to run through these broad streets? Our streets in Indianapolis, where the trains run at the rate of six miles an hour, are narrow compared with these immense avenues. Our streets are thronged with people pursuing commerce, trade, and manufactures, and yet there is no serious inconvenience. The cars go along, and the people look out for them. The avenue here proposed to be used, Maryland avenue, is comparatively a deserted street. It looks well enough; we keep it up; but if we put a railroad track down there, more people will go over that street in the railroad cars in a week when proper relations are restored, than now travel for months on the avenue. You scarcely see anybody on the avenue; and yet we keep up this broad avenue; we pay the expenses of it as a promenade, I suppose, and we are not to allow the channels of commerce to pass through it. I do not think it is good for much else than to lay down a first-class railroad on. I have a little objection to the railroad passing by in front of the public grounds, but not much. If people want to come up here and listen to the debates of Congress, let them look out for the cars; let boards be put up, as they are with us, to admonish the people that trains are coming. There is no great inconvenience about it.

Mr. GRIMES. This railroad company is not required even to do that.

Mr. HENDRICKS. It is suggested to me that some people may get killed. I know people are sometimes killed at Indianapolis, but that seems to be almost a necessity of commerce and trade, and we cannot help it. People who travel in cars are liable to be killed. People crossing the railroads in their wagons on the roads through the country are occasionally killed; but we cannot help that. There is no inconvenience here that amounts to anything.

I do not know whether I am really in favor of this bill, but I did not want to consent to the plausible propositions of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The speech of the Senator from Indiana satisfied me, if I needed any satisfaction on that point, of the truth of the remark I made, that when you put the interest of the public in competition with a railroad bill, the former does not stand any chance at all. The thing, as I said before, is mysterious, but men's minds work so. I do not care anything about Maryland avenue; I would as lief the cars should run through that avenue as not; what I object to is crossing Pennsylvania avenue at this point, and running along the Capitol grounds. I object to anything that will furnish a permanent difficulty in the way of extending the Capitol grounds. I think there is something on this earth of value to a people besides money and commerce and trade. I think that when a great Government like this has put up a building like this, the grounds around it ought to be of suitable extent. If they are large enough, so be it. I do not see any necessity for extending them on the east; but I do for extending them toward the river. It is, however, a matter of taste, a matter of opinion. I do not say that my opinion is good for much on such a question; but such was my opinion at the time when the proposition to which I have alluded was made. If it had been carried out at that time the expense would not have been as enormous nor so great by any means as it will be now. The expense then would have been comparatively small. It may perhaps be too expensive now, and it may be too late to accomplish the object; but it is a thing which of all others I should like to have done, because I hope the time will arrive—of course I shall not live to see it—when a building like this which is a glory to the country shall be surrounded by grounds of suitable extent. The sooner we begin to provide for them the better; and when we have done it, I think that a little spot on the face of the earth of a hundred acres or so might be spared for the Capitol of a great nation like this, even to the extreme inconvenience of a railroad company of requiring them to take another direction around the grounds instead of going through them. This is the whole argument, that it would cost them a little more money, they would have to go a little further to get on one side clear of the Capitol grounds, where we meet, and where we are to meet. It would be a little more expensive to them; but I think that there are arguments of sufficient consequence if we could only find them, why a private company should be put to a little more expense and inconvenience rather than that they should put everybody else to inconvenience and subject everybody else to danger. It may be, however, that I am mistaken, and that there is nothing which ought to come in competition with the interests of a railroad company.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I think one remark of the Senator from Maine was not exactly just. I was not interposing for and I do not refer to, the interests of any railroad company. I said I did not know this company. I did not know what the interest was, and my whole argument was, that a mere matter of taste or the pleasure of people here should not stand in the way of a great railroad connection.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Then my friend from Indiana misunderstood me. I am not troubling myself about the convenience of the people of Washington particularly, but here is our Capitol, here are our public grounds; we ourselves pass directly every day from the foot of them across the avenue. What I contend for is that we ought to have grounds suitable to the building we occupy, the Capitol of the nation; and it is totally inconsistent with that idea and totally unnecessary, too, that we should have a railroad company driving its engines and its cars directly through these grounds or directly across the foot of them, where we must necessarily pass to and fro every day when Congress is in session, when they can find another mode of crossing at perhaps some additional expense to themselves. I agree with the Senator that it might be very important and very well to have a connection across this city, north and south, but I do not see the absolute necessity that it should go in one direction rather than another. That never has been proven to my satisfaction.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The remark of the Senator that I objected to was that my few remarks had satisfied him that when a railroad company is on the one side and the public interest on the other, he always saw that the railroad company won the field.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I will say to the Senator exactly what I meant by that. I had made the remark before that it always turned out to be so, and when I saw so very sensible and so very clear-headed a man as my honorable friend from Indiana taking that line of argument, it satisfied me of the truth of my previous remark.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I will tell you what I think it ought to have satisfied the Senator of—that the true interests of the country must be respected. Now, I do not know this company, and I care nothing about it as a company, whether it makes profit or not; but to make a railroad connection I do care about. That is of prime importance; and this thing of tunneling around to the east of the Capitol I do not believe anything in. I do not think it will ever be done. I have no faith in that, not a particle. I do not believe there will ever be any tunnel made there.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not either, if they can cross down here.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Where the grounds are level.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That I do not want them to do.

Mr. GRIMES. I withdraw my amendment and substitute in place of it an amendment in the thirteenth line striking out "and First street west."

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask the honorable member how that affects the bill.

Mr. GRIMES. It will leave the company the privilege of crossing the bridge and Maryland avenue, but will not grant them the privilege of crossing Pennsylvania avenue or First street in front of the Capitol grounds.

Mr. JOHNSON. It is very important, as I think, that there should be a continuous communication. That it ought not to be in front of the Capitol, I admit, except as a temporary provision. That the Capitol grounds ought to be extended, I also agree with the Senator from Maine. But I do not know that any actual inconvenience has occurred, or, except upon one occasion, any accident has occurred, from running the cars across in front of the grounds as they now stand. I think the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company once applied for permission to connect their road with the Virginia roads by tunneling here to the east, and that application, I think, they have renewed. I have no doubt that if Congress will give them the privilege of making a connection in that way they will avail themselves of it; but in the mean time it would be very injurious to the people South and North that they should be stopped at Maryland avenue. They must then make the connection with the Baltimore and Ohio road above, either in omnibuses or horse cars, or by walking, and they must dispose of their baggage in the same way. If the honorable member will limit the privilege that this is to give, to some three or four or five years, I think it would answer his purpose.

Mr. MORRILL. I think I ought to explain this bill a little further. I am sure the Senate do not quite understand it. I have already said that what the bill now contemplates has actually been practiced, not by this company, but by the War Department, for the last four years, and there has been no practical inconvenience resulting from it. They have now built a bridge at great expense across the Potomac river and are running, I am told, some ten trains a day between this place and the city of Alexandria. Now, if they should be restricted to the Potomac river, to simply crossing the river, it will be seen at a glance what the inconvenience to the public would be here, and would be between the Baltimore and Ohio depot all this distance to be made good in some way, by carriages, &c. I think there is something in the argument of my colleague as to the crossing here in front of the Capitol grounds; and if it was intended to be a permanent thing, I would not give my consent to it. But I know the fact that a bill is already pending to change the location from Maryland avenue around to the east side of the Capitol, and there pass by a tunnel to a connection on the north side into a common depot with the Baltimore and Ohio railroad.

Now, I suggest whether it is worth while to interrupt the communication that has been made for four years in front of us here. For the present, why not allow the company to continue to practice what has been so safely practiced for the last four years, until a communication can be made on the east side of the Capitol? The amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa relieves the matter very much, because it gives the company the right to cross the bridge and the right to come up Maryland avenue, but it leaves the connection between Maryland avenue and the Baltimore and Ohio railroad depot unprovided for. If that is the sense of the Senate, that they ought not to make the connection, I am content.

Mr. HENDERSON. As a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I have had more or less occasion to look into this matter. In fact, I was upon a sub-committee to examine the scheme of tunneling the ground east of the Capitol. I went around and examined it. I do not know that I could form any correct conclusion from any examination I might make on a subject of that sort, but I should dislike very much, from what I know of this matter, to see the amendment of the Senator from Iowa adopted. I would much rather see a proposition giving the company the right to continue the use of steam upon these streets, for a short time, say for twelve months or two years. I would amend the bill by inserting after the word "granted," in the fourth line, the words "for a period of two years from the date of the passage of this act;" and then I would add a proviso that trains should not be drawn through Washington city, or along the bridge over the Potomac river, at a greater rate of speed than five miles an hour, or if the Senate choose to say six miles an hour I shall be satisfied. In 1863 we had some legislation on this subject, and we provided by the first section of the act approved March 3, 1863—

"That the Alexandria and Washington Railroad Company be, and the same is hereby, authorized to extend their said railroad from the south side of the Potomac across said river to and along Maryland avenue to the Capitol grounds, and across Pennsylvania avenue along First street to Indiana avenue, and thence to the Baltimore and Ohio depot; and that all the ordinary rights, privileges, and liabilities, incident to similar corporations are conferred upon said company for that purpose: Provided, however, That the same shall be subject to alteration, amendment, or repeal: And provided further, That the cars shall not be drawn on the streets aforesaid, or on the structure across the Potomac river mentioned in the second section of this act, by steam power, without the consent of Congress and of the corporate authorities of the city of Washington thereto."

By one of the provisions of that act I understand that the company have been propelling their cars by steam over Maryland avenue and along First street, west of the Capitol, ever since that time. At that time authority was given to build a railroad bridge across the Potomac river, very near to what is termed the Long bridge. The company constructed a very valuable bridge, a very good railroad bridge, and are now using it. It is true it is near the Long bridge. The Senator from Maine [Mr. FESSENDEN] thinks it would be very dangerous to persons crossing the Long bridge, especially in carriages, to have railroad trains propelled by steam across the railroad bridge. I can state to the Senator, upon some inquiry into the matter, that I have never heard of a single accident on the bridge since trains have been propelled across by steam. We can best judge matters of this sort by experience and by actual test. For three long years they have been using steam power on this bridge, and not a single accident has occurred upon the Long bridge in consequence of it.

Mr. GRIMES. How long?

Mr. HENDERSON. I said three years ago, but I take that back. It is three years ago since we gave authority to build the bridge. It was constructed, I think, within about twelve months. They have been using steam upon the bridge now for about eighteen months or two years, and not a single accident has occurred in consequence of it. I have heard of but one accident from the use of steam, even upon First street west, and that has been alluded to, I believe, by the Senator from Maine, and it turned out in that case that it was not the fault of the railroad company, but the fault of the driver of the horse car.

Now, the question arises whether it would be advisable to abandon this direct communication between the Baltimore and Ohio railroad and the Alexandria railroad, or rather to use horse power in drawing the cars through this city, thus obstructing to a certain extent trade and travel between the North and the South, because this is the only line that affords direct railroad communication. The Baltimore and Ohio railroad cars go through with steam a portion of the city that is more densely populated, or at least as much so as Maryland avenue.

Mr. JOHNSON. Where?

Mr. HENDERSON. They use steam coming into their depot on the north side.

Mr. JOHNSON. But there are no houses there.

Mr. HENDERSON. I can hardly see any houses on Maryland avenue to be injured or endangered by the use of steam.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Philadelphia railroad goes through a large extent of the settled part of Baltimore by steam.

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes, that is on the other side; and on this side also the Baltimore and Ohio railroad in approaching the depot in the city of Baltimore passes through a portion of that city much more densely populated than is any part of the city of Washington where it is proposed to run these cars by steam. This is done in almost every city of the Union. It is done in Chicago; it is done in Cleveland; it has been done in the city of St. Louis during the whole period of the war, and I do not now remember any case of an accident having occurred in consequence of it. Possible accidents have occurred; but certainly very few, if any, in consequence of the use of steam. I have not heard of a building being burned, or even of any collision between the drays upon the wharves at St. Louis and the steam engines.

I do not propose to give the permanent use of First street west. I have the same objection to that which the Senator from Maine presented. In fact that right is worth a great deal to this company; it is worth an immense amount to them. The truth of the matter is, that the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company is very anxious to secure the privilege of tunneling the ground for half a mile or three quarters of a mile on the east of the Capitol, and thus to get a permanent connection between the northern and southern lines of railroad in this country. They estimate the cost of that work at more than a million dollars, and they are very willing, indeed very anxious, to secure that privilege at the hands of Congress. I would not grant the privilege of using First street as a permanent privilege, but I would give them the temporary use of the street while the tunnel is being constructed, by means of which they can get under ground on the northern side of the city, and keep under ground until they approach the canal south of New Jersey avenue.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That is where they should go.

Mr. HENDERSON. A tunnel can surely be constructed on the eastern side of the Capitol by means of which to make the connection, and it ought to be done. I would not cut off the privilege which is now being exercised at present. I would let them pass through the city and across First street, because we are not proposing just now to extend the Capitol grounds; we are not prepared to do so; and it is of very great moment indeed, now that the country has been restored, to its old commercial relations, anyhow, that the connection should be as perfect as possible. This is the only point at which it can be made.

I would suggest another fact that I have had some occasion to examine as a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia. I was not aware that such a bill was here. It is not the bill which we had before us, and which was given in my charge. That bill was for the purpose of tunneling on the east side of the Capitol; and I examined the matter, and at the request of the parties interested, agreed to let it lie until a bill should come from the other House on the subject. I do not know what course of action the other House has taken on the bill that was pending there. There is a bridge at Georgetown that belonged to the Alexandria Canal Company; and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. WADE] and myself have had a duty devolved on us to make some examination into that. It is an interference, as now constructed, with the harbor at Georgetown; and the inhabitants of Georgetown are exceedingly anxious, now that they desire to extend their wharf facilities and their coal facilities, to remove the bridge, or to be enabled to put a draw in it, so that commerce may go for some two or three miles further up the river, and that they can use that portion of the wharves at Georgetown west of the bridge for coaling purposes, and that sailing vessels can be taken up there. In order to do that, we have to interfere with the chartered privileges of the Alexandria Canal Company. A draw cannot be put into the bridge when used as an aqueduct, but can if used as a bridge; and in all probability legislation may be had during this session by which that bridge at Georgetown, with certainly very superior piers, with very little expense may be made a means of communication across the Potomac of far better character than now enjoyed through the Long bridge. It is now dangerous, as I understand, or becoming so, to cross upon the Long bridge at all, not from the passage of railroad trains, but because of the character of the structure itself.

Mr. WADE. They have not passed on that bridge for a long time.

Mr. HENDERSON. I now understand that it was dangerous; I did not know that fact before.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I suppose, then, the reason that no accidents have happened is because nobody crosses it.

Mr. HENDERSON. There was crossing there after the company commenced using steam. I would state that upon an examination of the subject I think it is likely that we can secure the bridge at Georgetown. The Canal Company owes the Government $300,000 loaned in 1837. No attention has ever been paid to it. The canal is very unprofitable stock in the hands of the company. It is worth nothing. Indeed, it is doubtful whether the company would ever again use it as a canal. Certainly if we take the past experience of the canal, the profits of the business will not pay for the necessary repairs in order to use the bridge as an aqueduct again. Under the circumstances, inasmuch as the travel is now passing over the bridge at Georgetown almost entirely, and inasmuch as no inconvenience can arise from using steam across the railroad bridge, which is a very superior structure, and the company deserve a great deal of credit for constructing such a work as it is, and inasmuch as commerce would require that if we can use with anything like security the streets of the city in order to connect the lines of railroad we should do so, I think we had better pass the bill, limited as I have suggested.

The Senator from Iowa is a friend of intercommunication, and even went so far, the other day, as to see no objection to bridging the Father of Waters.

Mr. MORRILL. At Burlington.

Mr. HENDERSON. I believe he made no objection at any point to very low structures. I suggest to him that he had better withdraw his amendment, and let us give for a period, say of two years, the privilege to use steam over the line where it has been used for the last three years; and within those two years I have no doubt we shall pass a bill authorizing a tunnel, because they can make it perfectly secure, and within that time perhaps they may complete the tunnel east of the Capitol.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Why not pass the tunneling bill, and in that bill tell them they must have their tunnel done in a certain time, and until that time expires they may use this crossing?

Mr. HENDERSON. I have no objection to that course of proceeding.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Then you would make one dependent on the other.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have no charge of this bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Your committee has charge of the question.

Mr. HENDERSON. It is as the Senator from Maine [Mr. MORRILL] may see fit in regard to it.

Mr. MORRILL. Well—

Mr. HENDERSON. I have no doubt we shall pass that bill. It was put in my charge. I am ready to report it at any time. I have it not here; it is at my room.

Mr. MORRILL. With that understanding, I ask that this bill be laid aside, and I will call up another.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the further consideration of this bill be postponed until to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed without amendment the joint resolution (S. R. No. 97) to authorize certain medals to be distributed to veteran soldiers free of postage.

The message also returned to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (S. No. 305) to amend an act entitled "An act concerning notaries public for the District of Columbia," approved April 8, 1864.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed a concurrent resolution for the appointment of a joint committee of the two Houses to investigate the action of the Freedmen's Bureau and its officers, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; which were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 186) amendatory of an act to provide for the reports of decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 61) to extend the time for the construction of the first section of the Western Pacific railroad;

A bill (H. R. No. 265) granting a pension to John Hoffman, of Madison county, in the State of New York;

A bill (H. R. No. 368) for the relief of Francis A. Gibbons;

A bill (H. R. No. 434) for the relief of Isabella Strubing;

A bill (H. R. No. 445) for the relief of the legal representatives of Betsey Nash;

A bill (H. R. No. 460) granting pension to Spencer Kellogg;

A bill (H. R. No. 494) for the relief of Martha J. Willey;

A bill (H. R. No. 563) to regulate the time and fix the place for holding the circuit court of the United States in the district of Virginia, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. No. 132) to prevent and punish kidnaping; and

A bill (S. No. 316) to establish a post route from West Alburg, Vermont, to Champlain, in the State of New York, and for other purposes.

FREEDMEN'S BUREAU.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That a joint committee consisting of two Senators and three members of the House of Representatives be appointed to investigate the action of the Freedmen's Bureau and its officers in the States where the bureau has been in operation, with power to send for persons and papers and examine witnesses under oath; and that said committee make personal examination, and report the facts to Congress; and said committee is authorized to employ a stenographer and clerk. The Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate or House, or either of their deputies, is directed to accompany the committee; and the committee shall have power to report at any time. And the expenses necessarily incurred by said committee shall be paid out of the contingent funds of the Senate and House in equal proportions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What order will the Senate take upon this resolution?

Mr. JOHNSON. Let it lie on the table for the present.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move that the resolution be printed, so that we may see what it is.

The motion was agreed to.

LIFE AND ACCIDENT INSURANCE COMPANY.

Mr. MORRILL. I now ask the Senate to take up for consideration Senate bill No. 290.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 290) to incorporate the National Life and Accident Insurance Company of the District of Columbia.

Mr. TRUMBULL. We have passed to-day quite a number of bills incorporating companies, and this seems to be a bill of considerable importance. I move that the Senate do now adjourn, and let it go over.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, May 21, 1866.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. C. B. BOXTON.

The Journal of Saturday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER stated as the first business in order the calling of the States for bills and joint resolutions on leave to be referred to the appropriate committees and not to be brought back into the House on a motion to reconsider, commencing with the State of Maine.

RIGHTS OF LOYAL CITIZENS.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, introduced a bill to protect the rights of action of loyal citizens; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PUNISHMENT OF CRIME.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, introduced a bill to define and punish certain crimes therein named; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, introduced a bill to amend an act to establish the judicial courts of the United States; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL CURRENCY.

Mr. DUMONT introduced an act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a national currency secured by pledge of United States bonds, and provide for the liquidation and redemption thereof," approved June 3, 1864; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

MILITARY RESERVE AT FORT GRATIOT.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE introduced a bill to amend an act granting the right of way over the military reserve at Fort Gratiot, Michigan; which was read a first and second time, and with an accompanying letter from the Secretary of the Interior referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PAY OF LETTER CARRIERS IN SAN FRANCISCO.

Mr. McRUER introduced a joint resolution authorizing the Postmaster General to pay additional salaries to letter carriers in San Francisco; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

ACTING ASSISTANT SURGEONS.

Mr. DONNELLY introduced a bill relating to acting assistant surgeons in the United States Army; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PORTS OF DELIVERY IN NEBRASKA.

Mr. HITCHCOCK introduced a bill to constitute Omaha and Nebraska City, in the Territory of Nebraska, ports of delivery; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

TRADE AND INTERCOURSE WITH INDIANS.

Mr. BRADFORD introduced a bill in relation to trade and intercourse with Indian tribes; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The call of the States and Territories for bills and joint resolutions being now completed, the Speaker proceeded to call the States and Territories, in an inverse order, for resolutions, commencing with the State of New York.

FREEDMEN'S BUREAU.

Mr. LAFLIN introduced the following resolution, upon which he demanded the previous question:

Resolved, That the Commissioner of the Bureau of Freedmen, Refugees, and Abandoned Lands be directed to communicate to this House the reports recently made concerning the action of the bureau by Generals Steedman and Fullerton and by Generals Whittlesey and Sewell and such other reports recently made and not heretofore communicated to Congress as may be in the possession of that bureau.

The SPEAKER. This being a call for executive information, it requires unanimous consent for its consideration to-day.

Mr. LE BLOND. I desire to move an amendment to the resolution. I desire to have these reports published in connection with the testimony taken by the reconstruction committee, that they may go to the country for what they purport to be.

Mr. LAFLIN. It would be impossible to have that done now, because the printing of the report of the reconstruction committee is in such a condition that it would be impossible to do it.

Mr. LE BLOND. I ask if the report of the committee on reconstruction has been published.

Mr. LAFLIN. It has not yet been delivered, but it is in print.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would state that if the resolution gives rise to debate it goes over under the rule.

Mr. LE BLOND. I simply wish to say that my understanding is that the report is being printed, but that it is in that condition that the reports of these generals can be added to it, and it ought to go to the country in that shape.

Mr. LAFLIN. I demand the previous question.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I desire to know if an objection does not make this resolution go over.

The SPEAKER. It would not do so now. The resolution has been debated since it was introduced, and it is too late to make the point.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. ELIOT moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TAX ON COTTON.

Mr. DODGE presented memorials from the Chamber of Commerce of New York, in relation to the proposed tax of five cents per pound on cotton; which were referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

TAX ON STATE-BANK CURRENCY.

Mr. DAVIS submitted the following resolution, upon which he called the previous question:

Resolved, That the Committee on Banking and Currency be authorized and directed to inquire into the expediency of exempting the currency of State banks outstanding on the 1st day of July next from the tax of ten per cent. now provided by law until the 1st day of July, 1887, or until some day previous thereto.

The previous question was seconded and the main question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The call of States and Territories having been concluded,

The SPEAKER stated the next business in order during the morning hour was the consideration of resolutions which have laid over under the rule, debate having arisen thereon.

INSURGENT STATES.

The first business under this rule was the following preamble and resolution introduced by Mr. McCLURG on the 5th of February last:

Whereas it is clearly manifest that the continued contumacy in the seceding States renders it necessary to exercise congressional legislation in order to give to the loyal citizens of those States protection in their natural and personal rights enumerated in the Constitution of the United States, and in addition thereto makes it necessary to keep on foot a large standing army to maintain the authority of the national Government and to keep the peace; and whereas the country is already overburdened by a war debt incurred to defend the nationality against an infamous rebellion, and it is neither just nor politic to inflict this vast additional expense on the peaceful industry of the nation: Therefore,

Resolved, That it be referred to the joint committee of the Senate and House to inquire into the expediency of levying contributions on the seceding States to defray the extraordinary expenses that would otherwise be imposed on the General Government; and that said committee be instructed to report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. McCLURG. I call the previous question on the passage of the resolution.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. McClurg] amend his resolution by inserting after the word "protection" the words "and representation?"

Mr. HOGAN. Oh, no.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. Oh, yes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I would suggest to the gentleman from Missouri that this resolution does not specify the committee to which he proposes to refer this subject. It merely says "that it be referred to the joint committee of the Senate and House."

Mr. McCLURG. I will modify the resolution so that it shall read "the joint committee of fifteen."

Mr. NIBLACK moved to lay the preamble and resolution on the table.

Mr. LE BLOND called the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The motion to lay on the table was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon seconding the previous question.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. Is it in order to move the reference of this resolution to the Committee on the Judiciary?

The SPEAKER. The previous question is called; if that call is not seconded, that motion will be in order.

Upon seconding the call for the previous question, there were, upon a division—ayes 40, noes 24; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. McCLURG and NIBLACK appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 68, noes 25.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was then ordered, which was upon agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. LE BLOND called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 73, nays 25, not voting 85; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Ames, Anderson, James M. Ashley, Baker, Beaman, Bidwell, Boutwell, Brandegee, Reader W. Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Cullem, Dawes, Defrees, Deming, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Eliot, Abner C. Harding, Henderson, Higby, Holmes, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, Julian, Kelley, Kelso, Ketcham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Longyear, Lynch, McClurg, McKee, Mercer, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Moulton, O'Neill, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Plants, Price, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck Scofield, Sloan, Spalding, Stevens, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Ward, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—73.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Chanler, Davis, Dawson, Denison, Eldridge, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Grider, Hale, Aaron Harding, Hogan, Edwin N. Hubbell, James M. Humphrey, Kerr, Laffin, Le Blond, Marston, McCullough, McRuer, Myers, Niblack, Nicholson, Phelps, Samuel J. Randall, Ritter, Rogers, Ross, Sitgreaves, Taber, Taylor, Thayer, Whaley, Winfield, and Wright—25.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Alley, Delos R. Ashley, Baldwin, Banks, Barker, Baxter, Benjamin, Bergen, Bingham, Blaine, Blow, Boyer, Bromwell, Broomall, Buckland, Bundy, Sidney Clarke, Coffroth, Conkling, Culver, Darling, Delano, Dixon, Dodge, Eggleston, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Ferry, Finck, Garfield, Grinnell, Griswold, Harris, Hart, Hayes, Hill, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, James Humphrey, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Johnson, Jones, Kasson, Kuykendall, Latham, Marshall, Marvin, McIndoe, Miller, Newell, Noell, Orth, Pomeroy, Radford, William H. Randall, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, Rousseau, Shanklin, Shellabarger, Smith, Starr, Stilwell, Strouse, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, and Wentworth—85.

So the resolution was agreed to.

The preamble of the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. McCLURG moved to reconsider the votes by which the preamble and resolution were agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUNISHMENT OF REBELS.

The next resolution lying over under the rule was the following, submitted by Mr. HENDERSON on the 19th of February last:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this House that all just and righteous Governments are intended, not to confer rights and privileges upon the subjects thereof, but to secure to each and every individual the full, free, and untrammelled exercise and enjoyment of all those rights which God has bestowed upon him.

Resolved, That the safety, prosperity, and happiness of the people require that just and adequate penalties be annexed to the violation of law, and that those penalties be inflicted upon transgressors, not for the purpose of retaliation or revenge, but to insure subordination and obedience.

Resolved further, That we will stand by and sustain the President in executing the laws of the United States upon a sufficient number of leading rebels in each of the States lately in insurrection against the national Government to vindicate the majesty of the law, to sustain the confidence of loyal people, and to warn the refractory for all time to come.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not deem it necessary to occupy any time in the discussion of these resolutions. I believe that the sentiments embodied in them are correct, and ought to be sustained. With the view of disposing of the matter as speedily as possible, I call the previous question.

Mr. ROSS. I would inquire of the gentleman from Oregon whether he had not better modify his resolution so as to include northern rebels, and let them all be tried, "without distinction of race or color."

Mr. HENDERSON. I insist on the demand for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded.

Mr. NIBLACK. I would suggest that it would be proper to indicate about how many of these leading rebels ought to be executed. The language of the resolution is very indefinite. While we are instructing the President, I think we ought to state about the number that we want executed, and we ought also to name them.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I object to debate.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been seconded, and debate is not in order.

The main question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolutions were adopted.

Mr. HENDERSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolutions were adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

QUALIFICATION OF ELECTORS.

The next resolution lying over under the rule was the following, submitted by Mr. DEFREES on the 26th of February last:

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this House that Congress has no constitutional right to fix the qualification of electors in the several States.

Mr. DEFREES. I call for the previous question.

On seconding the call for the previous question there were—ayes 32, noes 53; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER, under the rules, ordered tellers; and appointed Messrs. DEFREES and JENCKES.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 30, noes 66.

So the previous question was not seconded.

Mr. ROGERS. I move to lay the resolution on the table, and on that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. Speaker, if the motion to lay on the table should not prevail, will it be in order to move to refer the resolution to the Committee on the Judiciary?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I hope, then, that the motion to lay on the table will not prevail.

Mr. LE BLOND. I hope that the resolution will not be referred, for that will be to bury it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 12, nays 97, not voting 74; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Baldwin, Boutwell, Bundy, Reader W. Clarke, Eliot, Garfield, Jenckes, Julian, Longyear, Lynch, Stevens, and Williams—12.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Ancona, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Baxter, Beaman, Bidwell, Brandegee, Chanler, Cobb, Cook, Cullem, Davis, Dawson, Defrees, Deming, Denison, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Eldridge, Farnsworth, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Grider, Hale, Aaron Harding, Abner C. Harding, Henderson, Higby, Hogan, Holmes, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Hulburd, James M. Humphrey, Ingersoll, Kelley, Kelso, Kerr, Ketcham, Kuykendall, Laffin, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Le Blond, Loan, Marvin, McClurg, McCullough, McRuer, Mercer, Moorhead, Morris, Myers, Niblack, Nicholson, O'Neill, Paine, Perham, Phelps, Plants, Price, Samuel J. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Ritter, Rogers, Rollins, Ross, Sawyer, Scofield, Sitgreaves, Sloan, Spalding, Stilwell, Taber, Taylor, Thayer, Trowbridge, Upson, Ward, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Welker, Whaley, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, Winfield, and Wright—97.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. James M. Ashley, Banks, Barker, Benjamin, Bergen, Bingham, Blaine, Blow, Boyer, Bromwell, Broomall, Buckland, Sidney Clarke, Coffroth, Conkling, Culver, Darling, Dawes, Delano, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Eggleston, Farquhar, Ferry, Finck, Grinnell, Griswold, Harris, Hart, Hayes, Hill, Hooper, Hotchkiss, James R. Hubbell, James Humphrey, Johnson, Jones, Kasson, Latham, Marshall, Marston, McIndoe, McKee, Miller, Morrill, Moulton, Newell, Noell, Orth, Patterson, Pike, Pomeroy, Radford, William H. Randall, Raymond, Rousseau, Schenck, Shanklin, Shellabarger, Smith, Starr, Strouse, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Wentworth, and Woodbridge—74.

So the House refused to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. This is a judicial question, and one of great importance. I therefore move it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and on that I demand the previous question.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. It is a simple constitutional question.

Mr. LE BLOND. I move to amend the motion by adding that it be referred with instructions to report favorably and at any time.

The SPEAKER. It would require unanimous consent to move instructions to report "at any time."

Mr. LE BLOND. Then I will leave those last words off.

The SPEAKER. If the previous question should not be seconded the motion to amend will be in order.

Mr. LE BLOND. Will not the gentleman accept my amendment?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No, sir; we want to get at the bounty bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. ANCONA. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question being taken on the motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on the Judiciary, it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 86, nays 80, not voting 67; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Bidwell, Boutwell, Brandegee, Bromwell, Bundy, Reader W. Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Cullom, Davis, Dawes, Deming, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Eliot, Farnsworth, Garfield, Griswold, Hale, Abner C. Harding, Henderson, Holmes, Hooper, Asahel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Julian, Kelley, Kelso, Ketcham, Ladin, William Lawrence, Loan, Longyear, Lynch, Marston, Marvin, McClurg, McKee, Mercer, Moorhead, Morris, Myers, O'Neill, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Price, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Sloan, Spalding, Stevens, Thayer, Francis Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Ward, William B. Washburn, Welker, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—86.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Dawson, Defrees, Denison, Eldridge, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Grider, Aaron Harding, Hogan, Edwin N. Hubbell, James M. Humphrey, Kerr, Kuykendall, George V. Lawrence, Le Blond, McCullough, Niblack, Nicholson, Samuel J. Randall, Ritter, Rogers, Ross, Sitgreaves, Stilwell, Taber, Taylor, Henry D. Washburn, Winfield, and Wright—80.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Banks, Barker, Benjamin, Bergen, Bingham, Blaine, Blow, Boyer, Broomall, Buckland, Chanler, Sidney Clarke, Coffroth, Conkling, Culver, Darling, Delano, Dixon, Dodge, Eggleston, Farquhar, Ferry, Finck, Grinnell, Harris, Hart, Hayes, Higby, Hill, Hotchkiss, Chester D. Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, James Humphrey, Johnson, Jones, Kasson, Latham, Marshall, McIndoe, McKuer, Miller, Morrill, Moulton, Newell, Noell, Orth, Phelps, Pike, Plants, Pomeroy, Radford, Raymond, Rousseau, Shanklin, Shellabarger, Smith, Starr, Strouse, John L. Thomas, Thornton, Trimble, Van Aernam, Robert T. Van Horn, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Wentworth, and Whaley—67.

So the resolution was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BRANDEGEE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was referred; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 328) for the relief of Mrs. Abigail Ryan, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

Also, that the Senate had passed House bill No. 371, to grant a pension to Leonard St. Clair.

Also, that the Senate had passed joint resolution of the House No. 77, for the relief of Ambrose L. Goodrich and Nathan Cornish for carrying the United States mail from Boise City to Idaho City, in the Territory of Idaho, and of Daniel Wellington and J. C. Dorsey, for extra services in the carrying of the mail, with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

FREEDMEN'S BUREAU.

Mr. ELIOT. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That a committee consisting of two Senators and three members of the House of Representatives be appointed to investigate the action of the Freedmen's Bureau and of its officers in the States where the bureau has been in operation, with power to send for persons and papers and examine witnesses under oath; and that said committee make personal examination and report the facts to Congress; and said committee is authorized to employ a stenographer and clerk. The Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate or House, or either of their deputies, is directed to accompany the committee, and the committee shall have power to report at any time. All the expenses necessarily incurred by said committee, shall be paid out of the contingent funds of the Senate and House in equal proportions.

Mr. ROSS. I think we had better leave that to General Grant and General Sherman. The country would have no confidence in any report made to Congress by a committee. I object to its consideration.

Mr. ELIOT. I move to suspend the rules for the purpose of offering the resolution.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question being taken on the motion to suspend the rules, it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 92, nays 30, not voting 61; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Boutwell, Brandegee, Bromwell, Bundy, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Cullom, Davis, Dawes, Deming, Dodge, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Eliot, Farnsworth, Garfield, Griswold, Hale, Abner C. Harding, Henderson, Higby, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Julian, Kelley, Kelso, Ketcham, Ladin, William Lawrence, Loan, Longyear, Lynch, Marvin, McClurg, McKuer, Mercer, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Myers, O'Neill, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Plants, Price, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Sloan, Spalding, Stevens, Thayer, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Ward, William B. Washburn, Welker, Williams, James F. Wilson, Stephen F. Wilson, and Windom—92.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Chanler, Dawson, Defrees, Denison, Eldridge, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Grider, Aaron Harding, Hogan, Edwin N. Hubbell, James M. Humphrey, Kerr, Kuykendall, George V. Lawrence, Le Blond, Niblack, Nicholson, Ritter, Rogers, Ross, Sitgreaves, Stilwell, Taber, Taylor, Henry D. Washburn, Whaley, Winfield, and Wright—30.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Banks, Barker, Benjamin, Bergen, Bidwell, Bingham, Blaine, Blow, Boyer, Broomall, Buckland, Coffroth, Conkling, Culver, Darling, Delano, Dixon, Eggleston, Farquhar, Ferry, Finck, Grinnell, Harris, Hart, Hayes, Hill, James R. Hubbell, James Humphrey, Johnson, Jones, Kasson, Latham, Marshall, Marston, McCullough, McIndoe, McKee, Miller, Moulton, Newell, Noell, Orth, Phelps, Pomeroy, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Raymond, Rousseau, Shanklin, Shellabarger, Smith, Starr, Strouse, Thornton, Trimble, Van Aernam, Robert T. Van Horn, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Wentworth, and Woodbridge—61.

So (two thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended.

Mr. ELIOT demanded the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered, being upon the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. LE BLOND. I demand the yeas and nays on agreeing to the resolution, and call for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. LE BLOND and ELIOT were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes twenty-three, noes not counted.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 84, nays 27, not voting 72; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, James M. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Baxter, Beaman, Blaine, Brandegee, Bundy, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Cullom, Dawes, Deming, Dodge, Donnelly, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Eliot, Farnsworth, Garfield, Griswold, Abner C. Harding, Henderson, Higby, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, John H. Hubbard, Ingersoll, Jenckes, Julian, Kelley, Ketcham, Ladin, William Lawrence, Loan, Longyear, Lynch, Marston, Marvin, McClurg, McKuer, Mercer, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Myers, O'Neill, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Pike, Plants, Price, William H. Randall, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Sawyer, Schenck, Scofield, Spalding, Stevens, Thayer, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Trowbridge, Upson, Burt Van Horn, Ward, William B. Washburn, Welker, Williams, Stephen F. Wilson, Windom, and Woodbridge—84.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Chanler, Dawson, Denison, Eldridge, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Grider, Aaron Harding, Hogan, Edwin N. Hubbell, James M. Humphrey, Kerr, Kuykendall, Le Blond, McCullough, Niblack, Nicholson, Samuel J. Randall, Ritter, Rogers, Ross, Sitgreaves, Taber, Taylor, Winfield, and Wright—27.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Banks, Barker, Benjamin, Bergen, Bidwell, Bingham, Blow, Boutwell, Boyer, Bromwell, Broomall, Buckland, Coffroth, Conkling, Culver, Darling, Davis, Defrees, Delano, Dixon, Eggleston, Farquhar, Ferry, Finck, Grinnell, Hale, Harris, Hart, Hayes, Hill, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, James R. Hubbell, Hulburd, James Humphrey, Johnson, Jones, Kasson, Kelso, Latham, George V. Lawrence, Marshall, McIndoe, McKee, Miller, Moulton, Newell, Noell, Orth, Phelps, Pomeroy, Radford, Raymond, Rousseau, Shanklin, Shellabarger, Sloan, Smith, Starr, Stilwell, Strouse, Thornton, Trimble, Van Aernam, Robert T. Van Horn, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Henry D. Washburn, Wentworth, Whaley, and James F. Wilson—72.

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. ELIOT moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MEDALS FOR OHIO SOLDIERS.

Mr. SCHENCK. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take from the Speaker's table a joint resolution which has been passed by the Senate authorizing the military authorities of the State of Ohio to frank some medals which are given to the veteran soldiers of that State. It is joint resolution of the Senate No. 97, to authorize certain medals to be distributed to veteran soldiers free of postage. I ask that it be put upon its passage if there is no objection. It is needed very much at this time. The medals are ready for distribution.

The joint resolution was read a first and second time. It was then ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SIOUX INDIANS.

Mr. STEVENS asked unanimous consent to offer the following preamble and resolution:

Whereas it has been alleged that the Sioux Indians of Minnesota who were engaged in the massacre in that State in 1862 have been removed therefrom and a location for their permanent residence selected in one of the organized and settled counties of Nebraska contiguous to the white settlements of Dakota, and but a short distance above the capital of that Territory; and whereas most if not all of the lands suitable for cultivation in the neighborhood of said contemplated location is said to have been purchased from the Government and is now held by private individuals: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be requested to inform this House whether any arrangement has been made or is contemplated for the purchase of private lands or other property for the accommodation of said Indians, and if so, the quantity of lands and improvements so purchased or to be purchased, and the names of the parties from whom said purchase has been or is to be made, and the amount which has been or is to be paid for said purchase; and also the total number of acres of land held by individuals, whether in a private or corporate capacity, embraced within the exterior boundaries of said reservation, and by what authority said Indians have been removed and located, and the said purchases, if any, have been or are to be made.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object particularly to the resolution, but I think it—

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman objects to the resolution, it is not before the House; if he does not object, it is before the House.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the gentleman consent to the reference of this resolution?

Mr. STEVENS. I cannot consent to the reference. It is merely a call for information.

Mr. ALLISON. I will make no objection. The resolution was then agreed to.

COINAGE, WEIGHTS, AND MEASURES.

Mr. LAFLIN, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution, upon which he called the previous question:

Resolved, That three hundred extra copies of the report on a uniform system of coinage, weights, and measures be printed with covers for the use of the committee making the report, and two thousand copies for the use of the House.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. LAFLIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL obtained the floor.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Will the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] yield to me to offer a resolution?

Mr. MORRILL. I will yield to hear it read.

ROW IN MOBILE.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution for consideration at this time:

Resolved, That a committee of three members of this House be appointed by the Speaker, with authority to proceed forthwith to Mobile, in the State of Alabama, to investigate the "row" referred to in the following dispatch, to wit:

"REPORTED SERIOUS ROW IN MOBILE.—The Cincinnati Commercial has a dispatch from Atlanta, dated May 17, which says: 'The negroes had a row among themselves in a church in Mobile, on Sunday, which resulted in the killing of five and the wounding of a great many more.'"

And that said committee be authorized to send for persons and papers, the expenses to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. PRICE. I object.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Is it in order to move to suspend the rules for the purpose of introducing this resolution?

The SPEAKER. That motion would be in order if the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] will yield for that purpose.

Mr. MORRILL. I cannot yield for that purpose.

Mr. GARFIELD. Will the gentleman yield to me to offer a resolution?

Mr. MORRILL. I will.

DIRECT TAX IN INSURGENT STATES.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution for consideration at this time:

Resolved, That the President be respectfully requested to furnish to this House information as to the collection of the direct tax in the States lately in insurrection, what amount of the said tax has been collected in the several States, what amount of property is held by the Government under the sales authorized by law, and how much has been received from such sales.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EVENING SESSIONS.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that on and after to-day, until otherwise ordered, the House shall take a recess from half past four to half past seven o'clock p. m.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL] to modify his motion, so as to have evening sessions commence to-morrow.

Mr. MORRILL. I cannot do that. I am willing that the House shall decide the question.

Mr. GARFIELD. Then I move to amend the motion by striking out "to-day" and inserting "to-morrow."

The question was taken, and upon a division there were—ayes 47, noes 46.

Mr. SPALDING called for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

The amendment was accordingly agreed to.

The question recurred upon the motion of Mr. MORRILL as amended; and upon a division there were—ayes 61, noes 38.

Mr. WINDOM called for tellers.

Mr. SPALDING called for the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered, and the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The motion of Mr. MORRILL, as amended, was accordingly agreed to.

WHITEHALL, NEW YORK.

Mr. GRISWOLD, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to provide for making the town of Whitehall, New York, a port of delivery; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

NOTARIES PUBLIC FOR THE DISTRICT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the Senate:

IN SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
May 17, 1866.

Resolved, That the House of Representatives be requested to return to the Senate the bill (S. No. 305) to amend an act entitled "An act concerning notaries public for the District of Columbia," approved April 8, 1864.

Attest:

J. W. FORNEY,
Secretary.

The SPEAKER. This bill has been referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia. If there be no objection, the committee will be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it will be returned to the Senate as requested.

There was no objection.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

EMPLOYÉS IN EXECUTIVE MANSION.

Mr. SPALDING. I ask the gentleman from Vermont to yield to me a moment. I wish to call up a bill authorizing the President to appoint certain officers of his household. It should have been acted on some time ago.

Mr. MORRILL. I have no objection to yielding if the bill will not give rise to debate.

Mr. SPALDING. It will give rise to no discussion. If it should I will not press its consideration.

Mr. MORRILL. If it should cause debate I must insist on my motion.

Mr. SPALDING. With the consent of the gentleman, I move that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of House bill No. 211, entitled "A bill to authorize the President to appoint certain officers of his household, and fixing their salaries," and that the House proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill was read at length.

The first section provides that in addition to the officers of his household already authorized by law, the President of the United States be authorized to employ one Assistant Secretary, and a number of clerks not exceeding four.

The second section enacts that the Private Secretary of the President be paid an annual salary of $4,000, the Assistant Secretary an annual salary of $3,000, and each one of said clerks an annual salary of 1,800.

The third section provides that the steward of the President's household shall receive an annual salary of $2,000, and said steward shall be held to a rigid accountability for the plate, furniture, and other public property under his charge in the President's House, during his continuance in office, and shall give a bond to the United States in such sum as the Secretary of the Interior shall deem sufficient, and to be approved by him, for the faithful discharge of his trust.

Mr. SPALDING. I offer the following amendments:

In section one, line six, after the word "Secretary" insert "one stenographer."

In section two, line four, after the word "dollars" insert "the stenographer an annual salary of $2,500."

Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I should like to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SPALDING] whether the stenographer's duty is to be to take down the President's speeches. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPALDING. I promised that there should be no debate on the bill. I will simply state that these respective officers are necessary for the President's household. An appropriation for these very officers has already been inserted in the general appropriation bill in the Senate. There is no doubt at all that these officers are all strictly necessary.

Mr. PRICE. Does not this bill increase the number of employés about the President's House beyond what it has ever been before?

Mr. SPALDING. Not at all.

Mr. PRICE. The bill states that these officers are to be "in addition to the officers of his household already authorized by law."

Mr. SPALDING. These officers are now detailed from the Treasury Department and the War Department because the President has not the power to appoint them. This bill is designed to supersede the necessity of having officers detailed from these Departments.

Mr. PRICE. I think that the House is not prepared to vote on this bill without some discussion and a little more information than we now have. I will move to refer the bill—

Mr. SPALDING. I have demanded the previous question.

The SPEAKER. If the previous question should not be seconded, a motion to refer will be in order.

Mr. SPALDING. The bill has already been reported unanimously from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. STEVENS. For what is a stenographer wanted?

Mr. SPALDING. For short-hand writing.

Mr. STEVENS. For whom?

Mr. SPALDING. For the President.

Mr. STEVENS. I believe no provision of that kind was reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SPALDING. I withdraw my amendment, and demand the previous question on the bill as reported by the committee.

On seconding the previous question, there were—ayes 38, noes 31; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER, under the rule, ordered tellers; and appointed Messrs. SPALDING and PRICE.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 56, noes 44.

So the previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. SPALDING. I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. PRICE. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question being taken on the passage of the bill, it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 80, nays 28, not voting 75; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Ames, Ancona, Delos R. Ashley, Baldwin, Baxter, Bidwell, Blaine, Bundy, Chandler, Reader W. Clarke, Conkling, Cullom, Davis, Daves, Dawson, Defrees, Deming, Denison, Driggs, Dumont, Eckley, Eldridge, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Griswold, Hale, Aaron Harding, Abner C. Harding, Higby, Hogan, Holmes, Hooper, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, James M. Humphrey, Jenckes, Julian, Kerr, Ketcham, Kuykendall, Ladin, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Le Blond, Longyear, Lynch, McRuer, Moorhead, Morrill, Morris, Myers, Niblack, Nicholson, O'Neill, Patterson, Phelps, Pike, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Ritter, Rogers, Rollins, Ross, Scofield, Sitgreaves, Spalding, Stilwell, Taylor, Thayer, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Ward, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Whaley, Winfield, Woodbridge, and Wright—80.

NAYS—Messrs. James M. Ashley, Baker, Brandegee, Bromwell, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Henderson, Asahel W. Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, Kelley, Kelso, Loan, McClurg, McKee, Mercur, Paine, Perham, Plants, Price, Sawyer, Schenck, Sloan, Trowbridge, Upson, Williams, and Stephen F. Wilson—28.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Allison, Anderson, Banks, Barker, Beaman, Benjamin, Bergen, Bingham, Blow, Boutwell, Boyer, Broomall, Buckland, Coffroth, Culver, Darling, Delano, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Eggleston, Eliot, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Ferry, Finck, Garfield, Grider, Grinnell, Harris, Hart, Hayes, Hill, Hotchkiss, James R. Hubbell, James Humphrey, Ingersoll, Johnson, Jones, Kasson, Latham, Marshall, Marston, Marvin, McCullough, McIndoe, Miller, Moulton, Newell, Noel, Orth, Pomeroy, Radford, Raymond, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rousseau, Shanklin, Shellabarger, Smith, Starr, Stevens, Strouse, Taber, Thornton, Trimble, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Robert T. Van Horn, Warner, Elihu B. Washburn, Welker, Wentworth, James F. Wilson, and Windom—75.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to amend the bill by striking out the words "of his household" and inserting the words "of the Executive Mansion." Those words are, I think, inappropriate. I presume my colleague has no objection.

Mr. SPALDING. I have.

Mr. GARFIELD. I then move that amendment; and on that I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the motion to amend the title was agreed to.

The title, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. SPALDING moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed and the title amended; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 316) to establish a post route from West Alburg, Vermont, to Champlain, in the State of New York, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. No. 563) to regulate the time and fix the place for holding the circuit court of the United States in the district of Virginia, and for other purposes;

An act (S. No. 132) to prevent and punish kidnapping;

An act (H. R. No. 494) for the relief of Martha J. Willey;

An act (H. R. No. 460) granting a pension to Spencer Kellogg;

An act (H. R. No. 625) granting a pension to John Hoffman, of Madison county, in the State of New York;

An act (H. R. No. 386) for the relief Francis A. Gibbons;

An act (H. R. No. 434) for the relief of Isabella Strubing; and

An act (H. R. No. 445) for the relief of the legal representatives of Betsey Nash.

NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. DUMONT, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Banking and Currency be, and they are hereby, instructed to inquire into the expediency of repealing so much of the national banking act as requires a redemption of the circulating notes of said banks abroad.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. EDWARD COOPER, his Secretary, informing the House that he had approved and signed an act making appropriations for the services of the Post Office Department during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, and for other purposes.

A message in writing was also communicated.

STEAMER VANDERBILT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the President of the United States; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit to Congress a copy of the correspondence between the Secretary of State and Cornelius Vanderbilt, of New York, relative to the joint resolution of the 28th of January, 1864, upon the subject of the gift of the steamer Vanderbilt to the United States.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

WASHINGTON, May 16, 1866.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed, without amendment, an act (H. R. No. 510) to incorporate the Academy of Music of Washington city.

Also, that the Senate had passed a joint resolution (S. R. No. 52) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to change the name of the steamboat City of Richmond to City of Portland, and the schooner Lucinda Van Valkenburg to Camden, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

Also, an act (H. R. No. 255) making appropriations for the construction, preservation, and repairs of certain fortifications and other works of defense for the year ending June 30, 1857, with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

TAX BILL.

Mr. MORRILL moved that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. DAWES in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being a bill of the House (No. 513) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof.

The CHAIRMAN stated the question to be on the amendment offered on Friday last by Mr. WASHBURN, of Massachusetts, to strike out in line two thousand and two the words "and wooden-ware," on which tellers had been ordered.

The CHAIRMAN appointed Messrs. BRANDEGEE and NICHOLSON to act as tellers.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 33, noes 60.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. On page 89, line two thousand and two, I move to insert before the word "brooms" the words "pumps, garden engines, and hydraulic rams;" so that the paragraph will read:

On scales, pumps, garden engines, hydraulic rams, brooms, and wooden-ware, a tax of three per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. STEVENS. I suppose the gentleman does not intend to tax the common wooden pumps that are put into wells. I move to insert the word "metallic" before pumps.

Mr. MORRILL. I hardly think the amendment is necessary. The persons who manufacture wooden pumps seldom manufacture enough to be subject to any tax at all. It would be better, therefore, to leave the paragraph as it is. If you put in the word "metallic" it would include all sorts of pumps.

The question was taken on Mr. STEVENS's amendment to the amendment, and it was disagreed to.

The question recurred on Mr. MORRILL's amendment, and it was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On tin-ware of all descriptions, not otherwise provided for, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem: Provided, That in all cases in which such ware shall be delivered to agents or peddlers employed by the manufacturer for the disposal of the same, such ware so delivered shall be deemed to have been sold at the time of delivery, and the tax to be paid thereon shall be computed upon the value known to the trade as the five-pound rate or price for tin-ware.

On iron, not otherwise provided for, advanced beyond blooms, slabs, or loops, and not advanced beyond bars, and band, hoop, and sheet iron, not thinner than number eighteen wire gauge, and plate iron not less than one eighth of an inch in thickness, a tax of three dollars per ton: Provided, That a ton shall, for all the purposes of this act, be deemed and taken to be two thousand pounds.

Mr. MOORHEAD. In line two thousand and thirteen I move to insert before the word "blooms" the words "muck bar."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. In line two thousand and twelve I move to strike out the words "not otherwise provided for."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. In line two thousand and sixteen I move to strike out the word "three" and insert "two" in lieu thereof, so as to make the tax two dollars a ton.

Mr. MORRILL. I trust that amendment will not be adopted. I think the gentleman from New York and others ought to be satisfied with the rate here proposed upon iron, and not risk its being raised higher.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On band, hoop, and sheet iron, thinner than number eighteen wire gauge, plate iron, less than one eighth of an inch in thickness, and cut nails and spikes, not including nails, tacks, brads, or finishing nails, usually put up and sold in papers, whether in papers or otherwise, a tax of five dollars per ton: Provided, That rods, bands, hoops, sheets, plates, spikes, and nails, not including such as are usually put up in papers as before mentioned, manufactured from iron upon which the tax of three dollars has been levied and paid, shall be subject only to a tax of two dollars per ton in addition thereto, anything in this act to the contrary notwithstanding.

On stoves, and hollow ware in all conditions, whether rough, tinned, or enameled, and castings of iron, not otherwise provided for, a tax of three dollars per ton.

On tubes made of wrought iron, a tax of five dollars per ton.

Mr. ANCONA. I move to amend by striking out the clause:

On tubes made of wrought iron, a tax of five dollars per ton.

I suppose that this must have been a mistake, as I find by reference to the act as it now stands, items of the same class were included in the free list. I do not know why a discrimination should be made against this particular article, and I move to strike out that clause.

Mr. MORRILL. If you strike out this clause this article will be subject to a duty of five per cent. ad valorem. Five dollars per ton is much less. I hope the motion will not prevail.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. ANCONA. I move, then, to add at the end of the clause the following proviso:

Provided, That tubes made of wrought iron, upon which a tax of three dollars has been levied and paid, shall be subject only to a tax of two dollars per ton in addition thereto.

Mr. MORRILL. I must object to that proposition. A tax of five per cent. on tubes made of wrought iron is a very low tax, not exceeding half of what we impose on other manufactures. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. ANCONA. I move to amend my amendment by striking out the last word.

The chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means does not seem to present any reasons why this amendment should not be adopted. I find that some articles, such as hubs, nails, and spikes, under the same head in the law as it now stands, are relieved of this duplicate tax, and he has presented no reason why wrought-iron tubes should not be placed on the same footing. I trust my proviso will be adopted, and I now withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken on the amendment, in the nature of a proviso, and it was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On steam, locomotive, and marine engines, including the boilers, and all their parts, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem: Provided, That when such boilers or any other parts of engines, as aforesaid, shall have been once assessed, and a tax previously paid thereon, the amount so paid shall be deducted from the taxes on the finished engine.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend the proviso by striking out the words "such boilers or any other parts of" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "the boilers or tubes, wheels, tires, axles, bells, shafts, cranks, wrists, or headlights of such."

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] that by his amendment the portions of the engine not enumerated would be subject to the additional tax.

Mr. MORRILL. The Committee of Ways and Means have gone as far as it is possible in exempting particular parts and have the law properly executed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out the words "and all their parts" and the words "as aforesaid."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The members of the committee reporting the bill are first entitled to the floor to move amendments to perfect the bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to amend by inserting after the word "boilers," where it first occurs in the paragraph, the words "and on railroad cars."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to amend the proviso by inserting after the word "engines" the words "or cars," and also by inserting after the words "finished engine," the word "or car."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BALDWIN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] has moved the very amendments I desired to propose; and therefore I have none to move. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

On boilers of all kinds, water tanks, sugar tanks, oil stills, sewing-machines, lathes, tools, planes, planing-machines, shafting and gearing, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

On iron railings, gates, fences, furniture, and statuary, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out the word "iron" before the word "railings," and also to insert the words "made of iron" after the word "statuary."

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On copper and brass tubes, nails, or rivets, sheet lead, and lead pipes and shot, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

On goat, calf, kid, sheep, horse, hog, and dog skins, tanned or dressed in the rough, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

On goat, calf, kid, sheep, horse, hog, and dog skins, curried or finished, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem: Provided, That all goat, calf, kid, sheep, horse, hog, and dog skins previously assessed in the rough, and upon which taxes have been actually paid, shall be assessed on the increased value only when curried or finished.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend by striking out the words "previously assessed in the rough" and inserting after the words "upon which taxes" the words "or duties."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On patent, enameled, and japanned leather and skins of every description, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem: Provided, That when a tax has been paid on the leather in the rough, the tax shall be assessed and paid only on the increased value.

Mr. DAVIS. I suggest to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] that the words "or duty" should be inserted after the word "tax," as in the preceding paragraph.

Mr. MORRILL. The gentleman is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On oil-dressed leather, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

On leather of all descriptions, tanned or partially tanned, in the rough, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

On leather of all descriptions, curried or finished, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem: Provided, That all leather previously assessed in the rough and upon which duties have been actually paid, shall be assessed on the increased value only when curried or finished.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

On wine made of grapes, a tax of five cents per gallon.

Mr. STEVENS. I move to strike out this paragraph.

Mr. MORRILL. Before the question is taken upon that motion, I desire to move to perfect the paragraph by inserting after the word "wine" the words "further advanced than juice or must."

Mr. McRUER. I desire to oppose that amendment.

Mr. STEVENS. Is it not better to strike out the whole paragraph?

Mr. McRUER. I am willing to have that done.

The motion of Mr. MORRILL was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to further amend by adding the following proviso:

Provided, That grape juice, or must, when sold immediately from the vineyard to vintners, shall not be taxed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The question recurred upon the motion of Mr. STEVENS to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. STEVENS. This is one of those agricultural products which I think it is the interest of this country to encourage. It may become a very ruling interest in some of our States, especially in California and other States, but it requires some encouragement. We get but a small amount of revenue from this tax, I believe some thirty-four thousand dollars only. And yet this tax is quite an annoyance to that interest, and I hope, therefore, this paragraph will be stricken out, and allow these producers to go on for the present at least without any tax until they get a foothold.

From what I have heard and read there is no country in the world better calculated for the production of grapes and wine than the country upon the Pacific coast. And if we give this interest the proper encouragement I look for our native productions of wines to take the place of those of Italy, France, and Madeira. I hope, therefore, that for the present we will not put our heavy hand upon this infant lest it should become deformed.

Mr. MORRILL. I trust the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] will not prevail. I think the amendments the committee have already adopted will remove all the just or legitimate complaints of vine-growers in this country. We have provided that wine shall not be taxed until it passes from the hands of the grape-growers, if they sell it in the form of juice or must. If it shall be sold when it reaches the stage when it is called wine, or when it has passed from the condition of juice or must it is to be taxed. Certainly there is no article upon which we can more properly levy a tax. We are giving this interest a great amount of encouragement. We are levying extraordinary duties upon the sale of beer, and upon spirits of all descriptions, and I am perfectly willing, for one, that we shall levy such import duties as shall give the growers of grapes and manufacturers of wines any amount of encouragement in the home market for the sale of their products. But it does seem to me that, when we levy a tax of fifty cents or a dollar upon a gallon of foreign wine, this small pittance of five cents a gallon can be legitimately and properly borne by the makers of wine in our own country. I think, Mr. Chairman, that we have met in the proposition as it now stands all just complaints on this subject; and I may say that we have no complaints whatever except from California. In Ohio, a State producing probably half as much wine as California, no objection is made even to the existing form of the tax. There are others of the western States which, I suppose, are destined to become large producers of wines from grapes.

Now, sir, it strikes me that there are no men who can be more properly subjected to a tax than those who buy this juice and must, and manufacture it, selling the wine for the high prices which we know they demand and obtain throughout the country. I know that the wines made in California and in other parts of our own country are very pure, and are much more desirable in many respects than foreign wines now introduced into the country at a low rate upon an ad valorem duty. For one, I am willing to give our native wine all the protection that it requires; but in order that we may do so, I trust that no gentleman will come here and claim that this article should be entirely exempt from bearing any of our present great burden of taxation.

To be sure, we received last year only about thirty-four thousand dollars from this source. But I suppose that the receipts of the Treasury this year from this source will be very largely increased. I have no doubt that this year the amount will be at least double the sum received last year; and I expect that within a year or two a very large revenue will be derived from this source. I think we should not now set the precedent that wine manufactured in this country shall be entirely exempt from tax so long as we impose a heavy tax upon all other liquors and beverages.

Mr. BIDWELL. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. No gentleman upon this floor is more anxious than I am to see our taxation fall upon precisely those articles which can best bear it. On this subject I can only speak in regard to California. Understanding well, as I think I do, the condition of the wine-growing interest upon that coast, I can say that the smallest tax that you can impose upon the wine-growing interest in California would be burdensome, for the reason that that interest has not yet attained a self-sustaining position. Those in possession of vineyards most advanced, those who are manufacturing wines upon the largest scale, are not doing it at a profit upon their investments. The reason is plain. They have to contend there against many expenses which are not encountered in other sections of the country. In the first place, the cost of labor is much higher. All materials out of which are made the casks in which to keep this wine must be imported from this side of the continent. It will not do to put the wines into old casks, for wines spoil very quickly. When a cask has been used for other liquors, it is almost impossible to purify it sufficiently to make it fit to keep wine in.

Besides, it is impossible to draw the line of distinction between the condition of the grape juice in the form of must and the condition in which you would call it wine. When it is first expressed, it is grape juice or must, after it is perfectly fermented it ceases to be must. But when does that fermentation cease? With some kinds of wine it may cease in two years; with other kinds it may not cease in five years. So long as the wine contains impurities which continue to be fermented and it requires to be racked off and the cask purified, it is liable to spoil upon your hands. It is not a wine that you can pronounce a merchantable article, and which should be taxed.

Let me make one further remark. Vineyards in California are even now only in their infancy. When a vineyard is planted, from four to ten years must elapse before it even pays expenses, much less produces any profit. Hence the smallest tax which you may put upon that interest must be onerous. In California last year some seventeen thousand dollars of tax was collected. Now, there are some five or six revenue districts in that State, and the collection of the revenue must require in each district perhaps two persons, each at a salary of not less than $1,000 per annum. Hence the revenue collected scarcely exceeded the cost of collecting it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MORRILL. I will merely say, Mr. Chairman, that we have by our legislation largely increased the price of all descriptions of domestic wines, and it appears to me no more than fair that the Government should derive some revenue from what is produced here at home. I am not convinced that the prosecution of this business throughout the country is not one of the most profitable that can be engaged in.

Mr. BIDWELL. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HIGBY. I renew it. I wish to draw the attention of the chairman of the committee and of members of the House to a portion of this bill. It is true we have not yet reached it, but I have no doubt the chairman of the committee and others will press its adoption with the same tenacity that they have shown in regard to so large a portion of this bill. On page 164 of the bill I find this provision:

That on all wines, liquors, or compounds known or denominated as wine, made in imitation of sparkling wine or champagne, and put up in bottles under the label, name, designation, or similitude of any imported wine, or wine of foreign growth or manufacture, or with the appearance or pretense of being imported wine, or wine of foreign growth or manufacture, there shall be levied and paid a tax of six dollars per dozen bottles, each bottle containing more than one pint, or three dollars per dozen bottles, each bottle containing not more than one pint.

I suppose it is a well-known fact that there are no wines raised in this country but what are classed or classified as mentioned in this section, which I believe is an addition to the original law upon this subject, and no doubt it is intended to be a tax and would be a very heavy tax on all wines that are raised in this country. I am looking to the action of this House with regard to that section. Probably it will be adopted. If it is, it will certainly be a very heavy burden upon the culture of the grape and making of wine in this country.

It is a well-known fact in the State of California that grape juice in its first stage is a very cheap article, selling at from twenty-five to thirty-five cents per gallon by thousands and thousands of gallons. The small jobbers are those who will have to bear this burden of five cents a gallon. It takes time to become valuable. One year adds to the value of the wine one or two hundred per cent.; two years doubles it, and so on. The man who has money can purchase at great advantage because the tax, amounts to nothing against capital invested for a number of years. But the small men are to be burdened and distressed by that little tax whereas the provision on page 164 is the one that will come upon the capitalist.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to correct the gentleman from California so far as to say that the wines provided for on page 164 are not wines made from grapes at all. They are merely wines manufactured in the cities from a small portion of spirits, sugar, and some other articles. If the gentleman will notice the commencement of the section he will see that it refers solely to imitation wines. It does not include the real wines that we are considering at all.

Mr. HIGBY. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I move to strike out "five" and insert "ten;" so that it will read: "on wine made of grapes, a tax of ten cents per gallon."

We all desire to get this bill into a shape in which each product of the country will render its just tribute of taxation. Now, I think there is no one product which pays better for the amount of capital and labor invested than does the article of grape wine. It is not an absolute necessity. It is a luxury; and the theory upon which this bill, to some extent, proceeds is, that it is not our policy to tax sources of productive industry except so far as they produce luxuries. This is one of the luxuries which will bear more, I think, than five cents tax per gallon. We tax leather five per cent., candles five per cent., and many other articles the same. We tax wooden screws which enter into the manufacture of a great many other articles, five and ten per cent.; and we tax matches one cent a box, while we propose by this provision to tax this article of luxury, indulged in as a general rule only by the wealthy, a thing not essential to life or to comfort, five cents a gallon. That is less than one cent a bottle. We propose to tax wine one cent a bottle, while we tax matches one cent a box.

Now, sir, I am perfectly willing, when the tariff bill shall come up, to impose such a duty upon foreign wines as will give to our home manufacturers command of the home market. But I am unwilling that this article of luxury should escape with less than ten cents tax on each gallon manufactured in this country. There is no article that can endure a tax better. It is a mere article of luxury; and the theory of this bill is that luxuries should be required to pay large revenues to the country. I hope my amendment will prevail.

Mr. SPALDING. I rise to oppose this amendment. I represent a district which is very considerably interested in the production of wine. But my constituents are entirely willing to bear their share of this internal tax levied upon wine or other articles, provided the people may not be distressed thereby. There are certain articles of prime necessity in regard to which the taxes should be light; but so far as regards this duty of five cents a gallon upon our native wine I have no objection, so far as our producers are concerned, to its imposition. I object, however, to the amendment offered by my colleague to raise it to ten cents. I agree with the committee as regards the rate imposed.

Mr. McRUER. I move pro forma to insert seven instead of ten cents. It is with some reluctance that I rise to say that I am in favor of striking out the tax proposed in this bill, which applies particularly to my own State. I probably have the honor to represent the largest wine-growing district in the country, and I desire to say that I have no intention nor desire to relieve my district from its fair share of public burden. I consider it not only a duty, but a privilege, for them to bear what is justly imposed upon them.

Mr. Chairman, the production of California wine is an exception to all other agricultural pursuits in this country. Perhaps it is not generally known that a person who plants a vineyard has to wait patiently for five long years before he can get the first remunerative profit on the culture of grapes. It is entirely different from all other agricultural pursuits, where in a few months you can realize on your products. The wine-grower has to wait many years, and this, in a country where capital and labor are very high and where wine-growing is in its infancy, is an important consideration. Though our soil is admirably adapted to the cultivation of the grape, it does not necessarily follow that we can make as good wine as is made in Europe. It is yet an experimental thing, and must often result in failure.

It may not be generally known that what is termed wine in California, the product of the grape that has undergone the process of fermentation and is recognized as wine, although technically it might be known as something else, sells there for about thirty cents a gallon. That is about the current price that the manufacturer of that wine realizes for the raw product. The present expense of package in order to transport it to market is, this last year, ten cents a gallon. The average cost in placing it in market at San Francisco, for export or consumption, is almost equal to the cost of bringing it from France. And although this is an interest that we think very highly of and desire to cultivate, and which the State of California exempts from all taxation, still it is a fact that the people who have cultivated the grape there for the last five or ten years have not made it a profitable investment.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KELLEY. I rise to oppose the amendment. I consider ten cents to be an inordinate tax on this article. Indeed, I think wine should have had no tax upon it. I understand a tax of five cents a gallon is equivalent to a tax of fifteen or twenty per cent. upon the article. That is a higher rate than we have proposed on most other products.

Gentlemen say it is an article of luxury. It ought not to be an article of luxury, and if we look to the health and temperance of our people we will not treat it as a matter of luxury. Could our home-grown wines abound so that all our people could drink them, as they do in France and Germany, we would present in our morals a blessed contrast to our present condition. Wherever wine is cheap—pure native wine—the people are temperate. It enters into their daily use. Wherever it is dear, as in England and Scotland, intemperance marks in an important degree the life of the lower orders of the people.

This is a new branch of industry. Its machinery, its customs, are not yet established. I would take the whole tax off until we shall have vineyards in every part of the country and our manufacturers shall be so skilled in the production of wine that we will say in this country, as they do in France when they want to indicate the extreme poverty of a laboring man, "Why he is so poor that he does not drink wine for his dinner." We make a great mistake when we impose any tax on a new branch of industry that connects itself in so important a way as this does at once with the sanitary condition of the people, and with their morals. Sir, the American people are more afflicted with that terrible disease dyspepsia than any other; and why? Because almost every other people on the face of the globe, at least within the bounds of Christendom, indulge in acid wines, and they are cheap. Instead of that, here such wine is a luxury. It is continually prescribed to the rich dyspeptic, while the poor laboring man on the shoe-maker's or tailor's seat cannot get the specific, because it is so expensive. I would cheapen it by removing all taxation from it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. McRUER. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. CLARKE, of Ohio. I move to strike out "ten" and insert "three."

The gentlemen who have spoken in regard to this tax seem to assume that this is an article produced without any expense. Now, sir, there is no article produced from the ground that costs more money in producing it than wine does. Almost everything used by the producer of the grape requires the expenditure of money. Nor is that all. There is no business so precarious as this in the region of country where I reside, which is the wine region of Ohio. The crop is by no means a certain one. In two out of five seasons the grape cultivator may expect a failure.

Now, if you wish to tax the cultivation of this article out of existence a proposition to tax it five or ten cents a gallon is well enough. But if it is to be encouraged, as it ought to be, especially on the grounds suggested by my friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] then such a tax is manifestly excessive.

This is one of the most important interests in my section of country. In some portions of it we can raise nothing else. We go upon the hill-sides and make them contribute to the industry of the country. The amendment moved by the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means taxing this article while in the condition of must at five cents per gallon, really amounts to ten cents, for every run after it passes the press it is losing and wasting, and when ready for the market in the character of wine it has lost one half of the capacity it had when taken from the press. I ask gentlemen to consider these facts.

Mr. WRIGHT. It is the first duty of the Congress of the United States to provide a system of taxation that will enable us to pay the interest upon the national debt, and to fund a certain portion to meet the principal of that debt upon some future occasion.

A proposition is made here to tax native wines, and I desire to call the attention of the House to this consideration. You are well aware that the introduction of lager beer into this country has done a world of good in aid of the temperance societies of the nation. We are manufacturing wines in this country, and intend at no distant day to manufacture them so cheaply that they may be a substitute for whisky, to the end that there may be a greater degree of sobriety among the people, while the masses of the people may enjoy their creature comforts.

Now, what is the effect of this bill? The gentlemen of wealth can afford to pay the duty imposed, for after all the tax comes out of the pocket of the consumer. If you impose a tax upon these native wines it of course has to come out of the consumer. Where are you then? You are denying the masses of the people those beverages in which you indulge yourself. In this remark I am not to be understood as speaking personally. You first put a duty on foreign wines, and raise the price of them so high that no poor man can enjoy them, and then, when you come to our native wines, that should be enjoyed by the masses of the people, as if to punish them for desiring to enjoy these luxuries, you propose to put on them also.

I have no desire to occupy the time of the House. I only desire to say that by taxing the people on all sides, and then taxing the man who has an income, you are putting on too heavy a burden for the country to bear.

I have no interest in this matter, except to call the attention of the House to it.

Mr. CLARKE, of Ohio. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. I renew the amendment, pro forma, for the purpose of saying this: that after we have proposed a tax of two dollars per gallon on whisky, such as is consumed by the laboring men, the men who get out the coal and make the iron, and then come to an article that is consumed only by gentlemen who can afford to pay a tax, I think our law would not look very well if we should make such a luxury free. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of terminating debate on this paragraph.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DAWES reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being bill of the House No. 513, to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof, and had to come to no resolution thereon.

CLOSE OF DEBATE.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that when the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union shall resume the consideration of House bill No. 513, all debate upon the pending paragraph and the amendments thereto terminate in three minutes.

Mr. BIDWELL. I suggest to the gentleman that he make it ten minutes.

Mr. MORRILL. To accommodate the gentleman from California I will modify my motion, and say eight minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

TAX BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. DAWES in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being a bill of the House (No. 513) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof.

Mr. MORRILL. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. BIDWELL. I renew it. I feel persuaded that if the true condition of the wine-producing interest of California could be understood by this House no tax would be imposed upon it, unless it was done with the purpose of crushing that interest. After wine is made in California you then have to transport it seventeen thousand miles around Cape Horn in order to find a market. You have to pass twice through the tropics, during which time the wine is liable to spoil on your hands. You have to pay interest and insurance upon the risks of the ocean, all of which accumulates immensely the expense.

I have already said that even the smallest tax would be a burden. It takes fourteen pounds of grapes to make a gallon of wine. Those grapes at the vineyard where they are raised are worth perhaps a cent a pound. When you have expressed the juice it is worth from twenty to thirty cents a gallon, including all the cost of labor.

But that is not the cost of the wine. The labor upon it, the cask in which you have to put it, the cost of transporting it to San Francisco, a distance of four or five or six hundred miles oftentimes in California, in many cases where there are no railroads; all these things enhance the cost. And taking everything into consideration, labor, transportation, &c., you cannot produce wine in California for less than from ninety cents to $1 25 a gallon. Now, if Congress wishes to crush this interest then impose this tax. Five cents a gallon, as low as it appears, is one third of the value, after deducting the cost of labor, &c. I think that we ought rather to encourage this interest in order to do away with strong drinks and substitute for them a beverage pure, healthful, and invigorating. I am not a wine drinker myself, nor am I an advocate for wine drinking. But if you will foster this interest upon the Pacific coast in a short time we will be able to produce all the raisins and all the wine and all the brandy that will be required in the United States or upon the American continent. But put your tax upon it at this time and you will crush it in its infancy just as it is struggling into existence.

I hope that the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] will prevail, and that this paragraph will be stricken out. The entire amount of tax upon wine collected in the United States during the past year, I understand, was but a little over thirty-four thousand dollars. Now, is it worth while to crush out an interest that may become one of the first interests of this country for such a small sum as that? I really think not; and I hope, therefore, this paragraph will be stricken out.

Mr. PRICE. We started out upon the proposition that we are to tax luxuries in this bill. I suppose no one will object to that proposition. It is admitted on all sides that our taxes ought to be levied mainly upon the luxuries of the country. If wine is not a luxury, then we do not want to tax it. But if, as has been supposed heretofore in the history of this country, wine is among the luxuries of the country, then we want to tax it.

Now, if I had not thought it would have been a work of supererogation, I would have moved to increase this tax to twenty-five cents a gallon. You have imposed a tax of two dollars a gallon on whisky; yet wine will make a person as drunk as whisky will, though it may require a little more of it perhaps. But I am told by those who have tried it that being drunk on wine is the meanest kind of drunkenness. I speak from information only, for I have never had any experience in that matter.

But the most singular argument used upon this floor to-day is the argument of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] calling the attention of the House to the morality of France, which he says is to be directly traced to their habit of wine drinking, and my friend from California [Mr. BIDWELL] indorsed the proposition. Now, in all my reading and experience, this is the first time in my life that I have ever heard France held up as an especial example of morality. Now, I am willing to make a compromise with those gentlemen. If they can show that France is a more moral country than this because they drink more wine and less water there, then I will be willing to strike this out; provided they will agree that if the morality of France is not equal to the morality of this country they will agree to put a tax of twenty-five cents a gallon on wine.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. PRICE. I cannot yield now out of three minutes, of course. But I will meet the gentleman any evening and talk over the matter with him for an hour.

Mr. THAYER. Over a bottle. [Laughter.]

Mr. PRICE. A bottle of water. Now what does this bill propose to do? You propose to put a tax of two dollars a gallon on whisky, the beverage the poor man exercises the privilege of getting drunk on, and only five cents a gallon on wine, the beverage the rich man exercises his privilege of getting drunk on. I would like to know how much tax on a drink of wine that is. I know of no system of arithmetic by which you could tell what it would amount to.

Now, I think wine can bear a tax of twenty-five cents a gallon, or even fifty cents a gallon, just as well as whisky can bear a tax of two dollars a gallon. And I am not certain but it can bear a tax of two dollars a gallon as well as whisky can.

The question was upon the amendment of Mr. CLARKE, of Ohio, to the amendment of Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, to strike out "ten" and insert "three," making the tax upon wine three cents a gallon.

The amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon the amendment of Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, to strike out "five" and insert "ten," so as to make the tax upon wine ten cents a gallon.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The question was upon the motion of Mr. STEVENS to strike out the paragraph as amended.

Mr. MORRILL. I will ask the Clerk to read the paragraph as amended, so that members may understand it.

The Clerk again read the paragraph as amended, as follows:

On wine made of grapes further advanced than juice or must, a tax of five cents per gallon: Provided, That grape juice or must when sold immediately from the vineyard to vintners shall not be taxed.

Mr. STEVENS. I ask for tellers on my motion to strike out this paragraph.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. PRICE and KELLEY were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 40, noes 54.

So the motion to strike out the paragraph was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On all other wines or liquors known or denominated as wine, not made from currants, rhubarb, or berries, produced by being rectified or mixed with other spirits, or into which any matter whatever may be infused to be sold as wine, or by any other name, and not otherwise provided for in this act, a tax of fifty cents per gallon: Provided, That the return, assessment, collection, and the time of collection of the duties on such wines, and wine made of grapes, shall be subject to the regulations of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. And any person who shall willingly and knowingly sell or offer for sale any such wine made after the passage of this act, upon which the tax herein imposed has not been paid, or which has been fraudulently evaded, shall, upon conviction thereof, be subject to a penalty of $100 or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, at the discretion of the court.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend this paragraph by striking out the words "other wines or" in the first line, and inserting the word "grapes" before the word "currants" in the next line.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend the paragraph near the close by striking out the word "penalty" and inserting the word "fine."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I move to amend this paragraph by making the tax one dollar a gallon instead of fifty cents a gallon, as it now reads. And I desire to say a few words upon that amendment.

It will be seen that this paragraph proposes to levy a tax upon "liquors known or denominated as wines" which are not manufactured from grapes, currants, rhubarb, or berries. It is, in other words, a tax upon that description of liquors denominated wines which are mere compounds, mere villainous compounds, generally a fraud upon the public, and a fraud upon all who drink them. We ought not to encourage the production of that kind of liquor. I hope, at least, that this paragraph will be so amended as to levy a tax of one dollar a gallon instead of a tax of fifty cents a gallon.

Now, it seems to me that the only objection that can be urged to this amendment is that it may be exceedingly difficult to collect so heavy a tax as one dollar a gallon on this kind of liquor. The law will, undoubtedly, be evaded to some extent. But wherever it is possible to collect the tax of fifty cents a gallon, it seems to me it will be equally possible to collect a tax of one dollar a gallon. In the hands of vigilant and faithful officers the tax will be collected. And as well for the purpose of revenue as for the purpose of discouraging the manufacture of this kind of liquor, I hope this amendment will prevail.

Mr. MORRILL. I trust this amendment will not prevail, because we propose to derive some revenue under this provision. If the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] should prevail, this provision will prove utterly nugatory as an enactment, for we shall not collect a single dollar under it.

All that parties have to do, in order to make these wines, is to obtain the receipts, which every gentleman here has doubtless seen in temperance tracts and papers. Any business man who has whisky can make these wines, because the other materials are easily procured. They are easily mixed and easily rectified. The process requires no machinery, and the fact is easily concealed. We already tax the article of chief cost, in the form of whisky or spirits, a heavy percentage—two dollars a gallon. Now, if the committee is in favor of collecting any revenue at all upon this article, I hope the amendment as now proposed will not prevail.

I am as ready as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] to concede that these are villainous compounds. But I know that at the present time, instead of being made in this country, they are made abroad. Parties have moved their establishments into foreign countries where they can obtain whisky or alcohol at a much less price, and where they can manufacture these cheap wines and send them here at a less price than the duty which the gentleman proposes to place in the internal revenue bill. For instance, our tariff law imposes upon wines worth fifty cents or less a gallon a duty of twenty-five cents a gallon and twenty per cent. ad valorem. These wines can, therefore, be made abroad, and pay the duty here, and then be sold for less than a dollar per gallon. These articles can be manufactured in France or in Germany, and sent here at less than a dollar a gallon.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. We can provide for all that by a new tariff.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on this amendment.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to amend by striking out "one" in line two thousand and ninety-two and inserting in lieu thereof the word "five," so that the clause will read:

Shall, upon conviction thereof, be subject to a penalty of $500 or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, at the discretion of the court.

I will state my reason for offering this amendment. I see that the term of imprisonment authorized under this section is two years. Now, if the fine were increased to $500, I think that the court would in most cases impose the fine rather than the imprisonment; and I believe it would be wiser.

Mr. MORRILL. I see no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On cloth and all textile or knitted or felted articles or fabrics of cotton, wool, or other materials, before the same has been dyed, printed, or bleached, and on all cloth painted, enameled, shirred, tarred, varnished, or oiled, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

On thread, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend by inserting after the word "thread" the words "and twine."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On articles of clothing manufactured or produced for sale by weaving, knitting, or felting; on hats, bonnets, and hoop-skirts; on articles manufactured or produced for sale as constituent parts of clothing, or for trimming or ornamenting the same, and on articles of wearing apparel manufactured or produced for sale from India rubber, gutta-percha, or paper, or from fur, or fur skins dressed with the fur on, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend by striking out in line twenty-one hundred and six the words "or paper."

Mr. GARFIELD. When the Committee of Ways and Means agreed to recommend this amendment, the facts relating to the matter were not as fully stated, I believe, as they should have been, or the amendment would not have been recommended. The object in striking out the words "or paper" was to exempt paper collars from this ad valorem tax of five per cent. Since the action of the committee on this subject, I have learned that paper collars are manufactured by one very large establishment which has a monopoly of the manufacture, and there are very few things in the whole country that can bear the burden of a tax better than a manufacture of that sort. I think, therefore, that the amendment should not be agreed to. The object of the committee, in agreeing to present the amendment, was to help the manufacturers of paper collars; but I believe the amendment would not have been recommended had the committee known that these collars are manufactured by a monopoly that has the control of this entire business.

Mr. LAFLIN. The fact, as I understand, is not, as the gentleman asserts, that the manufacture of paper collars has become a monopoly. The truth, as I understand, is that there are two or three or perhaps seven or eight concerns that claim to possess exclusively a certain patent for the manufacture of paper collars. Forty or fifty other establishments, representing a very large interest, are acting against those concerns. The competition has reached such a point that it is now almost within the power of this monopoly to destroy the other establishments. It is the interest of this combination or monopoly that this tax should be levied, since it would give them the power to crush all competition.

Mr. MORRILL. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I move to amend by striking out in lines two hundred and one and two hundred and two, the words, "hats, bonnets, and." I make this motion that I may move hereafter to insert these articles in the paragraph with ready-made clothing, gloves, mittens, &c., which are subjected to a tax of one per cent.

Mr. MORRILL. I feel compelled to oppose this amendment; for if the tax on these articles should be reduced, or if they should be exempted, it will cause a very large reduction of the revenue. Every man wears a hat; every woman wears a bonnet. Of course, therefore, the amount of business in these articles is immense; and they are articles which can bear this tax as well as anything else. A hat that sells for ten dollars would not sell at any lower price, if we should take off the tax. Then there is a large and very profitable trade in braid and straw bonnets. If the tax on these should be reduced, it would largely diminish the revenue. I hope, therefore, that the amendment will not prevail.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On boots and shoes, a tax of two per cent. ad valorem, to be paid by every person making, manufacturing, or producing for sale boots and shoes, or furnishing the materials or any part thereof, and employing others to make, manufacture, or produce them: Provided, That any boot or shoe-maker making boots or shoes to order as custom work only, and not for general sale, and whose work, exclusive of the materials, does not exceed annually in value $1,000 shall be exempt from this tax.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out in line twenty-one hundred and sixteen the word "one" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "two;" so that the clause will read:

Provided, That any boot or shoe-maker making boots or shoes to order as custom work only, and not for general sale, and whose work, exclusive of the materials, does not exceed annually in value $2,000 shall be exempt from this tax.

The Committee of Ways and Means have very wisely, in my judgment, sought to exempt from taxation those shoe-makers who do a small amount of business. I think, however, they have not carried this exemption far enough. There are, I am informed, many of these people who do a business the work of which amounts to $1,500 or $2,000 annually. I hope, therefore, that the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means will assent to my amendment. Although it may seem a small matter, it is a very important matter to these small shoe-makers.

Mr. MORRILL. I cannot consent to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. If gentlemen will examine this paragraph they will find that this tax applies only to work, exclusive of all materials. A shoe-maker or boot-maker doing work for custom purposes solely must be a very diligent man if he makes more than $1,000 worth of work annually, exclusive of materials. Besides, the committee will observe that we have reduced the tax upon these articles from six per cent. to two per cent. Hence the amount of tax is very small under any circumstances. I trust the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. LE BLOND. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment, to strike out in line twenty-one hundred and eight the word "two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "five;" so that the clause will read:

On boots and shoes a tax of five per cent. ad valorem.

Also by striking out in line twenty-one hundred and fourteen to twenty-one hundred and sixteen, the following words:

And whose work, exclusive of the materials, does not exceed annually in value $1,000, shall be exempt from this tax.

This amendment will accomplish in part the same object which is sought by the gentleman from Pennsylvania in his motion. If "two" be stricken out and "five" inserted we shall adopt in this paragraph the same rate of taxation which is applied to manufacturers in the previous paragraph.

Then as to the second branch of my amendment, I will say that those who manufacture boots and shoes for customers alone, even in our small towns in the western country, certainly manufacture every year more than $1,000 worth of boots and shoes.

Mr. MORRILL. Not exclusive of material.

Mr. LE BLOND. I think so.

Mr. MORRILL. Oh, no!

Mr. LE BLOND. I think the work itself will amount to more than $1,000 even among the small shoe-makers throughout our country.

Certainly the shoe-makers are a class of persons who above all others ought to be exempt from any taxation. I hope that the entire paragraph will be stricken out. That will exempt the shoe-makers altogether.

The CHAIRMAN. Neither of the gentleman's amendments is germane to the amendment; and therefore neither is in order now.

Mr. MORRILL. I move pro forma to amend the amendment by inserting "$1,500" instead of "$2,000."

If the amendment proposed by either the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] or the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LE BLOND] prevails it would amount to a total exemption of the business of boot and shoe making. I suppose that the gentleman from Ohio may not be aware of the manner in which this business is done. Should his amendment prevail we should have no work but custom work. The men who are engaged in this business would employ every shoe-maker and boot-maker in the country to make their custom work to the full amount that they would be allowed to make under the law free of tax. The boss manufacturers would buy the work of their journeymen and we should get no revenue. Therefore I hope the amendment will be rejected and that the paragraph will be allowed to stand as it is.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I do not think my proposition is an unreasonable one at all. I want to exempt the man who does a moderate amount of business from all tax if I can. I want to relieve the men who do custom work as far as possible, the men who employ a few apprentices and perhaps two or three journeymen.

Mr. MORRILL. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. ALLEY. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania by inserting in the first line of the paragraph the word "one" instead of "two" as it now stands; so that it will read: "on boots and shoes a tax of one per cent."

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order. It is not germane to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. The gentleman may move to amend by striking out "$2,000" and inserting "$1,500."

Mr. ALLEY. No matter about the amendment. I intended to move, and shall do so at the proper time, the amendment I have indicated, making the tax one per cent. on boots and shoes instead of two. I think that will satisfy the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL.] I know it will satisfy those he represents. These parties have been to me from the several States and conferred with me on the subject, and I know what the feeling generally is in relation to this matter. I am in hopes that the committee will agree to that reduction. I think that the information that they have received must convince them that the reduction ought to be made.

I see no reason why this should be put at two per cent. It seems to me the same arguments that induced the committee to reduce the tax on clothing to one per cent. should have induced them to reduce this also to the same. And if they do, I think it will satisfy the gentlemen who represent the interest of these small manufacturers or small shoe-makers who feel that they are greatly oppressed by this tax.

And now one word why this should be done. In the first place, there is a tax upon the hides of ten per cent. Then there is a tax on leather, under this bill, of five per cent. Then there is an additional tax of five per cent. upon the increased value in the currying; and then all the other materials that go into the shoes that are imported pay a tax of from twenty-five to fifty per cent. Now, it seems to me that there really should be no tax upon boots and shoes since they are taxed in so many forms upon all the materials that are used. The boots that are manufactured in the country to-day are paying, in various forms, a tax of nearly twenty per cent. Under all these circumstances there should be a reduction of at least one per cent. That, I think, would be quite satisfactory to the small shoe-makers who work upon the bench and employ a few apprentices and perhaps two or three journeymen, as suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL.] If the gentleman will accept my amendment in lieu of his own, I think it will obviate the whole difficulty and satisfy the parties whose interest he represents.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I withdraw my amendment for the present, to see whether the gentleman's amendment prevails. Perhaps in the end I may be satisfied. If not I will ask the privilege of renewing mine.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of terminating debate. I shall only ask the committee to consider these paragraphs in reference to clothing and boots and shoes.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DAWES reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being bill of the House No. 513, to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof, and had come to no resolution thereon.

CLOSE OF DEBATE.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that all debate in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the pending paragraph of the special order terminate in one minute after the committee shall resume the consideration of the subject.

The motion was agreed to.

TAX BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. MORRILL moved that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. DAWES in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being a bill of the House (No. 513) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof.

Mr. MORRILL. All I have to say in relation to this matter is this: The Committee of Ways and Means are quite ready to admit that shoes and boots may be exempted with as much propriety as anything else, but we made as many reductions as we thought the Treasury at this time could possibly afford; and any reduction on these articles would make a very large difference. I do hope that the committee will allow these provisions to stand, as we reduce the amount of the tax from six per cent., as it now is, to two per cent., and that ought to satisfy all parties.

Mr. LE BLOND. I wish to ask the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means a question.

The CHAIRMAN. No debate is in order. The question was taken on Mr. ALLEY's amendment, and it was disagreed to.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I move, in line twenty-one hundred and sixteen, to strike out the word "one" and insert "two." The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. LE BLOND. I move to amend in line twenty-one hundred and eight by striking out the word "two" and inserting "five;" so that it will read: "on boots and shoes a tax of five per cent. ad valorem," &c.

I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means to this provision, and to inquire of him why a distinction is made between "clothing" and "boots and shoes."

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. MYERS. I move to insert after line twenty-one hundred and sixteen the following:

And where such work shall exceed annually in value $1,000, the tax of one per cent. shall be on the amount of work in excess of $1,000.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. In line twenty-one hundred and sixteen, I move to insert after the word "thousand" the words "five hundred;" so that the provision will read:

Provided, That any boot or shoe maker making boots or shoes to order as custom work only, and not for general sale, and whose work, exclusive of the materials, does not exceed annually in value $1,500, shall be exempt from this tax.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On ready-made clothing, gloves, mittens, moccasins, caps, and other articles of dress for the wear of men, women, and children, not otherwise assessed and taxed, a tax of one per cent. ad valorem, to be paid by every person making, manufacturing, or producing for sale clothing, gloves, mittens, moccasins, caps, and other articles of dress, or furnishing the materials or any part thereof, and employing others to make, manufacture, or produce them: Provided, That any tailor, or any maker of gloves, mittens, moccasins, caps, or other articles of dress to order as custom work only, and not for general sale, and whose work, exclusive of the materials, does not exceed annually in value $1,000, shall be exempt from this tax; and articles of dress made or trimmed by milliners or dress-makers for the wear of women or children shall also be exempt from this tax.

Mr. MYERS. I move to insert, in line twenty-one hundred and twenty-nine, after the words "one thousand," the following:

And where such work shall exceed annually in value $1,000, the said tax of one per cent. shall be on the amount of work in excess of $1,000.

I think if the House understood this amendment they would vote for it. I speak in reference to both these paragraphs—both the one in reference to boots and shoes, and that in reference to clothing. It was the intention that a certain amount should be exempted, but it will be noticed that as the provision now stands, if the amount of work done exceeds by one dollar the sum of $1,000, the shoe-maker or tailor will have the tax imposed upon him for his whole work and his whole material.

It is for the purpose of explaining more clearly what I think was the meaning of the committee that I offer this amendment. It provides, in other words, that material and work shall only be taxed over the amount which was intended to be exempted.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope that amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. MYERS. I move to amend my amendment by striking out the last word. I should like to hear some better reason from the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means than that he hopes this amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. MORRILL. The question has already been discussed sufficiently for every member of the committee to understand it, and if the gentleman is satisfied with his speech I am, and I do not like the task of discussing these matters over and over again.

Mr. MYERS. What I want to say is this: in many instances parties purchase materials for clothing and have it made up. And by this provision, without my amendment, if the work exceeds a thousand dollars, the tailor or boot-maker is charged not only for all his work under one thousand dollars, but also upon the articles that enter into that work; in many instances articles which he has not bought at all, but which have been bought by a third party and brought to him to be made up.

Mr. MORRILL. I find that it is necessary to say a few words. The gentleman cannot have read the paragraph. The amount taxed is to be exclusive of the material.

Mr. STEVENS. Do I understand that the $1,000 worth is to be absolutely exempt from taxation, or only when the amount is $1,000 or less? Suppose it shall amount to $1,005, is the whole $1,005 to be taxed, or only the excess over the $1,000?

Mr. MORRILL. Only the excess, according to an amendment that has already been adopted on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WILSON.]

Mr. STEVENS. I suppose the object of the committee is to exempt, at all events, the $1,000 for these small operators. But it seems to me that according to the language of this paragraph that the man who does $999 worth of work will be wholly exempt from the tax, while the man who does $1,001 worth will have to pay the tax on the whole $1,001. That cannot be the intention of the committee.

Mr. MYERS. If it exceeds $1,000, under the language of this provision, even the materials are taxed.

Mr. STEVENS. I am not attending to that point now, but I am referring to the fact that I suppose the intention was to exempt $1,000 in all cases and to tax the excess. But it seems to me this paragraph does not effect that object; for if the amount exceeds $1,000 the whole amount is taxed; if it does not exceed that amount it is not taxed at all.

The amendment of Mr. MYERS was not agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to strike out at the close of the paragraph the words "and articles of dress made or trimmed by milliners or dress-makers for the wear of women or children shall also be exempt from this tax." I do not understand why this exception should be made.

Mr. MORRILL. I will answer the gentleman, if he desires an answer. If the gentleman goes to a merchant and buys material for a dress, under the construction by the Internal Revenue Bureau of the law as it now exists, if he carries it to a dress-maker and has it made up, the dress-maker has not only to pay a tax on the work but upon the estimated value of the goods. This is to remedy that difficulty.

Mr. DAVIS. Suppose the dress-maker is herself the vender of the goods?

Mr. MORRILL. The tax is applied to the whole value of the goods, which we thought to be wrong.

Mr. DAVIS. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. HALE. I move to amend by striking out the last word for the purpose of inquiring of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] what is the correct understanding of this paragraph. As I read it now, it provides that if a tailor or maker of gloves, &c., manufactures work to order, and not for general sale, to the amount of $1,000 for the labor, exclusive of the material, he pays no tax. But if he manufactures any amount in excess of $1,000, exclusive of the material, he is then taxed, not only on the amount of his labor, the $1,000 as well as the surplus, but also on the material which he has made up. I can read the paragraph in no other way. I will ask the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means if that is the correct construction of this paragraph, and if it is, is it just?

Mr. ALLISON. I will say in reply to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HALE] that my colleague [Mr. WILSON] proposed an amendment to a former part of this bill, relating to section ninety-three of the present revenue law, which was adopted, by which all manufacturers are exempt from taxation to the amount of $1,000, and are taxed only upon the excess above $1,000 and to $3,000, and above $3,000 they are taxed on the whole amount; so that if a manufacturer manufactures only $3,000 worth, he is taxed only upon the excess over $1,000. And I see no reason why that provision does not apply to this paragraph as well as to all other paragraphs relating to manufactures. And I see no reason why large manufacturers who manufacture over $3,000, perhaps $100,000 or $1,000,000, should not pay the tax upon the first $1,000 as well as upon the rest.

Mr. MORRILL. I think there may be some difficulty in the law as it stands; but if the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa shall be adopted I will ask the committee or the House to go back to this section to make it conform to that amendment.

Mr. HALE. With that understanding, I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. STEVENS. I am not satisfied with this paragraph as it stands. I move to amend by inserting after the word "tax," in line twenty-one hundred and thirty, the words "and then only on the excess over $1,000."

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk began to read the next paragraph, beginning with line twenty-one hundred and thirty-three, when

Mr. MORRILL moved that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DAWES reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the special order, being bill of the House No. 513, to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof, and had come to no resolution thereon.

BUSINESS OF EVENING SESSIONS.

Mr. MORRILL. I suppose that it is the understanding of the House that the evening sessions to be held to-morrow evening and on subsequent evenings shall be devoted exclusively to the consideration of the tax bill. If that is not the understanding, I shall move to suspend the rules that such an order may be made.

The SPEAKER. Is there any objection to the understanding that the evening sessions shall be devoted exclusively to the consideration of the tax bill?

There was no objection.

PAY DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I move that the House proceed to the consideration of business on the Speaker's table.

The motion was agreed to.

The first business on the Speaker's table was Senate amendments to joint resolution (H. R. No. 130) to carry into immediate effect the act to provide for the better organization of the pay department of the Navy.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

First amendment:

Add the following as a new section:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to retain or to appoint under existing laws and regulations such volunteer officers in the Navy as the exigencies of the service may require until their places can be supplied by graduates from the Naval Academy.

The amendment was concurred in.

Second amendment:

Add the following as a new section:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That naval constructors shall hereafter be held to be staff officers in the Navy and entitled to all the rights and privileges and subject to all the liabilities and duties of such.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to reconsider the vote by which the first amendment of the Senate to this bill was concurred in. I desire some explanation of that amendment, for it seems to me a most singular provision. It proposes that certain volunteer officers may be retained or appointed to hold their positions until others shall be educated at the Naval Academy, who are then to step in and take their places.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. The gentleman from Ohio will not, I think, object to the amendment when he understands it.

Mr. SCHENCK. I shall be glad to hear it explained.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I will explain it. The fact is that the number of officers in the regular Navy is insufficient at present for the demands of the service. This amendment proposes simply that the Secretary of the Navy shall have authority to continue such volunteer officers in the naval service as the emergencies of the service may require until regular officers can be instructed by graduation from the Naval Academy. If all the volunteer officers were discharged to-day it would be impossible to carry on the naval service, there not being regular officers enough for that purpose. This provision is simply for the purpose of continuing temporarily these volunteer appointments.

Mr. SCHENCK. Then, if I understand the provision, it is this: that these volunteer officers—acting officers as they are called in the Navy—may, if they will accept such a tenure of office, be continued indefinitely by the Secretary of the Navy, to be turned adrift so soon as he shall have educated at the Naval Academy others to take their places.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. That has always been the tenure of office of these men.

Mr. SCHENCK. No, sir; not during the war.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. The gentleman from Ohio will recollect that a bill has already passed the House authorizing the transfer of a certain number of volunteer officers to the regular Navy. Those are to be transferred absolutely. It is not, however, considered desirable that every place in the Navy shall now be filled by the transfer of volunteer officers; but by the provision of the amendment a further portion of the volunteer officers may be employed in the Navy so long, and only so long, as the exigencies of the service require.

Mr. SCHENCK. I understand it is proposed by this amendment to say to the men who have served through the war, "You have helped us fight our battles; we will retain you beyond the time the law now provides, but you must not think that you are to be retained for any considerable length of time, or longer than one, two, three, four, or five years, until there shall have entered a sufficient number on the royal road to take your places, for then you shall be turned adrift. It will be too much for you to expect that you should be retained in the service any longer than till such time as we can raise a number of midshipmen at Annapolis to take your places." That is really the proposition as I understand it.

Now, sir, I think, at the close of the war, we ought to have a sufficient number of officers, either in the Army or Navy, who are qualified to fill the vacancies existing. But as to this mockery of taking a number of these officers with the understanding that they are to go with the Navy after having gone through the war, but are to be turned out whenever a new group can be raised at Annapolis, I protest against it.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I entirely agree with the gentleman. I have myself reported a bill from the Naval Committee authorizing the transfer of one hundred and fifty volunteer officers from the volunteer to the regular service in order to make up with the graduates of the Naval Academy the number of officers of the Navy which the law now requires. The fact is, that the present exigencies of the service require for a time a larger number of officers than the law allows, and the object of this amendment is, that so long as the exigencies of the services require more officers than the law allows to the regular service the Secretary of the Navy may be authorized to continue the appointments of these officers. I certainly have no objection, if the House sees fit to increase the number of officers in the regular Navy, to its being done. But that is a subject that cannot be attended to in the short time that we have to consider it at this time, and if it will meet the wishes of the gentleman from Ohio I will move to refer the bill to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SCHENCK. I should very much prefer that. The gentleman sees the very difficulty, and therefore has a bill prepared to authorize the taking of a number of these volunteer officers to fill these places. But in the mean time this bill also may have passed, which will defeat the gentleman's object if this amendment is concurred in.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I move to refer the bill to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The pending motion is to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senate was concurred in, but if there is no objection it will be considered as reconsidered and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

INTRODUCTION OF CHOLERA.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the consideration of the amendment of the Senate to joint resolution of the House No. 116, to prevent the introduction of cholera into the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PENSIONS.

The Senate amendments to the following bills were next taken from the Speaker's table, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

An act (H. R. No. 216) for the relief of Cordelia Murray;

An act (H. R. No. 459) granting a pension to Anna E. Ward;

An act (H. R. No. 462) granting a pension to Mrs. Sally Andrews;

An act (H. R. No. 493) granting a pension to Mrs. Joanna Winans;

An act (H. R. No. 345) for the relief of Christina Elder;

An act (H. R. No. 363) supplementary to the several acts relating to pensions; and

An act (H. R. No. 371) granting a pension to Leonard Sinclair.

PASSPORTS.

The bill of the House (H. R. No. 568) to repeal section twenty-three of chapter seventy-nine of the acts of the third session of the Thirty-Seventh Congress, returned from the Senate with an amendment, was next taken from the Speaker's table, and the amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

At the end of the bill add the following:
And hereafter passports shall be issued only to citizens of the United States.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. Let me ask if that means that persons who have declared their intention to become citizens shall not be entitled to passports.

The SPEAKER. Such persons are not now entitled by law to passports.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. I think that amendment had better be referred to a committee.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that the bill, with the amendment, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

BENJAMIN HOLLIDAY.

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 103) to refer the petition of Benjamin Holliday to the Court of Claims, returned from the Senate with an amendment, was next taken from the Speaker's table, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

GOODRICH AND CORNISH.

The joint resolution of the House (H. R. No. 77) for the relief of Ambrose L. Goodrich and Nathan Cornish for carrying the United States mails from Boise City to Idaho City, in the Territory of Idaho, returned from the Senate with amendments, was next taken from the Speaker's table, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

FORTIFICATION BILL.

The bill of the House (H. R. No. 255) making appropriations for the construction, preservation, and repair of certain fortifications and other works of defense for the year ending June 30, 1867, returned from the Senate with amendments, was next taken from the Speaker's table, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

The bill of the Senate (S. No. 318) to authorize the appointment of an additional Assistant Secretary of the Navy, was next taken from the Speaker's table, and read a first and second time.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I call the previous question on the passage of that bill.

Mr. ANCONA. You cannot pass it. I shall insist on a division, and there is no quorum here.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. Let me say a single word in reference to this bill. It is substantially the same bill which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs of this House a few days ago, which has been considered by that committee, and unanimously agreed to. I believe that this bill passed the Senate without any dissent whatsoever. It simply provides that there shall be, for six months, an Assistant Secretary of the Navy, who shall act during the absence of the present Assistant Secretary of the Navy, who is going abroad, there being no officer who, in the absence of the Secretary and of the Assistant Secretary, can attach the official signatures to papers. The gentleman who is going abroad has been in the service ever since the beginning of the war, and all that it is proposed to grant him is leave of absence equivalent to that granted to volunteer officers of the Navy when mustered out, so as to allow them one month's leave for every year's service they have rendered during the war. It is a very small amount. The Government are very anxious, indeed, that the bill shall pass, and I insist upon the demand for the previous question.

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania. Is there a quorum present?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there is not a quorum present.

Mr. ROSS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I hope not.

The SPEAKER. This bill will come up as unfinished business to-morrow morning immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. THAYER. I appeal to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Ross] to withdraw his motion to adjourn for a moment.

Mr. ROSS. I will do so.

MARIA SYPHAX.

On motion of Mr. THAYER, by unanimous consent, the bill of the Senate (S. No. 321) for the relief of Maria Syphax was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

And then, on motion of Mr. ROSS, (at five minutes to five o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented under the rule and referred to the appropriate committees:
By Mr. DAWES: The petition of M. B. Whitney, and 36 others, citizens of Westfield, Massachusetts, asking for protection against unjust State laws in reference to insurance.

By Mr. COOK: The petition of F. W. Mattheissere & Hegeler of La Salle, Illinois, for increase of protection to the manufacture of spelter and sheet zinc.

By Mr. GARFIELD: The petition of the superintendent, principals, and masters of the public schools of Boston, praying for the establishment of a national Bureau of Education.

By Mr. HULBURD: The petition of 93 citizens of Columbia county, New York, asking increase of duty on imported flax.

By Mr. HUBBARD, of West Virginia: The petition of Edgar T. Harris, asking that his name may be placed on the pension-list of the United States.

By Mr. McKEE: The petition of James Taylor, for services as surgeon in the United States Army.

By Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts: The petition of Davis Foster, lieutenant fourth Massachusetts volunteers, for reimbursement for loss of clothing by sinking of United States transport Fanning.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, May 22, 1866.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. H. GRAY.
The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 10th of January last, information relative to the payment of $100 bounty to the ten regiments of Missouri State militia mustered into the service of the United States; which, on motion of Mr. GRIMES, was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SUMNER. I present the petition of Abraham Lansing, a citizen of Cambridge, Massachusetts, asking for a pension on account of services in the war of 1812, and very peculiar injuries which he received, and from which he is now in his old age suffering. I move the reference of this petition to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNER. At the same time I move that the papers of Abraham Lansing, accompanying his petition for an invalid pension, presented in 1860, be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL presented twelve petitions of citizens of Maine, and a petition of Samuel Batchelder and other citizens of Massachusetts, praying for an appropriation to repair the United States piers and other property at Saco, Maine, and to improve the navigation of Saco river; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs and the Militia, to whom was referred a bill (S. No. 207) to provide for the equalization of the bounties to soldiers in the late war of rebellion, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report in writing; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. CHANDLER, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. No. 334) to prevent the wearing of sheath-knives by American seamen; which was read and passed to a second reading.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CHANDLER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 335) supplementary to the several acts relating to the establishment of the Treasury Department; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WILLIAMS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 336) granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Salt Lake City to the Columbia river; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

LIFE AND ACCIDENT INSURANCE COMPANY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business, the Chair will call up the unfinished business of yesterday, which is the bill (S. No. 290) to incorporate the National Life and Accident Insurance Company of the District of Columbia. The bill was read yesterday, and is now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to ask the Senator from Maine [Mr. MORRILL] who has charge of this bill, whether proper care is taken in regard to the paying in of the stock of this company. On reading the bill, it seems to me that care is not taken that the capital stock of the company shall be paid in. I think these corporations ought to be held responsible at any rate until the stock is paid in. The public ought to have that security. Provision is made for the payment of five dollars of the assessment, and then five dollars more at the end of thirty days; but it seems to me there is no subsequent provision requiring the stock to be paid up, and they are exempted from personal liability. In making these corporations, I think we ought to be very careful to make corporations with actual capital paid in. I throw out this as a suggestion to the Senator. It does seem to me that proper care is not taken that the capital stock subscribed for shall be paid up.

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator from Illinois, not now in his seat, [Mr. YATES,] reported this bill. It was referred to him for examination, and he reported that it was merely a transcript of a similar bill, incorporating a company of the same kind in the State of Maryland, at Baltimore; that the persons presenting this bill had followed that law. It was drawn, therefore, on the strength of that legislation.

Mr. CLARK. I suggest that of all corporations in the world a life insurance company should be thoroughly guarded and made secure to those people who are involved in it.

Mr. JOHNSON. I see here no security at all that the capital shall be paid up.

Mr. CLARK. Of all corporations, those of this character should be made thoroughly secure, because if a man puts his earnings in a corporation of this kind to be useful to his heirs in case of his death, he wants it to be made sure to those heirs.

Mr. MORRILL. As the Senator who reported this bill is not in his seat, I move that the further consideration of it be postponed until to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

HOMESTEADS IN SOUTHERN LAND STATES.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I move to take up House bill No. 85.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 85) for the disposals of the public lands for homestead actual settlement in the States of Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Florida.

It provides that hereafter all the public lands in the States of Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Florida shall be disposed of according to the stipulations of the homestead law of 20th May, 1862, entitled "An act to secure homesteads to actual settlers on the public domain," and the act supplemental thereto, approved 21st of March, 1864, but with this restriction, that no entry shall be made for more than a half quarter section, or eighty acres; and in lieu of the sum of ten dollars required to be paid, there shall be paid the sum of five dollars at the time of the issue of each patent; and that the public lands in those States shall be disposed of in no other manner after the passage of this act. No distinction or discrimination is to be made in the construction or execution of this act on account of race or color; and no mineral lands are to be liable to entry and settlement under its provisions.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Public Lands was to insert in line twenty, after the word "lands" in the proviso at the end of the bill, the words "or lands mainly valuable for timber and not suitable for cultivation;" so that the proviso will read:

And provided further, That no mineral lands or lands mainly valuable for timber and not suitable for cultivation shall be liable to entry and settlement under its provisions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment reported by the committee was to add as an additional section the following:

And be it further enacted, That the person applying for the benefit of this act shall, upon application to the register of the land office in which he or she is about to make such entry, make affidavit before the said register or receiver that he or she is the head of a family, or is twenty-one years or more of age, or shall have performed service in the Army or Navy of the United States, and that such application is made for his or her exclusive use and benefit, and that said entry is made for the purpose of actual settlement and cultivation, and not either directly or indirectly for the use or benefit of any other person or persons whomsoever; and upon filing the said affidavit with the register or receiver, and on payment of five dollars, he or she shall thereupon be permitted to enter the amount of land specified: Provided, however, That no certificate shall be given, or patent issued therefor, until the expiration of five years from the date of such entry; and if, at the expiration of such time or at any time within two years thereafter, the person making such entry, or if he be dead, his widow; or in case of her death, his heirs or devisee; or in case of a widow making such entry, her heirs or devisee, in case of her death, shall prove by two credible witnesses that he, she, or they have resided upon or cultivated the same for the term of five years immediately succeeding the time of filing the affidavit aforesaid, and shall make affidavit that no part of said land has been alienated, and that he will bear true allegiance to the Government of the United States; then, in such case, he, she, or they, if at the time a citizen of the United States, shall be entitled to a patent, as in other cases provided by law: And provided further, That in case of the death of both father and mother, leaving an infant child or children under twenty-one years of age, the right and fee shall inure to the benefit of said infant child or children; and the executor, administrator, or guardian may, at any time within two years after the death of the surviving parent, and in accordance with the laws of the State in which such children, for the time being, have their domicile, sell said land for the benefit of said infants, but for no other purpose; and the purchaser shall acquire the absolute title by the purchase, and be entitled to a patent from the United States on the payment of the office fees and sum of money herein specified.

Mr. POMEROY. I think it my duty, at any rate, to inform the Senate what this amendment is, and how it changes the old law. It changes the old law only in one respect, I think. The old law obliges the person availing himself of the benefit of the homestead act to take an oath that he has never been engaged in the rebellion. If this amendment shall be adopted and become the law, he will have to swear that he will bear, in the future, true allegiance to the Government of the United States. In other words, it allows poor men who have been engaged in the rebellion to get eighty acres of land of the public domain by taking an oath that they will hereafter bear true allegiance to the Government of the United States. That is the essential modification. He is to occupy and cultivate and have continued possession of the land for five years before receiving title to it. It was discussed for some time in committee, and it was the opinion of the committee, nearly unanimous, perhaps quite so, that no better provision could be made for poor men who had been engaged in the rebellion than to let them have eighty acres of land on the public domain, even though they take simply an oath that they will hereafter bear true and faithful allegiance to the Government of the United States. As the law now is, all who have been engaged in the rebellion are excluded from the public domain. The committee were of opinion that this amendment might be justified under the circumstances. I thought I ought to state that to the Senate, because this amendment repeals, in fact, so much of the old law as debarred the rebels from homestead settlement on the public domain.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert as an additional section the following:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That all the provisions of the said homestead law, and the act amendatory thereof, approved March 21, 1864, so far as the same may be applicable, except so far as the same are modified by the preceding sections of this act, are applied to and made part of this act as fully as if herein enacted and set forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENDRICKS. There was one point in which I could not agree with the committee, and that is, that in the States named in the bill no person shall be allowed to acquire under the homestead law more than eighty acres of land. I think that is unnecessary. I think the experience of the western country shows that one hundred and sixty acres of land is desirable to make a good farm upon, and I do not see any occasion for reducing the amount in these States below that allowed in other States to be acquired under the homestead law. I therefore move to amend the first section by striking out all after the word "sixty-four" in line ten down to and including the word "patent" in the fifteenth line, so that the party will be allowed to enter one hundred and sixty instead of eighty acres of land. My observation teaches me, and I think the Senator from Iowa, who has charge of this bill will agree, that farmers desire, as far as possible, to secure as much as one hundred and sixty acres of land.

I will remark to the Senate that by this bill the public lands in these southern States cannot be acquired in any other mode than under the homestead law. Farmers down there will not hereafter be able to buy any lands for their families and for their children, but the children will have to secure lands for themselves under the homestead law. I am not entirely sure that that is good policy, but certainly it is going too far to say that a man shall not in any event, for himself and his children, secure more than eighty acres. I do not think it tends to develop the prosperity of the country so to restrict the purchase. Under the law of the United States lands that are liable to private entry may be purchased at one entry to the extent of a section of land. This is a great reduction to go down to one hundred and sixty acres, but to say that only eighty acres shall be purchased under the homestead law is going entirely too far, I think.

Mr. POMEROY. I will state in a single word the views of the committee on that subject. This bill came to us from the House of Representatives. They considered the matter; and in view of the fact that in the States named there is a great landless population of loyal men, colored men, lately slaves who have for a lifetime been shut out from the public lands, and almost all the valuable land in these States has already been acquired and taken possession of in large estates by the first settlers, the white people, the object of this bill is to cut the public land up into small homesteads; and it need not be disguised that it is aimed particularly for the benefit of the colored men, those who have not been able hitherto to acquire homesteads on the public domain in these States. There is not a great quantity of public land left there, but it was the view of the committee, that what was left should be by law cut up into small farms not exceeding eighty acres, and that without distinction of color every citizen of the United States should have the right to hold and to enjoy and after five years have a title to eighty acres of the public land.

Mr. WADE. I wish to ask the Senator to what States this provision applies.

Mr. POMEROY. It applies to all the States in rebellion that have got public lands, namely, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Florida. Texas has no public land. We only include in this bill those States that have got public lands. The object of the bill is simply to allow a class of population who are now shut out from the public lands, to acquire, if this bill should become law, eighty acres for themselves, under the homestead bill, and only eighty.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. The chairman of the committee has stated very correctly the idea of the committee in reporting the bill as it stands; and yet, since the bill has been reported by the committee, I have been induced somewhat to change my own opinion upon this point, not for the reasons alluded to by the Senator from Indiana, but for others that I will now state. Since the bill was reported I have had a conversation with a gentleman from Florida, which is one of the States included in this bill. He suggested to me this idea, which seems to me to be reasonable: he says that if we restrict the amount of a homestead in these States to eighty acres, leaving the amount of a homestead in other States at one hundred and sixty acres, our action will tend to divert immigration from the States named. For instance, the commissioner of immigration of Iowa, if we have such an officer, is in New York, and there is a similar officer or agent there from Florida, each endeavoring to induce immigration to his State. The agent of Iowa says to the immigrant, "If you go to Iowa you can get a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres of the public land;" and the agent of Florida says, "If you come to Florida you can get a homestead of eighty acres of the public land, and only that much." The result, as he argued—and it seemed to me very forcibly argued—would be that immigrants seeking homesteads would go to those States in which they could secure one hundred and sixty acres of land, and would pass by those States in which they could get only eighty acres of land. This argument, when presented to me, struck me very forcibly. Although I may not agree with some Senators in regard to some matters concerning these seceded States, I certainly do not desire to do them any injustice; I do not desire to take any action that will injure their material interests, and I am strongly inclined, for the reason stated by me, to agree with the Senator from Indiana that it would not be good policy to restrict the homesteads in these States to eighty acres. If we do so it will certainly give to those States where there are public lands in which the homestead is not restricted the advantage of inducing immigrants to go to those States, and it will tend to keep emigration from the States named in this bill. For this reason, therefore, although I felt otherwise in committee, I am now strongly disposed to favor the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana. I think it would be but fair to these States.

Mr. POMEROY. The reasons that seem to have influenced the Senator from Iowa do not operate upon me. We ought to bear in mind that these lands have been in market for a long time, and no foreigner coming to this country is going to be attracted to the southern States that have been in rebellion on account of the public lands. If foreigners are attracted there, it is for other reasons. They go there, if they go at all, to take possession of abandoned homesteads, or of large homesteads that are being cut up, where the Government has no title, where the Government parted with its title many years ago. What I claim as an excellence of this bill, if it has any excellencies, is that there are about three million people in those States who never have had access to the public lands, and this bill will devote the remnant of poor lands left there to them, first and foremost; and I think it is our duty to do so rather than to open them up to all Europe. We are under greater obligations and there is a higher sense of duty resting upon us to provide for the landless of our own country rather than to have the nationalities of Europe entering into competition with those poor men who have been loyal to us and yet whom we have never allowed to have a foot of land. The object of this bill is to save the lands for this class of our people, who have become our fellow-citizens, and now must have a footing in the soil; and the only way they can get it is to secure it to them upon the public lands in these States. The white men who own the large farms there are not going to sell them to the colored men, and for another reason, the colored men cannot buy them; they have been stripped of everything. True, thank God! they are free; but they have nothing but their hands to rely upon for support, and they want land. The object of this bill is to let them have the land in preference to people from Europe or anybody else. I hope the amendment will not prevail, but that we shall pass the bill as the House of Representatives passed it in this respect.

Mr. HENDRICKS. When the bill enlarging the powers of the Freedmen's Bureau was before this body I agreed to that section which reserved from sale and all other disposition by the Government three million acres for the benefit of the colored people. I desire, now that they are free, to see them possessed of homes; and so far as this bill goes in that direction I am in favor of it. While I do not support the proposition that they shall be endowed with political rights and powers, I do desire to see them made the owners of lands. But, sir, I do not like to see the system which has disposed of our public lands so beneficially to the people broken up by restricting the sales to the limited quantity of eighty acres. I ask Senators to consider this proposition. While we are willing to legislate for the benefit of the colored people reasonably and properly, we certainly ought not to disregard altogether the rights and the interests of the eight million white people in that country and the interests of foreigners who may immigrate into those States.

Senators desire, I presume, to have the southern States populated as far as possible by men from the North and by men coming from other countries—that is an argument I have heard repeatedly here—so that the political power of those States shall be taken from the men who have exercised it so prejudicially to the country and be placed in the hands of men who will be faithful to the country. That has been an argument in which there was a great deal of force. The Senator from Iowa says the bill as it now stands would have a tendency to exclude from those States a population which gentlemen desire to see seek settlement and homes within their limits. Suppose we say that these lands shall not be disposed of as this bill does in any mode except under the homestead law, and then only to the extent of eighty acres of land, how is the head of a family at all to provide for his boys? How is he to secure a home for them? He cannot buy it within the limits of those States; he is confined to a small tract himself, that makes a farm not susceptible of further partition, and when he dies some one of the children must take it and the rest seek homes elsewhere. That has not been our policy heretofore. We have allowed larger entries than this, and it has promoted the prosperity of the country.

Therefore I think that this restriction to eighty acres ought to be stricken out; and I do not think the Senator from Kansas, the chairman of the committee, is justified in saying that if we allow homesteads to the extent of one hundred and sixty acres there will not be enough lands in these States to provide for all whom he desires to provide for. There is a large amount of public lands in these States; I am not prepared to say at this time just the amount. Florida has an enormous quantity of public land undisposed of, and I think there is a large quantity in Arkansas and some in Louisiana; I cannot say just how much. A few years ago I did know, but I cannot state now.

The proposition is to strike out this restriction, and then the bill will stand thus: that no man can purchase in these States any land beyond a one hundred and sixty acre tract, and he can only get a title to that after he has lived upon it five years, and this right is secured to the colored people as well as to the white. It seems to me that is a fair bill.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I have just sent to the committee-room for some information in regard to the amount of public lands in these States, derived from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and I have it here. It appears that the quantity of surveyed unsold public lands in the States named in this bill is, in—Acres.

Arkansas.....	9,298,012.70
Alabama.....	6,732,058.08
Florida.....	19,379,635.61
Louisiana.....	6,223,102.45
Mississippi.....	4,760,736.03
Total.....	46,398,544.87

I was, as I before said, strongly in favor of the eighty acre limitation until the suggestion to which I have alluded was made to me by the gentleman from Florida to whom I have referred. Now, it is but a balancing of reasons whether we shall fix it at eighty acres or one hundred and sixty acres. There is, however, one consideration which operates very much upon my mind: whatever we do here, unfortunately, is misrepresented among the people to be affected by this bill. There are men who make it their business to misrepresent all we do, and to give to it not only the worst possible construction, but constructions wholly impossible. Now, if we make a distinction between the amount of the homestead in these States and the amount of the homestead in other States, that fact will be seized upon by this class of men to further prejudice these people against our action here. That is the reason why I should be willing to see the limitation of eighty acres stricken out, and one hundred and sixty acres inserted in lieu of it. Another reason operating on my mind is that this limitation will really tend, or may at least tend, to retard immigration to these States of persons from other States, a thing that I much desire to see. I am strongly impressed with the belief that we had better leave the amount of the homestead in these States precisely as it is in the other States, making no distinction between these and the other States, and then there will be no cause for complaint.

I fully concur in the propriety of withholding the public lands from sale in the States named, and allowing them to be taken only as homesteads. We all know there are large amounts of land scrip now in circulation; and as soon as the land offices in those States are opened again, the best of the lands will be swallowed up in large amounts by persons holding this scrip, and the poor men of that region will not be able to get hold of the lands. I will vote for the bill either with the eighty or the one hundred and sixty acre limitation; but I think it would be better for us to leave the homesteads in these States at one hundred and sixty acres, as in the other States.

Mr. CONNESS. I wish simply to say that I agree entirely with what has been said by the honorable Senator from Iowa, more, however, upon the merits of the proposition itself than upon the policy and justice of keeping this bill in exact conformity with the general laws. I do not think that one hundred and sixty acres is too large an amount for a homestead in a new country. Taking how land averages, I do not think that less than that is worthy of settlement upon. It is very true that less than that is often taken; but more than that is frequently needed. Both for the reason of the policy and justice of having a universal rule applicable alike to all the States, and because one hundred and sixty acres is little enough for a homestead upon wild land, I shall vote for the amendment, and I think the chairman of the committee ought to accept it. I think it is reasonable and right.

Mr. POMEROY. The chairman of the committee will accept anything that is the pleasure of the Senate. I only desire to say that this amendment does not meet with my approval individually, but if the Senate choose to change the bill as it came from the House of Representatives in this respect, of course that will be all right. The Senator from California neglects, I think, to consider one fact, that the population of the South who are entirely landless are not as ambitious to get one hundred and sixty acres or three hundred and twenty acres as the population of the States of the West and of California. These people will be entirely contented with forty acres, even. The fact is that they have no land at all, and there is no way for them to get it except to get tracts of the public land. If the public lands in those portions where they are valuable for settlement could be cut up into twenty-acre tracts, so that these poor colored people could get each of them twenty acres, it would be a godsend to them. To say that they have got to take one hundred and sixty acres is requiring them to take a farm of the magnitude of which even they have no conception.

Mr. CLARK. Why not put it in the alternative, give them eighty or one hundred and sixty acres?

Mr. HENDRICKS. That is the law now.

Mr. POMEROY. The bill, as it stands, is that they shall not take more than eighty acres, and that implies that they may take less, any legal subdivision, as low as forty acres. I do not desire to prolong the discussion, but only to say that I think we had better pass the bill as it came from the House in this respect; that is, to let the population who are landless in the South have eighty acres, if they please, and less, if they choose, but not more.

Mr. CONNESS. I think if one hundred and sixty acres of land is a good thing for a white man, it is a good thing for a black man; and I think if it is good for a man in the West, it is good for a man in the South. I do not know really any reason for applying this rule of restriction.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended. The amendments were concurred in and ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed a bill (H. R. No. 211) to authorize the President to appoint certain officers of the Executive Mansion, and fixing their salaries; and a bill (H. R. No. 612) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th of June, 1859," in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House of Representatives had passed, without amendment, the bill (S. No. 318) to authorize the appointment of an additional Assistant Secretary of the Navy.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House of Representatives had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; which were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 371) to grant a pension to Leonard St. Clair;

A bill (H. R. No. 510) to incorporate the Academy of Music of Washington city; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 97) to authorize certain medals to be distributed to veteran soldiers free of postage.

FUNDING THE NATIONAL DEBT.

Mr. HENDERSON. I move to postpone all prior orders and proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 285.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired it becomes the duty of the Chair to call up the special order for today, being Senate bill No. 300. That bill is before the Senate, and the Senator from Missouri moves to postpone it and all prior orders for the purpose of taking up the bill named by him.

Mr. HENDERSON. As the Senator from Ohio is entitled to the floor on the special order, if my bill is called up I will let it be passed over informally to hear his remarks, as I understand his bill is to be passed over anyhow after his remarks.

Mr. SHERMAN. But the funding bill is now the special order.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not desire to interfere with the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is withdrawn. The special order is before the Senate.

The Senate proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to consider the bill (S. No. 300) to reduce the rate of interest on the national debt, and for funding the same. It proposes to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury, if he shall deem it expedient for the purpose of funding the national debt and reducing the rate of interest thereon, to issue registered or coupon bonds of the United States, in such form and of such denominations as he may prescribe, payable, principal and interest, in coin, and bearing interest at the rate of not exceeding five per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually, such bonds to be made payable in not over thirty years from date, to be issued to an amount sufficient to cover all outstanding or existing obligations of the United States, and to be disposed of in such manner and on such terms, not less than par, as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem most conducive to the interests of the Government. The expense of preparing, issuing, and disposing of the bonds is not to exceed two per cent. of the amount disposed of, and the bonds, and the proceeds thereof, are to be exclusively used in taking up or retiring the obligations or indebtedness of the United States other than United States notes. The bonds thus issued are to be known as "the consolidated debt of the United States," and to be exempt from taxation in any form by or under State, municipal, or local authority; and in consideration of the reduction of the rate of interest effected by the negotiation of these bonds, they and the interest thereon and the income therefrom are to be exempt from the payment of all taxes or duties to the United States.

The amount of interest saved by a substitution of five per cent. bonds for other Government securities is to be applied to the payment of the principal of the national debt, and for the purpose of insuring the payment thereof, and in lieu of the sinking fund contemplated by the act of February 25, 1862, the sum of at least $30,000,000, including the saving of interest, is to be annually applied to the reduction or extinguishment of the debt in such manner as may be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, or as Congress may hereafter direct.

For the purpose of enabling the Secretary of the Treasury to prepare for the funding or payment of the outstanding Treasury notes bearing interest at the rate of seven and three tenths per cent. per annum, the holders of such notes are required to advise the Secretary of the Treasury, in such manner as he may prescribe, at least six months before their maturity, whether they elect that the notes shall be paid at maturity or shall be converted into bonds of the United States commonly designated as five-twenty bonds; and the right on the part of the holders of converting the Treasury notes into bonds shall be deemed and taken to be waived as to each and every note in relation to which notice shall not be given as thus prescribed, and the same shall be paid at maturity in lawful money of the United States.

Mr. SHERMAN. There are two or three amendments reported by the committee which may as well be acted upon now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments reported by the committee will be read.

The first amendment was in section one, line sixteen, to strike out the words "preparing, issuing, and," and in line seventeen to strike out the word "two" and insert "one;" so that the proviso will read:

Provided, That the expense of disposing of such bonds shall not exceed one per cent. of the amount disposed of.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section one, line eighteen, at the end of the proviso to add, "which said one per cent., or so much thereof as may be required, is hereby appropriated."

Mr. EDMUNDS. With the consent of the Senator from Ohio, I will move to amend that amendment by adding after the word "appropriated" the words "for that purpose," which will make the meaning a little more explicit. It is a mere verbal amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to that.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was adopted.

The next amendment was in section two, line four, after the word "taxation" to strike out the words "in any form."

Mr. FESSENDEN. How will the section read then?

The Secretary read as follows:

That the bonds issued under this act shall be known as "the consolidated debt of the United States," and the same shall be exempt from taxation by or under State, municipal, or local authority, &c.

Mr. SHERMAN. The amendment is simply to conform to the language of the existing law.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN addressed the Senate in explanation and support of the bill. [His speech will be published in the Appendix.]

Mr. CLARK. I suppose nobody expects action upon the bill at the present time. I differ very materially from the Senator from Ohio in regard to some positions which he has taken on this bill, especially with regard to the matter of taxation, not, however, upon the constitutional power, but upon the expediency of it. But I do not propose to address the Senate at the present time, nor am I certain that I shall do so at any time. If nobody else desires to address the Senate at this time, I will move that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until to-morrow, so that the Senate may proceed to other business.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I suppose it is not intended that this bill shall stand in the way of the business set for to-morrow.

Mr. SHERMAN. Not at all. I will state to Senators, though, that I should like to have a vote on this bill within a reasonable time.

Mr. CLARK. There will be no objection to that, I take it.

The motion to postpone was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

A bill (H. R. No. 211) to authorize the President to appoint certain officers of the Executive Mansion and fixing their salaries; and the bill (H. R. No. 612) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending 30th of June, 1859," were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

RAILROADS IN KANSAS.

Mr. HENDERSON. I move to take up Senate bill No. 285, granting lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Kansas and Neosho Valley railroad and its extension to Red river.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I hope that bill will not be taken up this afternoon. I had intended to examine it with some care, but have not been able to do so. It is a very important grant, not only in respect to its effects upon the public lands, but also in its effect upon other roads to which we have heretofore made grants of lands. I do not desire to defeat an early consideration of the bill, of course; but I am not prepared to discuss it this afternoon, and I should prefer that it should stand over. I had not an opportunity to examine the bill on the committee; I was absent at the time the committee considered it. I ask the Senator to let it lie over a day or two.

Mr. WILSON. I hope the bill will be laid over, as requested by a member of the committee reporting it.

Mr. HENDERSON. I know but little about this bill myself. Some of the members of the other House from my State, who have taken an active part, have requested me to call it up. I believe it is a bill making the usual railroad grants. I know but little about these railroad grants; I never yet have had charge of a bill that made a grant of an acre of land in this body. I have been requested to have early action on this bill; I have glanced through it, and I understood from members of the Committee on Public Lands that it contains nothing more than the usual grants; that there is nothing extraordinary in it, as the Senate will see by examining it. It proposes to make a grant of alternate sections of lands for the building of a railroad through the eastern tier of counties in Kansas. The people in the western portion of my State feel very considerable interest in it. If the Senator from Indiana wishes time to examine the bill of course I should dislike very much to insist upon taking it up now, but I presume there is nothing in it that the Senator cannot examine within ten minutes anyhow. However, I give notice now that I shall call up the bill at the very first opportunity. It is a road in the State of the Senator from Kansas, and his constituents are as much interested in it as are the people of my State.

Mr. POMEROY. I only feel the same interest in this road that I do in all the others in my State. I want the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill at a very early day. It is not vital, I suppose, that it should be proceeded with this afternoon. I have only to say, in reference to it, that the bill is drawn with all the care with which the committee could draw a bill, and I think when the Senate come to consider it there will be no objections to the form of the bill as drawn.

It may compete, perhaps, with other interests that object to it, but there can be no objection to the bill itself in point of form. I want very early action on the bill, for the reason that the session of Congress is drawing to a close, and the Committee on Public Lands in the other House, as I learn, has not yet been called on for reports, and if we do not act upon the bills reported by our Committee on Public Lands in this body until after that committee is called upon we shall not be able to secure their passage at this session. If they are to get through the other House at all it is very important that they should be acted upon before that committee is called for reports there, and I am informed that it will only be a few days before they are called upon to report. I leave, however, the charge of the bill to the Senator from Missouri, as his constituents perhaps feel an equal interest in this bill with any other section of the country, and I shall entirely follow his lead in regard to it. If the Senator from Indiana will be better prepared to-morrow, and will say that he will consent to proceed with the consideration of the bill to-morrow, it would be more satisfactory; but if it is to be put off indefinitely it will not be very satisfactory.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I cannot say to the Senator from Kansas that I shall be prepared to-morrow to present to the Senate what I think are the objections to this measure. I took the bill home with me yesterday evening and intended to examine it with some care. I succeeded in reading it once, but was so much interrupted that I was unable to finish it. I also addressed a note to the Commissioner of the General Land Office requesting a map of the surveys of the State of Kansas, with the different railroads for which grants of land have been made designated thereon, to be sent to me. I have not received that.

I desire now to say to the Senator from Missouri that he is mistaken in supposing that this bill is in the language usually employed in bills granting lands to the States. I think it is not; at least that was my impression when I read the bill yesterday evening; but I do not wish to discuss it now. I think when the Senate come to consider it they will find it to be a measure not meeting with their approval. There are three bills in regard to grants of lands to the State of Kansas now pending, and I think it is about time the Senate should pay a little attention to the grants of public lands to railroads, and I propose when these bills come up, if I have the power, to attract some little attention of the Senate to the question. The lands are going by millions of acres to corporations, and I propose now, before three additional grants are made for roads running parallel within a few miles of each other to a State which has received such enormous grants as the State of Kansas has, to invoke the attention of the Senate.

Mr. POMEROY. There are two observations which I desire to submit in reply to the Senator from Indiana. The first is that there are no grants proposed for three roads running parallel with each other. Second, there are not ten thousand acres of land in the whole grant to this road in my State, and I believe not five thousand. I will leave that point, however, to the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office when it is received. There are other interests of which I will speak when the bill does come up, that perhaps explain the reason why the Senator from Indiana objects to the bill.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Perhaps I am not exactly accurate in saying that the three roads run parallel with each other. One road runs from Kansas City in a southern direction parallel with a road to which we made a grant of lands two years ago. Another runs from Fort Riley down toward Fort Smith, across one of the roads to which we made a grant two years ago—not exactly parallel, but they are in the same neighborhood, lapping one upon the other.

Mr. POMEROY. The road of which the Senator speaks from Lawrence has already a grant of public lands.

Mr. HENDRICKS. So I say.

Mr. POMEROY. And the road from Fort Riley has already a grant of lands.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I say so.

Mr. POMEROY. No additional grant is asked for those roads. Then there are no three roads before Congress asking for grants of land.

Mr. HENDRICKS. That question will be pretty fully discussed. I apprehend, when we take up the bill. I think it is a grant of public lands; I do not agree with the Senator in that. If it is not, the bills ought not to have been before the Committee on Public Lands. I know just where the one grant stops and where the other commences. But I am not prepared to discuss the question, and I do not intend to go into it.

Mr. WILSON. Does the Senator from Missouri withdraw his motion?

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes, sir; I withdraw it for the time being, with the single remark that I know but little about these grants, as I said before, and I am sorry that the Senator from Indiana should have suffered himself to get excited on a subject of this sort.

Mr. HENDRICKS. No excitement in the world.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Senator seemed to be very earnest anyhow, if not excited; decidedly so. I was requested by some members from my State in the lower House, particularly by Mr. VAN HORN, from the Kansas City district, who feels very considerable interest in this matter, to urge the bill through the Senate. I did not expect to excite even earnestness in the opposition of any gentleman, because, though, as I have already stated, I know but little about these grants, I am satisfied from the statements made to me that the bill is in the usual form. I have never introduced a bill into this body for the incorporation of a railroad company or asking for a grant of lands for railroad purposes; and although a western man, I have doubted very much the propriety of squandering the public lands as I have seen it done. But in all kindness I must submit to the Senator from Indiana, who is a member of the Committee on Public Lands, that I have never known of his opposition to any railroad grant until the present occasion. This is the first one I have ever heard him oppose.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Then I have been unable to attract the attention of the Senator from Missouri. I know that two grants were proposed to be made recently to the State of California and one to the State of Nevada, which I opposed as earnestly as I could in this body, because they were not according to the system which we had agreed upon. There was a pretty close vote upon them, but the bills were passed.

Mr. HENDERSON. I must have been absent at the time the Senator from Indiana speaks of, for I have known of no opposition of his to such grants. Indeed, I thought that he had been rather profligate, if I may use that expression, in regard to grants of public lands; that he had been rather free in voting such grants where I thought they ought not to have been given. I say so without intending to reflect at all upon the Senator. Believing that to have been his course, I was a little surprised at his earnestness in opposition to this bill. However, as he wants time to examine the bill, and as I never wish to press a measure that Senators desire time to examine, I will let it stand over for the present.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I desire to say just one word in reply to the Senator from Missouri. I do not think I have sought, in advocating any of these grants, to squander any of the public lands. I have been a friend to such measures as I thought of importance, where the Government in a particular locality had not done what I thought was its proportion in the development of the country. But I am not in favor of giving lands away simply because we can. I want to see the right of it before it is done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Missouri to withdraw his motion.

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes, sir.

MRS. W. L. HERNDON.

Mr. CONNESS. I move to take up House bill No. 193. It is a small bill for the relief of Mrs. Herndon, which was once laid over on an objection; but I believe there is now no objection to it. I move to take it up.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 193) for the relief of Mrs. William L. Herndon. It is a direction to the Secretary of the Interior to cause a copyright to issue securing to Mrs. William L. Herndon, to her heirs, assigns, and legal representatives, the exclusive right to republish the book entitled Exploration of the Valley of the Amazon, heretofore published under order of Congress, and to publish the same for the term of fourteen years from the passage of the act.

Mr. CONNESS. Mrs. Herndon is the widow of Lieutenant Herndon, of the United States Navy, who was in command of the steamship Central America, which was lost in the Atlantic ocean a few years since. It is unnecessary for me to do more than call attention to his case. The country remembers how gallantly he stood by his ship until all her passengers were sent off, and how he went down with her. His widow, a most estimable and excellent lady, who has never ceased to feel the pride that a true woman should in her husband, asks the privilege of the Government of the United States to extend to her the copyright of the book spoken of in the bill, the report of Lieutenant Herndon's explorations in the valley of the Amazon, published by the Government and now out of print, her purpose being to make additions, biographical and otherwise of her husband, and cause its republication. I hold in my hand a letter which I have received from her stating her case, but I suppose the Senate will not ask me to have it read.

Mr. GRIMES. Where is she?

Mr. CONNESS. She is at New York at the present time. I will not occupy the time of the Senate by reading the letter, and as it is a private letter perhaps it would not be proper to do so. I will say, however, that she states intelligibly and well her purpose and what she desires. The matter has been examined in both Houses by the proper committees.

Mr. CLARK. I desire to inquire of the Senator whether he has examined to see if anybody else has any claim on any portion of the book, as, for example, the plates, if there be any.

Mr. CONNESS. There is none whatever. The committee's examination, I believe, has been entirely complete in that respect. The book has been for many years out of print; I remember it very well; I read it with a great deal of care when it was published; it is a most interesting volume, and is now called for, as this lady states, from book-sellers.

Mr. CLARK. I have no objection to the bill if nobody else has any claim.

Mr. CONNESS. I will not occupy the attention of the Senate longer.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROCK ISLAND ARSENAL.

Mr. WILSON. I move to take up Senate bill No. 330, which I reported yesterday morning.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 330) making further provision for the establishment of an armory and arsenal of construction, deposit, and repair on Rock Island, in the State of Illinois, was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct the Secretary of War to fix and establish the position of the Chicago and Rock Island railroad on the island of Rock Island, so as to best accord with the purposes of the Government in its occupancy of that island for military purposes; and in order to effect this he is authorized to grant to the railroad company a permanent location and right of way on and across Rock Island, to be fixed and designated by him, with such quantity of land, to be occupied and held by the company for railroad purposes, as may be necessary therefor; and the grant is to be made on such terms and conditions, previously arranged, as will best effect and secure the purposes of the Government in occupying the island. The Secretary of War is to grant to the Chicago and Rock Island Railroad Company such other aid, pecuniary or otherwise, toward effecting the change in the present location of their road on Rock Island as may be adjudged to be fair and equitable by the board of commissioners authorized under the act of April 19, 1864, entitled "An act in addition to an act for the establishment of certain arsenals," and may be approved by him.

The bill also proposes to extend the provisions of the act of April 19, 1864, so as to include the small islands contiguous to Rock Island, and known as Benham's, Wilson's, and Winnebago Islands; and to appropriate $200,000 to liquidate claims for property in Benham's, Wilson's, and Winnebago Islands, and for property in Rock Island which has been taken, in pursuance of law, for military purposes, or so much thereof, and no more, as may be necessary to pay the respective claimants such amounts as may be reported by the board of commissioners authorized by the act of April 19, 1864, and ordered by the United States circuit court to be paid to each; and also to appropriate $100,000 to secure water-power at the head of Rock Island, and $100,000 to erect storehouses for the preservation of arms and other munitions of war, and to establish communication between Rock Island arsenal and the cities of Davenport, Iowa, and Rock Island, Illinois.

The bill was reported to the Senate, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. GRIMES. I rise to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs how much of the money appropriated under the first clause of the fourth section is to be expended in purchasing Benham's, Wilson's, and Winnebago Islands, and how much is to be expended in the payment of claims to that portion of Rock Island that has been purchased of other individuals.

Mr. WILSON. I do not know that I can answer the Senator precisely in regard to the amount necessary to purchase these three small islands. But the Ordnance department very strongly recommend the purchase of these islands, especially the upper one. I think that but a very small portion of the $293,000 appropriated in the bill is for the purpose of paying for the land. We had a map furnished us by the Ordnance department, showing the position of all these islands; and General Dyer, the head of that department, in a letter sets forth the necessity for their possession by the Government. I do not know that an estimate has been made of the precise amount that these small islands will cost. They are very small islands, one of them only a couple of acres, one seven acres, and the other but a mere dot in the river. I do not think they will cost a great deal. The department say that it is for the interest of the arsenal there to have these three small islands.

Mr. GRIMES. This clause provides for an appropriation of $293,600, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to purchase Benham's, Wilson's, and Winnebago Islands, and to pay for the property on Rock Island, which has been taken in pursuance of law for military purposes. I am somewhat familiar with that island and the country around there. Rock Island has always been reserved by the Government for military purposes. When all the surrounding country both in Iowa and Illinois was sold that was reserved except two tracts, one on the west side of it next to the Iowa channel, which by act of Congress was granted to a gentleman who formerly lived there by the name of Davenport, embracing, I think, about one hundred and forty acres, and a piece of land that was granted to a party who built a dam at the upper end of the island.

It is desirable that the Government should secure that land which we have already granted away, and I understand that it has been appraised at a very large price; I do not know how much; probably, though, we shall be compelled to take it at that appraisement. What I want to know is, how much of this money is to be expended for the purchase of property on Rock Island proper, and how much of it is to be used in purchasing these small islands. Wilson's Island I know something about, and I cannot conceive of what earthly use it can be to the Government. It has been made since I have known that country; it has been made within thirty years by accretion, and upon it have grown up some cotton-tree saplings as large as a man's leg and I think not much larger.

The second item says:

To secure water power at the head of Rock Island, $100,000.

Is that for the building of a dam or is it to secure the title to the land which we have already conveyed under authority of an act of Congress to the party that went there and made a claim some twenty-five years ago? I only seek information in regard to it. I know that it is important that these appropriations should be made. That is the place of all others on the continent where there should be an arsenal, and a large one. Such has been the conviction of all the military officers who have examined the subject for the last thirty years; but I should like to know exactly what is proposed.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not know that I can give the Senator from Iowa the precise information that he desires, though I saw General Rodman, who is in command at Rock Island, when he was here, and he showed me the maps and explained to me the necessity, as they supposed, for having these islands. I do not suppose the price is fixed. The act which I have before me of 1864 authorized the condemnation of property and prescribed the means of condemning it. A portion of Rock Island belongs to private individuals, and some of that property has been condemned, I think, and probably these islands have not been condemned. The bill under consideration here provides for paying the claimants such amounts as may be reported by the board of commissioners authorized by the act of April 19, 1864. That act provides for the appointment of commissioners by the court, I think. I have not had time to read it to-day, but I recollect the act provided for the appointment of commissioners by the United States court to condemn the lands.

Mr. GRIMES. The information I want is where is the necessity for the purchase of these three islands, what are called islands here, and how much it is proposed to pay for them. There must be some information furnished by the War Department.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The last inquiry I can answer. It is proposed to pay for them whatever the commissioners appointed by the court find them to be worth. That is the provision of the bill. What that may be I cannot say, and I do not suppose anybody knows; probably persons acquainted there could tell something about it. It is here provided that we shall pay whatever amount shall be found by the commission authorized by the act of April 19, 1864, to assess the damages for taking private property on Rock Island, Illinois, for a military arsenal. That fixes that.

Mr. GRIMES. That does not extend to these other islands.

Mr. TRUMBULL. This bill provides that they are to be paid such amount as may be reported by the board of commissioners authorized by the act of April 19, 1864. This board is appointed according to that act. The act of 1864 authorized the Secretary of War

"To take and hold full, complete, and permanent possession in behalf of the United States, of all the lands and shores of the island of Rock Island, in the State of Illinois, the same, when so possessed, to be held and kept as a military reservation by the War Department, upon which shall be built and maintained an arsenal for the construction, deposit, and repair of arms and munitions of war, and such other military establishments as have been or may be authorized by law to be placed thereon in connection with such arsenal."

That act further provided:

"That if it shall appear upon examination by the Attorney General of the United States of the titles of the land on Rock Island taken and occupied by the Secretary of War for an arsenal and other military purposes, as provided in the foregoing section, that any part or parcels thereof are now the property of, and are rightfully possessed by, any individual or corporation as his or their own private property, the value of such private property so taken, and a just compensation for any damages caused by such taking, shall, if mutually agreed on by the Secretary of War and the rightful owner or owners thereof, and approved by the President, be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury to said rightful owner or owners so agreeing, out of the appropriations made or to be made for the construction of said arsenal: Provided, That before such payment shall be made, the said owner or owners of such private lands so taken, or such of them as shall agree, shall by good and sufficient deed or deeds, in due form of law, and approved by the Attorney General of the United States, fully release and convey to the United States all their and each of their several and respective rights in and titles to such lands so taken.

"Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That if the Secretary of War shall not agree with any private owner or owners of land so taken for the use of the United States for military purposes, or if any such owner or owners shall refuse to accept the sum to be paid to him or them by the Secretary of the Treasury as and for the true value thereof, or shall from any other cause neglect or fail for the space of twelve months after such taking to execute and deliver the deed or deeds thereof needful, in the opinion of the Attorney General of the United States, to convey to the United States the title of said lands taken, there shall forthwith be selected three competent persons, who shall be named and appointed by the President, and shall by him be constituted a board of commissioners, whose duty it shall be to hear the parties interested, who may appear before them upon reasonable notice of time and place, and ascertain the true value of the land taken."

These commissioners are to assess the value of this land.

Mr. GRIMES. Exactly, on Rock Island.

Mr. TRUMBULL. By this bill on all these islands.

Mr. GRIMES. Where is that authority conferred upon them by this bill?

Mr. TRUMBULL. I understood it to do so.

Mr. WILSON. This bill gives the authority.

Mr. GRIMES. No, it does not.

Mr. TRUMBULL. This bill authorizes it. The Senator will find it in the fourth section:

To liquidate claims for property in Benham's, Wilson's, and Winnebago Islands, and for property in Rock Island which has been taken, in pursuance of law, for military purposes, $293,600, or so much thereof, and no more, as may be necessary to pay the respective claimants such amounts as may be reported by the board of commissioners authorized by the act of April 19, 1864, and ordered by the United States circuit court to be paid to each.

Mr. GRIMES. This bill does not revive that act at all.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Perhaps the bill is defective. I have not examined it very carefully.

Mr. JOHNSON. Let me ask the Senator what is the date of the act to which he referred just now.

Mr. TRUMBULL. April 19, 1864.

Mr. JOHNSON. Then that is the end of it.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I think the bill probably contains all that is necessary.

Mr. WILSON. If the Senator will allow me, the third section of the bill provides—

That the provisions of the act, approved April 19, 1864, entitled "An act in addition to an act for the establishment of certain arsenals," be so extended as to include the small islands contiguous to Rock Island, and known as Benham's, Wilson's, and Winnebago Islands.

Mr. TRUMBULL. It will be seen that by that section the provisions of the act of April 19, 1864, are extended so as to embrace these three islands, and then the amount to be paid is the amount that is assessed by these commissioners. I do not suppose anybody can know what the amount will be until the assessment is made.

I wish to say, in reply to the other question asked by the Senator from Iowa, that in a conversation which I had with General Rodman he explained what he supposed to be the necessity of having these islands, and my recollection of it is that they desire to have these islands in connection with the water power which they want to use in some way, and they think it necessary to have control over them. I do not suppose they are very valuable. The War Department deem it necessary in their arrangements to have these islands; perhaps the Senator from Massachusetts can explain why; but as to the price, that will depend upon the assessment.

Mr. WILSON. I have here a letter of General Dyer to the Secretary of War in regard to this whole matter. General Dyer says, in his letter:

"The act of April 19, 1864, before referred to, gives authority to the Secretary of War to take and hold full, complete, and permanent possession, in behalf of the United States, of all the lands and shores of the island of Rock Island, in the State of Illinois; and the only additional legislation that will be necessary to effect the same in regard to the small contiguous islands, known as Benham's, Wilson's, and Winnebago Islands, will be to extend the provisions of that act so as to include them. Their ownership and occupancy by the United States are necessary for carrying out the military purposes of the act, in addition to the ownership and occupancy of the lands and shores of Rock Island already provided for."

He does not state why it is necessary, but that is the statement of this officer. We sent to the War Office for a map. The committee at first was rather opposed to purchasing these islands. Wilson's Island contains an area of seven and six tenths acres, Winnebago about one acre, and Benham's Island two acres. They desire to connect the main island of eight hundred acres with the upper island by a dam for water power. These small islands can cost but a very small amount at any rate. Rock Island consists of eight hundred acres, and the sum claimed is $293,600. General Dyer says that sum is unquestionably too large, and the commissioners will doubtless cut it down; but he desires to secure these three small islands, and says it is necessary to do so for Government purposes. On the map sent to us from the War Department the dam connects the upper island—I have forgotten which one it is—with the main island in order to secure water power. I suppose the object is to connect the two islands by a dam for the purpose of securing water. An appropriation is here made of $100,000 for the purposes of water power. The cost is not set down here precisely, nor the reasons why they need it; but General Dyer states that it is necessary for Government purposes, and General Rodman, who was here one or two days ago, makes the same statement.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. With reference to the upper island, it is evident, I think, that it is necessary for the use of the establishment at Rock Island. There is, as the Senator from Massachusetts has stated, a dam for connecting it with the larger island making good water power. It is now in use for a saw-mill, and may be used hereafter for Army purposes. There is a small island at the lower end of Rock Island composed of deposits, I think.

Mr. WILSON. A mere speck on the map.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Yes, sir; I think the purpose of getting possession of it is the fear that it might get into the hands of an individual and might be made a source of annoyance to the Government in the use of the larger islands. I think it is to give the Government unrestrained control of the whole of them, to prevent their being used in such a way as to annoy the Government establishment at any time.

Mr. WILSON. According to the statement made, one of the reasons for obtaining possession of the lower islands is to prevent booths for drinking, &c., from being erected. It is said it will not cost much to secure these islands. The upper island is desired in order to build a dam to get water.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. In regard to the expense of procuring the title to the land on this island, I understand it is not to be bought, but commissioners have been appointed to condemn it. The sum named in the bill is entirely beyond the value of the land. There is no question about that.

Mr. TRUMBULL. This sum is not for that particular purpose alone; it is for other purposes.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I understand that commissioners are appointed to take the land and condemn it at its true and proper value, and pay that to the parties. I hope the bill will pass.

The bill was read a third time and passed.

AMENDMENT OF POSTAL LAWS.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 281, to amend the postal laws.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. Before the bill is read I will ask the Secretary to insert a word which has been accidentally omitted in the printing of the bill. It is the word "not," in line twelve of the sixth section, after the word "imprisoned."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is a clerical mistake, and will be corrected.

The Secretary read the bill. It provides that from and after the 1st day of April, 1866, prepaid letters shall be forwarded, at the request of the party addressed, from one post office to another without additional postage charge; and returned dead letters are to be restored to the writers thereof free of charge.

The second section repeals the tenth section of the act entitled "An act to establish salaries for postmasters, and for other purposes," approved July 1, 1864; and so much of the twenty-eighth section of the act entitled "An act to amend the laws relating to the Post Office Department," approved March 3, 1863, as requires postage to be charged at the prepaid rate, to be collected on the return delivery of letters, indorsed with a request for their return to the writers; and all letters bearing such indorsement are hereafter to be returned to the writers thereof without additional postage charge.

The third section of the bill proposes to amend the third section of the act entitled "An act to establish a postal money-order system," approved May 17, 1864, so as to authorize the issuing of a money order for any sum not to exceed fifty dollars, and the charge or fee for an order for a sum not exceeding twenty dollars is to be ten cents; for an order exceeding twenty dollars twenty-five cents.

The fourth section provides that a money order shall be valid and payable when presented to the deputy postmaster on whom it is drawn within one year after its date, but for no longer period; and in case of the loss of a money order a duplicate thereof is to be issued without charge, on the application of the remitter or payee, who shall make the required proofs; and postmasters at all money-order offices are required to administer to the applicant or applicants in such cases the required oath or affirmation free of charge.

The fifth section requires all railroad companies carrying the mails of the United States to convey without extra charge, by any train which they may run over their roads, all such printed matter as the Postmaster General shall, from time to time, direct to be transported thereon with the persons in charge of the mails designated by the Post Office Department for that purpose.

By the sixth section it is provided that every person who shall willfully and maliciously injure, deface, or destroy any mailable matter deposited in any letter-box, pillar-box, or other receiving boxes established by authority of the Postmaster General of the United States for the safe deposit of matter for the mails or for delivery, or shall willfully aid and assist in injuring such mailable matter so deposited, either by pouring into such boxes oil, water, or other fluid, or by any other means, on being duly convicted shall, for every such offense, be fined not less than $100 nor more than $1,000, or be imprisoned not less than one year, nor more than three years, at the discretion of the court.

The seventh section authorizes the Postmaster General, whenever it shall become expedient, in his opinion, to substitute a different kind of postage stamps for those now in use, to modify the existing contract for the manufacture of postage stamps so as to allow to the contractors a sum sufficient to cover the increased expenses, if any, in manufacturing the stamps so substituted.

The eighth section proposes to amend section two of the act entitled "An act to establish salaries for postmasters, and for other purposes," approved July 1, 1864, by adding the following: "Provided, that when the quarterly returns of any postmaster of the third, fourth, or fifth class show that the salary allowed is ten per cent. less than it would be on the basis of commissions under the act of 1854, fixing compensation, then the Postmaster General shall review and readjust under the provisions of said section."

The Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads reported the bill with various amendments. The first amendment was in section one, line three, to strike out the word "April" and insert "May."

Mr. VAN WINKLE. I move to amend the amendment by inserting "July."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was adopted.

The next amendment was in section one, line four, after the word "prepaid" to insert the words "and free;" so that the section will read:

That from and after the 1st day of July, 1866, prepaid and free letters shall be forwarded, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section six, line eight, after the word "aforesaid" to strike out the words "either by pouring into such boxes oil, water, or other fluid, or by any other means."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section six, line eleven, after the word "not" to strike out the words "less than one hundred nor;" and in the same line to strike out the words "one thousand" and insert "five hundred," and in the twelfth line to strike out the words "less than one year nor;" so that the clause will read:

Every such offender being thereof duly convicted shall, for every such offense, be fined not more than $500, or be imprisoned not more than three years, at the discretion of the court.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAMSEY. At the instance of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, I offer another amendment, to come in as an independent section:

And be it further enacted, That whenever the Postmaster General shall require special agents of the Post Office Department to collect or disburse the public moneys accruing from postages, such special agent or agents, when so employed, shall, prior to entering upon such duty, give bond in such sum, and in such form, and with such security as the Postmaster General may approve.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I desire to call the attention of the Senator having charge of this bill to the fourth section, relating to the reissuance of money orders where they have been lost. I suggest the propriety of requiring the giving of a bond by the person to whom the second order is issued, in case the first one should ever again be brought forward. It is usual I think in cases of this kind in banking institutions; and it is usual for Congress, where we provide for issuing new bonds where the original ones have been lost, to require the party receiving the new bond to give his own bond to hold the Government harmless.

Mr. VAN WINKLE. That subject was canvassed in the committee, and the opinion was that it was not necessary to introduce the provision. These money orders are not like bonds or drafts that can be paid by any person. They must come back to the post office for payment. When one is reported lost, notification is immediately given to all the money-order post offices; and it is impossible that any evil of the kind suggested could occur. This section is intended to facilitate the business where, perhaps by the fault of the Post Office establishment, the money order has got astray. It is not believed that the Government will sustain any loss from that money order falling into the hands of an improper person. I think, therefore, that the amendment suggested, although it would be very proper in most such cases, is not required in this.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in and ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. It was read a third time and passed.

OTWAY H. BERRYMAN.

Mr. WILLEY. I ask the Senate to take up Senate bill No. 284.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 284) for the relief of the children of Otway H. Berryman, deceased, was read a second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to allow and pay to the children of Otway H. Berryman, deceased, the sum of $2,100 02, being the amount of losses sustained by Otway H. Berryman while commanding and acting as purser of the United States schooner Onkahye; but it is not to exceed the amount which a purser would have received for performing the same duties on board of the vessel.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If there is a report in that case, I should like to hear it.

Mr. WILLEY. There is a report accompanying the bill which I ask may be read.

The Secretary read the following report submitted by Mr. WILLEY, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, on the 25th of April:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Otway H. Berryman, praying to be allowed the amount of money paid by him in adjusting his accounts as acting purser, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to report:

That this memorial was presented to the Senate and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, at the first session of the Thirty-Second Congress. On the 10th day of August, 1852, Mr. Mallory, of said committee, made a favorable report, accompanied by a bill. No further action was taken on the bill at that Congress.

At the first session of the Thirty-Third Congress the memorial was again referred to said committee. On the 15th of February, 1854, Mr. Mallory again made a favorable report, accompanied by a bill. On the 7th of July, 1854, this bill was passed by the Senate; but it was never acted on by the House of Representatives.

At the first session of the Thirty-Fifth Congress this memorial was again referred to said committee, and Mr. Mallory again made a favorable report, accompanied by a bill, which was passed by the Senate on the 16th of April, 1860. The House of Representatives failed to pass upon it.

At the Thirty-Sixth Congress Mr. Hammond, of the Committee on Naval Affairs, made a favorable report on the claim, accompanied by a bill, which was passed by the Senate on the 6th of April, 1860. But the House of Representatives again failed to consider the bill.

Since the passage of the bill last aforesaid the petitioner has died, and since his death his widow has also departed this life, leaving four children who are in indigent circumstances.

The committee adopt the last report made as aforesaid, which is as follows:

That the grounds relied upon by Lieutenant Berryman are substantially those which induced Congress to grant relief to Lieutenant Charles G. Hunter in 1858, and your committee cannot distinguish between them.

Lieutenant Berryman assumed the command of the United States schooner Onkahye in October, 1846, under an order from the Navy Department, dated the 20th October, 1846, and he immediately entered upon special duty, and performed active and arduous service in the Gulf of Mexico, to Brazil and Chagres, during twenty-two months, which was terminated by the total shipwreck of the vessel on a sunken reef in July, 1848.

With his command he was ordered to perform the duties of purser to the vessel, and these duties he performed throughout the whole period of his command.

No adjustment of his accounts took place until his return to the United States, when it was found that he had actually expended as purser more money, by $2,235, than he could produce the requisite vouchers for. This sum he paid to the Government, and his accounts were balanced accordingly.

The memorialist alleges that he has diligently and faithfully kept and disbursed the means intrusted to him as purser to pay the lawful liabilities of the Government, and that the omission to take and return the proper vouchers for all his expenditures was alone the result of his ignorance of, and his want of practice in, the duties of purser.

The memorialist has a family to support, dependent upon him. He had a small landed estate, which he sold to pay his deficiency, and himself and family have thereby become subjected to great pecuniary embarrassment.

Your committee, from an examination of the memorial and its accompanying papers, and from inquiries also at the Navy Department, are satisfied that the memorialist, whose character and standing as an officer and a man are irreproachable, did faithfully disburse the means intrusted to him in the payment of the proper liabilities of the Government; and that his ignorance of his accounts, and of the importance of carefully preserving vouchers for every expenditure, was due to his general want of familiarity with the duties of his incidental post of purser. He received no compensation for the performance of these duties, nor could he receive any legally. His deficiency is the result of no misapplication of the means of the Government, of no want of due care and diligence in guarding and preserving them. The Government has had the benefit of the expenditure and of his services—services which his education and training as an officer of the Navy did not make him at all peculiarly fitting to perform. They belong wholly to another department of the Navy and to men differently educated. They are imposed on officers in command of public vessels by the Government for its own convenience, and it should, unless some fraud is established, bear the losses of its own neglect in not appointing the proper officer to perform these services.

The amount of disbursements by memorialist as purser, during the period referred to, for which he obtained credit at the Department, was $21,951 50.

Your committee deem it a proper case for relief, and report a bill accordingly.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is this bill reported by a committee?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. JOHNSON. Unanimously, I believe.

Mr. GRIMES. Yes, sir.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CRAGIN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 453, for the relief of Cornelius B. Gold, late acting assistant paymaster United States Navy.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I desire to move an executive session.

Mr. CRAGIN. This is a very brief bill, and will not take five minutes.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. It is important that we have an executive session. There is a matter pending which should be disposed of, and I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and after some time spent in executive session, the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, May 22, 1866.

The House met at twelve o'clock m.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER stated that the absence of the Chaplain, Mr. BOXTON, for the past week was on account of illness.

DISBURSING OFFICERS OF PUBLIC WORKS.

Mr. CULLOM, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1859;" which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read at length. It proposes to amend a proviso of the act of June 30, 1859, so that it shall read as follows:

Provided further, That where there is no collector at the place of location of any public works herein specified the Secretary of the Treasury shall have power to appoint a disbursing agent for the payment of the moneys that are or may be hereafter appropriated for the construction of any such public works, with such compensation as he may deem equitable and just; and all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this section be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

LETTER CARRIERS OF SAN FRANCISCO.

Mr. McRUER asked unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, for action at this time, joint resolution H. R. No. 142, authorizing the Postmaster General to pay additional salaries to letter carriers of San Francisco.

Objection was made.

SUSPENSION AND RESTORATION OF PENSIONS.

Mr. SCHENCK, by unanimous consent, submitted the following preamble and resolution; which were read, considered, and agreed to:

Whereas the Commissioner of Pensions, on the 10th day of June, 1865, issued certain instructions and forms for the restoration to the pension-rolls of the names of persons who were dropped therefrom in pursuance of an act approved February 4, 1862, entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to strike from the pension-rolls the names of such persons as have taken up arms against the Government, or who may have in any manner encouraged the rebellion:" Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to report to this House the names and places of residence of all persons who were dropped from the pension-rolls in pursuance of said act, and who have been at any time since restored thereto; and of all persons whose application for restoration may still be pending, with the date of such restoration or application, and the amount of annual pension allowed or claimed in each case; also, whether arrears of pensions for any period of the rebellion have been allowed or claimed in any such cases, and the amount of arrears allowed or claimed in each case; also an estimate of the amount required to pay the arrears of pensions which accrued during the late rebellion to persons dropped from the rolls in pursuance of the provisions of said act; and also the precise proofs upon which in each case the restoration was allowed or the pending application based, and on whose order or by whose decision and under what provision of law such restoration of pension or payment of arrears of pension has been directed or authorized.

Mr. SCHENCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

A. WALKER.

Mr. BIDWELL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill for the relief of A. Walker for losses sustained in the Mexican war; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I demand the regular order of business.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HARDING] yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HARDING, of Illinois. I am anxious to get through with the public business. I do not want to have evening sessions; still I am willing to attend them if they are necessary. But I cannot consent to taking up the time of the House, which should be devoted to the regular business of the House, by special business.

Mr. MORRILL. I think we better go on with the regular business.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the unfinished business of yesterday, being the consideration of Senate bill No. 318, authorizing the appointment of an additional Assistant Secretary of the Navy.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be read a third time.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts. I took occasion just before the adjournment yesterday to explain the object and purpose of the bill now under consideration. I suppose it is quite fully understood by the House, and I have no desire to consume time valuable for other purposes in any further discussion of this bill. And therefore I now call the previous question.

Mr. ROSS moved that the bill be laid on the table.

On the motion there were—yeas 35, noes 55; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER, under the rule, ordered tellers; and appointed Mr. Ross, and Mr. RICE of Massachusetts.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 28, noes 65.

So the bill was not laid on the table.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Would it be in order, Mr. Speaker, to move to amend the bill so as to give the Secretary of the Navy leave to go abroad? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. No amendment is in order pending the demand for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

The question being on the passage of the bill,

Mr. ANCONA demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 69, nays 41, not voting 73; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, James M. Ashley, Baxter, Beaman, Bergen, Bidwell, Blow, Boutwell, Brandegee, Conkling, Davis, Dawson, Deming, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Driggs, Eldridge, Ferry, Griswold, Hale, Henderson, Higby, Holmes, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Chester D. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Ingersoll, Jencks, Julian, Kelley, Kuykendall, Lallin, Le Blend, Loan, Longyear, Marvin, McClurg, McRuer, Moorhead, Morrill, Myers, Niblack, Nicholson, O'Neill, Perham, Phelps, Pike, Price, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rollins, Scofield, Spalding, Ste-vans, Stilwell, Thayer, John L. Thomas, Trowbridge, Burt Van Horn, Welker, James F. Wilson, Windom, Winfield, and Woodbridge—69.

YAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Baldwin, Boyer, Chanler, Cobb, Cook, Cullom, De-frees, Denison, Dumont, Eckley, Goodyear, Grid-der, Aaron Harding, Abner C. Harding, John H. Hub-bard, Hulburd, James M. Humphrey, Kerr, Ketcham, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Marshall, McKee, Morris, Paine, William H. Randall, Ritter, Rogers, Ross, Sawyer, Sloan, Taylor, Francis Thomas, Trimble, Van Aernam, Ward, Henry D. Washburn, and Wright—41.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Anderson, Banks, Barker, Benjamin, Bingham, Blaine, Bromwell, Broomall, Buckland, Bundy, Reader W. Clarke, Sidney Clarke, Cockroft, Culver, Darling, Dawes, Delano, Eggleston, Eliot, Farnsworth, Farquhar, Finck, Garfield, Gloss-brenner, Grinnell, Harris, Hart, Hayes, Hill, Hogan, Hooper, James R. Hubbell, James Humphrey, John-son, Jones, Kasson, Kelso, Latham, Lynch, Mar-son, McCullough, McIndoe, Mercer, Miller, Moul-ton, Noell, Orin, Patterson, Plants, Pomeroy, Radford, Samuel J. Randall, Raymond, Rousseau, Schenck, Shanklin, Shellabarger, Stigrenaves, Smith, Starr, Strouse, Taber, Thornton, Upson, Robert T. Van Horn, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, William B. Washburn, Wentworth, Whaley, Williams, and Ste-phen F. Wilson—73.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. RICE, of Massachusetts, moved to re-consider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BANKRUPT LAW.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has commenced; and agreeably to order, the House resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 598) to establish a uniform system of bank-ruptcy throughout the United States. On this bill the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. JENCKES] is entitled to the floor, fourteen min-utes of his hour remaining.

Mr. JENCKES. In the bill as printed there are several errors and inaccuracies; and on behalf of the committee I desire to move amendments to correct them.

I move to amend by striking out the word "county," in the third line of the third sec-tion, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "congressional district."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JENCKES. I move further to amend by striking out in the fourth line of the eleventh section the word "five" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "three;" so that the clause will read:

That if any person residing within the jurisdiction of the United States, owing debts provable under this act exceeding the amount of $300, shall apply by petition, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JENCKES. I also move to amend by striking out in the twenty-seventh and twenty-eighth lines of the twenty-eighth section the words "at the time such dividend is given." Those words are superfluous.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMES. I suggest to the gentleman from Rhode Island that in the thirty-fourth line of the eleventh section the word "five" should be "three."

Mr. JENCKES. The gentleman is correct. I move to amend by striking out "five" in the line the gentleman mentions and inserting "three."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JENCKES. Mr. Speaker, in closing this debate I wish to state and to reply to some general objections that have been raised to legislation upon this subject.

1. The first objection is, that no law should be passed which authorizes the discharge of a debt without payment in full, or which cancels the obligation of a contract. All bankrupt laws on this principle would be pronounced inexpedient and unjust.

My reply is, that in the progress of civiliza-tion it has become repugnant to the consciences of enlightened nations that there should be any longer servitude for debt. There are two parties to every contract, and there are uncer-tainties with regard to the performance of it by each. All commercial nations have dis-covered that it is as necessary for the prompt transaction of business, the preservation of mercantile honor, and the encouragement of trade and enterprise, to provide a remedy for the honest, unfortunate debtor against the per-secution of some grasping creditor, as to pro-vide a remedy for the creditor against a fraud-ulent debtor. The security, even the life of trade, requires that the relief provided by law should be mutual. Otherwise, honesty is con-founded with fraud, and misfortune with crime.

A well-adjusted system of bankrupt law pro-vides the desired remedy; and while it strength-ens rather than weakens the creditor's rights and powers, it rewards unfortunate honesty with emancipation. Hereafter, if this bill be-comes a law, imprisonment for debt, that relic of barbarous ages which still lingers in some of the States, will cease to exist and can never be restored. The energies of the unfortunate debtor will no longer be lost to his family and his country. The past, with its retrospect of embarrassment and misfortune, will no longer cast its baneful shadow over his mind, his future will no longer be uncheered by hope. The pur-suit of happiness, the road to honor, a career of industry and enterprise, with its rewards, will again be opened to him, and he will enter anew, as a redeemed man, into the life and prosperity of the State.

2. Another objection is, that although the power to pass a system of laws on the subject of bankruptcy is clearly granted to Congress by the Constitution, yet it is inexpedient for Congress to exercise it. Such an argument might have weight if this bill were brought forward as a party measure, or if it were partial and unequal in its operation, and did not tend to produce the beneficial results it aims at. But the most ingenious and suspicious mind has failed to discover any partisan character in it, and the closest criticism, in and out of Congress has not disclosed any of the other obnoxious qual-ities. It cannot be pretended that State legis-lation can afford adequate relief, for its power over the subject is limited, and over the per-sons ceases entirely at the States' boundaries.

At the time of the adoption of the Federal Constitution, Rhode Island had a perfect bank-rupt law, discharging the debt as well as the person of the debtor, but the Supreme Court declared it to be unconstitutional and null. New York once passed a similar law which met the same fate before the same tribunal. The power resides solely here; and being sole and exclusive it implies a corresponding duty, which is the exercise of that power for the ben-efit of the people. The Republic has a right to the free and unfettered services of all its citizens, and every interest of the State de-mands that they should have the free exercise of their faculties in all the pursuits of life. It is contrary to wise policy to permit one class to hold another in a bondage where freedom from incarceration only makes the suffering more intense. With ruined fortunes, blasted hopes, paralyzed energies, how can those irre-trievably insolvent, contribute to the welfare of the family or the prosperity of the country? Not alone the miseries of these men, but the material interests of the Republic demand the exercise of this beneficent power. Nor is there any considerable opposition to it from that class who may be supposed to be ben-efited by the present state of the law. The great creditor interests of the country, to their honor be it spoken, have appealed to you to nationalize the relation of debtor and creditor by the passage of this bill. After one unpar-alleled revulsion in trade, and another caused by unexpected war, and after the vast fluctua-tions of a five years' state of war, they have discovered that their true interest requires that the law should be so framed as to bring about the most prompt settlements, and give each party the quickest and most thorough relief.

I had the pleasure of submitting to this House the most weighty testimony ever offered on this subject to any legislative body in the world. These Chambers of Commerce and Boards of Trade and their constituencies do not fear that any rogue, or willful rebel who threw his prop-erty into the scales of rebellion with himself, will escape through the meshes of this bill while creditors are vigilant and courts are honest. They wish to meet their debtors, North and South, under the common protection of national law. Their enlightened self-interest has risen to the degree of wise statesmanship. Cannot this Congress be as magnanimous, as just, and as wise?

3. Others object to the system because they say it is retroactive, and avow their willingness to accede to it were it wholly prospective and applicable only to contracts made after the bill shall have become a law. If this be urged on constitutional grounds, it meets with a perfect answer in the decisions of the Supreme Court. Nothing can be clearer than the language of Chief Justice Marshall explaining the clause in the Constitution under which this bill is framed, and that which contains the prohibi-tion upon the States.

Far more cogent, if not altogether conclu-sive, is the constitutional argument against legislation to take effect only on future con-tracts. Some date must be fixed in such a statute before which contracts must remain binding, and beyond which they may be an-nulled. The business of the country must go on, with or without such a statute, and debts must be contracted on the usual credits. A man fails a month after the day designated. From the obligations contracted within that month he may be discharged, but he must remain in the chains of all his previous liabil-ities although they may run back through a period of twenty years. In fact, as the evi-dence of debt may be a judgment or specialty, no statute could give equal and full relief to all debtors on this principle, unless its opera-tion should be postponed until twenty years after its passage.

Such an enactment would be an absurdity. As a present measure of relief, a purely pros-pective statute, to take effect from its date, would be worse than a mockery; it cuts a man into fractions; it severs his business and his life; one half, or some other fraction of him may be bond, the other, free. It breathes the spirit of the terrible Roman statute which gave the living body of the debtor to be cut in pieces by his creditors—a horrid dividend. It would be as unjust to the creditor as to the debtor; they should all be treated alike, and stand equal before the law. It would discriminate against some and favor others; some would take the dividend, and the balance of their claims would still be valid; others would be compelled to discharge their whole debt for the same dividend. Such a statute could not be uniform in its operation, and would there-fore be unconstitutional. For, as I have main-tained in this debate, the constitutional re-quirement in a bankrupt law is, that it should be uniform in its effect upon the relation of debtor and creditor. That is a personal rela-tion. Their rights are personal rights; their contracts are personal contracts; their rem-edies are by personal actions, and the relief granted by a bankrupt law is a discharge from these personal actions. The effect should be uniform upon all, or the constitutional re-quirement is violated.

But this statute cannot properly be called retroactive even in the sense that all remedial statutes are retroactive. It is not within the prohibition of ex post facto laws. It takes effect upon the business of the country as it is, in the same manner that the two previous sta-tutes took effect at their respective dates. The warrant to enact it is found in the clear and explicit language of the Constitution, and to a bill like this, with less propriety than perhaps to any other, can the term retroactive or retro-spective be applied in the offensive sense that it changes existing rights and liabilities without notice; for every contract that has been made since the ratification of the Constitution has been entered into with full knowledge of its contents, and subject to the power of Congress to pass at any time a law by which that contract might be annulled.

About the details of the bill, as originally reported, the committee have never been tenacious. I merely carried out their instructions in contending for what they had carefully considered and prepared, and in insisting upon the provisions of the bill as they were, until something better was offered. Since the last reference of the bill, friends of the measure, not upon the committee, have submitted amendments which the committee have become satisfied were improvements on the original plan.

These have in every instance been incorporated into the bill as now reported. None of them were matured and offered while the bill was under discussion in the House. If they had been, they would have been promptly accepted then. I was instructed to sustain and defend the bill in the spirit of the teaching of the Roman poet, which forms a maxim in his art:

"Si quid novisti rectius istis, Candidus imperi; pi non, his utere mecum."

And whenever the better have been imparted they have been gladly accepted.

Mr. Speaker, I now call the previous question.

Mr. PAINE. I desire to move an amendment to strike out from the bill the provisions with reference to compulsory or involuntary bankruptcy, sections thirty-nine, forty, forty-one, and forty-two. I do not suppose that this amendment will meet the approval of the gentleman from Rhode Island; but I ask him to yield to me that I may test the opinion of the House upon the matter.

Mr. JENCKES. That point was raised during the course of the discussion, and as the sense of the House has already been tested, I decline to withdraw the previous question for that amendment.

Mr. STEVENS. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the call for the previous question to let me move the postponement of this harricari until December next. [Laughter.]

Mr. JENCKES. I decline to withdraw the demand for the previous question.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 59, noes 35.

Mr. BLAINE demanded tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was ordered to be put.

Mr. STEVENS moved that the bill be laid upon the table; and on that motion demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 49, nays 73, not voting 56; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Bidwell, Blaine, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Dawson, Defrees, Dumont, Eckley, Eldridge, Goodyear, Grider, Aaron Harding, Abner C. Harding, Henderson, Chester D. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Ingersoll, Julian, Kelso, Kerr, William Lawrence, Loan, Lynch, Marston, McClurg, McKee, Niblack, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Perham, Plants, Price, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Ritter, Rollins, Ross, Sawyer, Schenck, Sitgreaves, Stevens, Welker, James F. Wilson, and Winfield—49.

NAYS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, Ancona, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Banks, Baxter, Beaman, Bergen, Boutwell, Boyer, Brandegee, Chanler, Conkling, Davis, Dawes, Deming, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Driggs, Eliot, Farnsworth, Ferry, Garfield, Griswold, Hale, Higby, Hogan, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, James M. Humphrey, Jenckes, Kelley, Ketcham, Ladin, George V. Lawrence, Longyear, Marvin, McCullough, McRuer, Moorhead, Morris, Myers, Nicholson, Phelps, Pike, Radford, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rogers, Rousseau, Scofield, Sloan, Spalding, Taber, Taylor, Thayer, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Trimble, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Ward, Henry D. Washburn, William B. Washburn, Williams, Windom, Woodbridge, and Wright—73.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Barker, Benjamin, Bingham, Blow, Broomwell, Broomall, Buckland, Bundy, Reader W. Clarke, Coffroth, Cullom, Culver, Darling, Delano, Denison, Eggleston, Farquhar, Finck, Glossbrenner, Grinnell, Harris, Hart, Hayes, Hill, James R. Hubbell, James Humphrey, Johnson, Jones, Kasson, Kuykendall, Latham, LeBlond, Marshall, McIndoe, Mercier, Miller, Morrill, Moulton, Newell, Noell, Patterson, Pomeroy, Raymond, Shanklin, Shellabarger, Smith, Starr, Stilwell, Strouse, Thornton, Robert

T. Van Horn, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Wentworth, Whaley, and Stephen F. Wilson—56.

So the House refused to lay the bill upon the table.

During the vote,

Mr. CULLOM stated he was paired with Mr. WENTWORTH, who was for the bill, while he was against it.

Mr. DENISON stated he was paired with Mr. NOELL, who would vote for the bill, while he was against it.

Mr. KUYKENDALL stated he was paired with Mr. RAYMOND, who would vote for the bill, while he would vote against it.

Mr. ALLISON stated that his colleague, Mr. KASSON, who would vote for the bill, was paired with Mr. BENJAMIN, who would vote against it.

Mr. LE BLOND stated he was paired with Mr. GRINNELL, who was for the bill, while he was against it.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. JENCKES demanded the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky, demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 68, nays 59, not voting 56; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alley, Allison, Ames, James M. Ashley, Baldwin, Banks, Baxter, Beaman, Bergen, Blow, Boutwell, Brandegee, Chanler, Conkling, Davis, Dawes, Dixon, Dodge, Donnelly, Driggs, Eliot, Farnsworth, Ferry, Griswold, Hale, Hogan, Holmes, Hooper, Hotchkiss, Asahel W. Hubbard, Demas Hubbard, John H. Hubbard, Hulburd, James M. Humphrey, Jenckes, Kelley, Ketcham, Ladin, Longyear, Marvin, McCullough, McRuer, Moorhead, Morris, Nicholson, Phelps, Pike, Radford, Alexander H. Rice, John H. Rice, Rousseau, Scofield, Sloan, Spalding, Taber, Taylor, Thayer, Francis Thomas, John L. Thomas, Trimble, Trowbridge, Upson, Van Aernam, Burt Van Horn, Ward, Henry D. Washburn, Williams, and Woodbridge—68.

NAYS—Messrs. Ancona, Anderson, Delos R. Ashley, Baker, Bidwell, Blaine, Boyer, Sidney Clarke, Cobb, Cook, Dawson, Defrees, Deming, Dumont, Eckley, Eldridge, Glossbrenner, Goodyear, Grider, Aaron Harding, Abner C. Harding, Henderson, Higby, Chester D. Hubbard, Edwin N. Hubbell, Julian, Kelso, Kerr, George V. Lawrence, William Lawrence, Loan, Marshall, Marston, McClurg, McKee, Myers, Niblack, O'Neill, Orth, Paine, Patterson, Perham, Plants, Price, Samuel J. Randall, William H. Randall, Ritter, Rollins, Ross, Sawyer, Schenck, Sitgreaves, Stevens, Stilwell, William B. Washburn, Welker, James F. Wilson, Windom, and Winfield—59.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Barker, Benjamin, Bingham, Broomwell, Broomall, Buckland, Bundy, Reader W. Clarke, Coffroth, Cullom, Culver, Darling, Delano, Denison, Eggleston, Farquhar, Finck, Garfield, Grinnell, Harris, Hart, Hayes, Hill, James R. Hubbell, James Humphrey, Ingersoll, Johnson, Jones, Kasson, Kuykendall, Latham, LeBlond, Lynch, McIndoe, Mercier, Miller, Morrill, Moulton, Newell, Noell, Pomeroy, Raymond, Rogers, Shanklin, Shellabarger, Smith, Starr, Strouse, Thornton, Robert T. Van Horn, Warner, Elihu B. Washburne, Wentworth, Whaley, Stephen F. Wilson, and Wright—56.

So the bill was passed.

During the roll-call,

Mr. CULLOM said: I have paired with my colleague, Mr. WENTWORTH. He would have voted for the bill, and I against it.

Mr. KUYKENDALL. I have paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. RAYMOND. He would have voted for it, and I against it.

Mr. ALLISON. My colleague, Mr. KASSON, who would have voted for this bill, has paired with the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. BENJAMIN, who would have voted against it.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Mr. Speaker, I voted "no" on the call of the Clerk. The chairman of the committee informs me that the gentleman from New York, Mr. POMEROY, who is absent, has written to him that he understood the pair that he made with me a month ago still continues; that he supposes that the pair applied to the old bankrupt bill, which was defeated, and also to this, that takes its place. If that is so, I wish to withdraw my vote.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. DARLING, who would have voted for the bill, and I would have voted against it.

Mr. JENCKES moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER stated as the next business in order the calling of the select committee on freedmen's affairs for reports.

WILBERFORCE INSTITUTE.

On motion of Mr. ELIOT, the committee on freedmen's affairs was discharged from the further consideration of the memorial of J. H. Irwin for an appropriation for Wilberforce Institute, and the same was referred to the committee on education.

FREEDMEN'S BUREAU.

Mr. ELIOT. The select committee on freedmen's affairs have instructed me to report a bill to continue in force and to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a Bureau for the Relief of Freedmen and Refugees, and for other purposes."

The bill was read a first and second time, and the question was upon ordering it to be engrossed and read a third time.

The Clerk commenced the reading of the bill, but before concluding the morning hour expired.

On motion of Mr. ELIOT, by unanimous consent, the bill was ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. TROWBRIDGE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 510) to incorporate the Academy of Music of Washington city;

An act (H. R. No. 371) to grant a pension to Leonard St. Clair; and Joint resolution (S. R. No. 97) to authorize certain medals to be distributed to veteran soldiers free of postage.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. DRIGGS, by unanimous consent, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of John C. Jacoby, copies being left.

LAWS OF ARIZONA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a copy of the laws of Arizona Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

CLERKS IN THE WAR DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a list of clerks in his Department, in compliance with a resolution of the House of the 7th instant; which was referred to the select committee on the civil service of the United States.

EQUALIZATION OF BOUNTIES.

Mr. SCHENCK. A motion has been entered to reconsider the reference of the bill for the equalization of bounties to the Committee of the Whole. Some suggestions have been made in reference to a change of phraseology, there being two or three ambiguities in the bill, and it may be well to revise it. I ask, therefore, to have it recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs, so that we may act upon it at the next meeting on Thursday, and report it back.

The motion to reconsider prevailed; and the bill was accordingly recommitted to the committee with authority to report at any time.

WITHHOLDING SOLDIERS' MONEY.

Mr. DRIGGS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill to punish attorneys and others for withholding moneys collected for officers, soldiers, and sailors; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. DRIGGS, the Committee on Public Lands was discharged from the further consideration of House bill No. 522, to provide for the construction of a wagon road from Columbus, Nebraska Territory, to Virginia City, Montana Territory.

On motion of Mr. SAWYER, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Joseph Blick, the father of Henry Blick; and the same was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

MUSIC IN THE PUBLIC GROUNDS.

Mr. WRIGHT, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds:

Resolved, That the Commissioner of Public Buildings be directed to replace the orchestra platform recently removed from the President's grounds by the erection of a new one, and also to erect one upon the Capitol grounds.

EXECUTIVE MANSION.

Mr. RICE, of Maine. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to offer the following concurrent resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That the standing Committees of the two Houses on Public Buildings and Grounds be, and they hereby are, constituted a joint committee to examine the several sites and grounds which may be proposed for the purposes of a new Executive Mansion and residence, to inquire as to the necessity and expediency for such new accommodations for the President, and to consider such prices, plans, and estimates touching the same as may be presented, and that they report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I object.

TAX BILL.

Mr. MORRILL moved that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. DAVES in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being a bill of the House (No. 513) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof.

The Clerk read the pending paragraphs, as follows:

On cotton upon which no tax has been levied, collected, or paid, and which is not exempted by law, a tax of two cents per pound, which shall be and remain a lien thereon until said tax shall have been paid, in the possession of any person or persons whomsoever: Provided, That this paragraph shall be and remain in force until July 1, 1866, and no longer.

On all manufactures not otherwise provided for, of cotton, wool, silk, worsted, flax, hemp, jute, India-rubber, gutta-percha, wood, glass, pottery-ware, leather, paper, iron, steel, lead, tin, copper, zinc, brass, gold, silver, horn, ivory, bone, bristles, wholly or in part, or of other materials, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem: Provided, That on all cloths or articles dyed, printed, or bleached, on which a tax shall have been paid before the same were so dyed, printed, or bleached, the said tax of five per cent. shall be assessed only upon the increased value thereof: And provided further, That any cloth or fabrics or articles, as aforesaid, when made wholly or in part of thread, yarn, or warps, imported, or upon which a duty shall have been assessed and paid, shall be assessed and pay a tax on the increased value only thereof; and when made wholly by the same manufacturer shall be subject to a tax only of five per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MORRILL. On page 95, line twenty-one hundred and fifty-two, I move to strike out the words "wholly or in part;" so that the proviso will read:

And provided further, That any cloth or fabrics or articles, as aforesaid, when made of thread, yarn, or warps, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPALDING. I move to insert at the end of the paragraph the following additional proviso:

And provided further, That brown earthen and common or grey stone-ware shall be subject to a tax of two and one-half per cent. ad valorem and no more.

I believe that this amendment will not meet with any opposition from the Committee of Ways and Means, and I hope it will be adopted. It refers only to the cheap pottery for kitchen purposes.

Mr. MORRILL. I have not consulted the Committee of Ways and Means, but I am in favor of that amendment myself.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On all diamonds, emeralds, precious stones, and imitations thereof, and all other jewelry, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem: Provided, That when diamonds, emeralds, precious stones, or imitations thereof, imported from foreign countries, or upon which import duties have been paid, shall be set or reset in gold or any other material, the tax shall be assessed and paid only upon the value of the settings.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I hope I can have leave to go back to the paragraph preceding the one just read for the purpose of striking out the words "flax and jute."

Mr. MORRILL. I must object.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I move to amend the paragraph just read by striking out in line twenty-one hundred and fifty-eight the word "five" and inserting "ten," and also by striking out the proviso.

I hope the committee will give their attention to this provision. It will be seen that this provision designs to assess a tax of five per cent. "on all diamonds, emeralds, precious stones and imitations thereof, and all other jewelry." Now, I object to that paragraph because the tax upon these articles is not sufficiently high as compared with the other articles enumerated in this bill.

I do not see the propriety of levying the same tax upon these articles, confessedly articles of mere ornament and luxury, wholly unnecessary for any valuable purpose. I cannot see the propriety of levying the same tax upon these articles that you assess upon thread, leather, candles, screws, and many other articles that enter into the manufacture of articles of necessity, and articles for the use of the mechanic, the artisan, and laborer all over the country. It seems to me that we should impose as large a tax as possible upon these articles of mere luxury, so as to derive as much revenue as practicable.

I do not wish to discuss this matter at any length. But I hope the amendment I have offered will prevail, and that we will assess at least a tax of ten per cent. upon these articles which can bear it much better than other articles which are taxed the same amount.

Mr. MORRILL. If the gentleman had had some experience in this matter he would see the impolicy of levying any higher rate of duty than is proposed in this bill. Consider the subject in its foreign relations; the tax was formerly placed at five per cent. In the tariff act of 1861 it was raised to ten per cent. And I am informed by those who are engaged in the business that they can contract for diamonds and precious stones, whether set or unset, delivered in New York free of duty, for seven and a half per cent. Should we undertake to levy a high tax upon these articles it would prove to be wholly fallacious. If the gentleman means by his amendment to throw this business entirely into the hands of foreigners, then his course is a proper one. But if he is willing to continue the little amount of business that we have already in this country in these articles, then the present tax is high enough. It is all that we can collect, and I hope that the rate here proposed will not be changed.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I move to amend my amendment by making it twelve per cent., for the purpose of saying that I am not troubled with the objection which is urged to my amendment by the distinguished chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, [Mr. MORRILL.] I would not propose to throw this business entirely into the hands of foreign manufacturers. But I understand we are to have reported a tariff bill in which we can provide for all that. I would levy such duty on the importation of those articles as would enable the home manufacturer to produce all these articles, or, if you please, to exclude them entirely from the country.

There is no difficulty whatever in remedying the difficulty presented by the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] simply by levying such a duty on the importation of these articles as will completely shut them out, or levy such a tax as will give the home manufacturer the command of this trade. I do not understand the philosophy that is so often presented here, when we are insisting upon an increased tax upon articles of luxury, by saying that we cannot collect the tax. I know no reason why high taxes cannot be collected upon articles of luxury as well as upon articles of necessity. The tax can be collected by vigilant officers. If it be necessary we can add provisions to this law which will enable officers to collect thoroughly all the tax that may be levied by the law.

I hope the amendment I have offered will prevail, and that we will increase the duty upon these articles, so that we may derive more revenue from these articles than we will if the tax should be left at five per cent. I am sure if the committee will give their attention to this subject they will have no objection to the amendment I have proposed.

Mr. MORRILL. I should have no more objection than the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] has to levying a greater tax upon these articles, if it could be collected. But the gentleman does not seem to appreciate the objection to that, which is that these articles are and will be smuggled if the tax upon them should be raised. The experience of the whole world is against the argument of the gentleman from Ohio, that you can impose a great tax upon these articles. Take for instance the article of watches; a very large amount of the watches which are brought into this country from abroad are smuggled. Precious stones are not bulky articles, and they are not produced to any extent in this country, and if we are to get any revenue at all from such articles, we must fix the tax at a low rate. They come into the country in letters, in ladies' dresses, in gentlemen's pockets. It is impossible for the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] to reach his object by the amendment he has proposed, and I trust his amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I withdraw my amendment to my amendment.

The amendment of Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, was not agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire consent to recur to the following paragraph:

On articles of clothing manufactured or produced for sale by weaving, knitting, or felting; on hats, bonnets, and hoop skirts; on articles manufactured or produced for sale as constituent parts of clothing, or for trimming or ornamenting the same, and on articles of wearing apparel manufactured or produced for sale from India-rubber, gutta-percha, or paper, or from fur, or fur skins dressed with the fur on, a tax of five per cent. ad valorem.

I am satisfied that the amendment proposed on yesterday, to strike out the words "or paper," should have been adopted.

No objection was made to recurring to the paragraph referred to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I now move to strike out the words "or paper."

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I have some doubt as to the expediency of the proposed amendment. The reason paper was included in that paragraph was that there is no tax upon the raw material, for we have relieved paper entirely from tax. We therefore thought it right that the manufacturer of paper clothing should be included in the tax of five per cent. It is the only tax it will pay, either as raw material or as manufactured articles.

Mr. GARFIELD. The action of the committee yesterday was based upon what we then understood to be the fact that the whole business of making paper collars is in the hands of a monopoly controlling entirely the manufacture. That, so far as we were then informed, appeared to be the truth. But we have since had a statement from gentlemen well acquainted with the business, and we find that instead of the business being in the hands of a monopoly, there is a very heavy competing interest, so that these paper collars are now sold at a very reduced rate. If we should take off the tax provided for in this paragraph and place this article with other articles of clothing, this branch of business will have the advantage which I think it ought to have. The question simply comes to this: whether we shall charge upon collars made of linen a different rate of tax ad valorem from that charged on collars made of paper. The paper collar is certainly worn by a class of men less able to pay a tax than those wearing collars of more costly materials. It seems to me, therefore, that we ought to liberate this article from tax.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOOPER] states that the raw material from which these collars are made has been exempted from tax. So much the better, I reply; for this is a home manufacture almost exclusively; whereas linen is an article very largely imported. I hope the amendment will prevail.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend by striking out "or," in line twenty-one hundred and sixty-one, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "and."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On bullion, in lump, ingot, bar, or otherwise, a tax of one half of one per cent. ad valorem, to be paid by the assayer of the same, who shall stamp the product of the assay as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe by general regulations. And all sales, transfers, exchanges, transportation, and exportation of gold or silver assayed at any mint of the United States, or by any private assayer, unless stamped as prescribed by general regulations as aforesaid, are hereby declared unlawful; and every person or corporation who shall sell, transfer, transport, exchange, export, or deal in the same, shall be subject to a penalty of $1,000 for each offense, and to a fine not exceeding that sum, and to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years nor less than six months. No jeweler, worker, or artificer in gold or silver shall use either of those metals except it shall have first been stamped as aforesaid, as required by this act; and every violation of this section shall subject the offender to the penalties contained herein. No person or corporation shall take, transport, or cause to be transported, export or cause to be exported from the United States any gold or silver in its natural state, uncoined or unassayed, and unstamped, as aforesaid; and for every violation of this provision every offender shall be subject to the penalties contained herein.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend by striking out in line twenty-one hundred and eighty-three the word "section" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "provision;" so that the clause will read:

And every violation of this provision shall subject the offender to the penalties contained herein.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend by striking out in line twenty-one hundred and ninety the word "contained" and by inserting after the word "herein" the word "provided."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to amend by striking out in lines twenty-one hundred and eighty-three and twenty-one hundred and eighty-four the following words:

And every violation of this provision shall subject the offender to the penalties contained herein.

That clause is not necessary, as it is repeated in the last sentence of the paragraph.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to amend by striking out in line twenty-one hundred and eighty-nine the word "provision" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "paragraph."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McRUER. I move to amend by striking out this whole paragraph. I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the tax provided for in this paragraph is the only tax in this bill that does not attach to the article taxed and go forward to be paid by the consumer. This is a direct tax upon the labor employed in mining gold. The tax must be paid by the miner, because the Government has declared by law that an ounce of gold, whether it cost a day's or a month's labor, shall be worth only so many dollars and cents.

Now, while there is great propriety in taxing, and taxing heavily, gold and silver which enter into articles of manufacture, plate, jewelry, &c., because the consumer or the wearer must eventually pay the tax, it is manifestly unjust and contrary to the whole theory and principle of this bill to require that this tax be paid by the miner. I know that there is an impression here that it is a very easy thing to dig gold and silver. Men see or hear of the millions of gold landing at the port of New York from San Francisco; but they do not know anything about the miner who spends oftentimes years in unprofitable labor in order to get this gold from the earth.

There is in this tax a principle which does not apply to any other single provision in this bill. Gold and silver bullion are worth only so many dollars and cents. This tax cannot be attached to them, but must be paid by the labor which produces them, whether that labor is profitable or not. I hope, therefore, the justice of the committee will see that this paragraph ought to be stricken out, and that the tax should only be placed upon gold and silver bullion manufactured into articles of luxury.

Mr. STEVENS. It was reduced to this small sum, as it was thought, by the common consent of the Representatives from the Pacific slope. We of other parts of the country thought it should be larger. The reason for this is obvious. The gold mines are owned by the Government of the United States, and we have laid no royalty upon these mines. The only return the Government can get for the treasure taken is this small percentage. Every other Government charges five times as much. The Government of Mexico charges a much larger royalty. Some means were sought to get a return by the Government for their own treasure taken out by these miners, and for a long time no way was found to be satisfactory. Finally the tax was reduced to this small percentage on bullion. It comes from those who own mines, and is paid as a royalty. A man in Pennsylvania who owned a coal mine and allowed it to be worked would charge five times as much. This tax is very small, and I hope there will be no further objection to it.

Mr. HIGBY. I move to strike out the last word in order to make a brief statement in reference to the history of this matter. I know very well the feeling of this House on this subject. I know the struggle we had to get the tax down even to the present rate. The bill as originally reported to the Thirty-Eighth Congress put on a tax of three per cent., to be paid in gold. On motion of a Delegate from Idaho, the words "to be paid in gold" were stricken out. Thereupon a member of the Committee of Ways and Means rose and moved to increase it from three to five per cent., which went through like a whirlwind. It then went from the House to the Senate, and the Senate have the merit of reducing it down to one half of one per cent. When it came back to the House in that form the delegation from California was consulted as to whether we would object to the tax as reduced. I said then, as I say now, that it is manifest injustice to tax at all the digging of gold out of the mines. While I do not think my colleague's motion will be adopted, still I shall cheerfully vote for it. I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. I move to insert in line twenty-one hundred and eighty-one after the word "use" the words "bullion of." My object, Mr. Chairman, in offering this amendment, is to protect the small manufacturers of gold and silver wares in our country towns as well as in our cities. If the original terms of the paragraph I desire to amend shall be retained, it will be seen that no manufacturer can use old metal, either of gold or silver, old spoons, watch-casings, or jewelry settings which he may have received, as is customary, in exchange for his wares, without having such articles or their product taken to the assayer and stamped, unless he is willing to subject himself to the severe penalties of this act. This, I think, is unfair, unnecessary, and unjust. The large manufacturers in New York and other principal cities use, I suppose, bullion to a great extent, but the small manufacturers using limited amounts depend principally upon old coin and old articles which have been injured or the fashion of which has changed. My amendment will give to them a deserved protection from the inconvenience, annoyance, and injustice to which they will be otherwise subjected.

Mr. WRIGHT. In looking at the latter part of this paragraph I do not quite see the effect of the following:

No person or corporation shall take, transport, or cause to be transported, export or cause to be exported from the United States, any gold or silver in its natural state, uncoined or unassayed, and unstamped, as aforesaid; and for every violation of this provision every offender shall be subject to the penalties herein contained.

Would the Adams Express Company, or any other express company, for sending abroad a box containing unstamped metal be liable to be sent to State's prison?

Mr. MORRILL. Unless this provision is in we shall be unable to collect the tax. This is simply a provision that compels the payment of this tax before it can be exported.

Mr. DAVIS. I move pro forma to amend the amendment by striking out "of." The chairman of the committee is in error in saying that no complaint has ever been made in regard to the existing law. I have complaints now from manufacturers in my own district.

Mr. MORRILL. What do they want?

Mr. DAVIS. Simply that they shall be allowed to work gold and silver ware and jewelry without being obliged to go to the assayer. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BIDWELL. I renew it. It strikes me that this provision, as it now reads, would be entirely inoperative. It says that "all sales, transfers, exchanges, transportation, and exportation of gold or silver assayed at any mint of the United States" are declared unlawful. There is no penalty except in regard to such as is assayed, because in the latter part of the section the same penalty is provided against the transportation or exportation of "gold and silver in its natural state, uncoined or unassayed and unstamped."

Now, I would like to know how you are going to fix a stamp on gold which is not assayed, in the form of dust, for instance. And I desire further to know whether that penalty of $1,000 will apply to the miner who digs out his hundred dollars of gold in the course of two or three months and goes down to some village in order to exchange it. I believe it will so apply, according to the reading of the section, and thereby create the greatest dissatisfaction throughout the entire mining region of the Pacific slope. And I may say, the greatest injustice. All that is necessary for a proper understanding of this question and to dispel the idea of attempting to raise a revenue from the miners in this way, would be for members of Congress to go to the mining region. They never would think of imposing such a tax after witnessing the labors of those who, at the sacrifice of life and property, have gone to labor in the mines. If anything should be done it should be rather to pay these men a bonus for the gold they dig.

You say these precious metals belong to the Government. They belong to it just as much as does the center of this globe, and no more, and they would be no more benefit to the Government, unless they were extracted, than is the gold that lies at the center of the globe.

I am almost afraid that this House may come to the conclusion that because we have asked for certain exclusions in regard to the interests of California we desire to escape all taxes. But I beg to assure the House that such is not the case. If you will only place the tax upon those articles and those industries which can bear it we will say nothing. If you will single out the mines which are paying fortunes almost every month, I will say amen. But when you attempt to place it indiscriminately you do injustice. Every man who goes into the mining region, and risks his means and his life, does so because he hopes to be able to strike something rich, like those mines which are paying dividends. If you can fix this tax so that it will fall on the net proceeds, I have no objection, even if you make it fifty per cent.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KELLEY. I oppose the amendment of the gentleman from California. I invite the attention of the House especially to this clause:

No jeweler, worker, or artificer in gold or silver shall use either of those metals except it shall have been stamped as aforesaid, as required by this act.

The amount of tax received by the Government from the branches of business involved in this provision would be but a small percentage of the whole tax imposed. Indeed, it would be almost inapplicable as to the amount involved to the artificer. I know by experience, Mr. Chairman. For twelve years, each day of my life, when in health, was given to labor in one of those branches of business. Jewelers, especially in the smaller shops, melt but a few ounces of gold, sometimes but a few pennyweights, and to force them to have a mint stamp put upon each melting before they can use it, would be the destruction of most of the shops in our larger cities. It would give to the Government no compensation for the amount of industry it would impair. Fashions of jewels change. People will carry their jewelry to an establishment and have it transformed from the fashion which is passing away to that which is coming in vogue. A small worker has but little capital. He looks to the stock provided by the old goods, with a small addition, and if after having melted it, he must carry it or send it to the mint to be stamped and taxed before he can work it up, he will be taxed inordinately and fruitlessly. It may not have been the intention of the committee to embrace such cases, but the phraseology of the bill clearly has that effect, and I hope it will be stricken out. That is the understanding, I find, of all the gentlemen to whom I have spoken. And when gentlemen remember how the Departments have construed the law; when they remember how the mantua-maker, the widow, perhaps, of a soldier supporting her children, has found that she must abandon her business because the material she used was taxed, as well as her labor, while an unmarried woman, who could go from home to work, escaped taxation, they will see that this will be the effect, and that all our small working jewelers, all the men who are struggling up to become employers of the little capital they may have accumulated, as well as their own skill, will be taxed by this; and I ask either that the language of the clause be so clearly modified that no such construction can be put upon it or to strike out a clause calculated to impede the industry of the country.

Mr. BIDWELL. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. I renew the amendment for the purpose of saying that the provision as it now is, I believe, will stand the test of criticism. I am satisfied that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has not fully considered the entire paragraph. This tax is to be levied upon and paid by the assayer and not by the miner, and then the language is, that "no jeweler, worker, or artificer in gold or silver shall use either of those metals except it shall first have been stamped as aforesaid, as required by this act," &c.

Mr. KELLEY. The gentleman will observe that the language is "shall use either of these metals."

Mr. MORRILL. Yes; but go on; "except it shall first have been stamped as aforesaid."

Mr. KELLEY. Yes.

Mr. MORRILL. That refers back to the tax paid by the assayer "who shall stamp the product of the assay as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe by general regulations."

Mr. KELLEY. All I ask is that the phraseology shall be so guarded as not to be susceptible of this construction.

Mr. MORRILL. Unless you allow the provision to stand as it is, of course these bars unstamped might be used to any extent.

Mr. BIDWELL. This clause provides that "no person or corporation shall take, transport, or cause to be transported, export or cause to be exported from the United States, any gold or silver in its natural state, uncoined or unassayed, and unstamped, as aforesaid," &c. I would ask the gentleman if that would not apply to the persons who take the gold or silver out of the mine and take it to market.

Mr. MORRILL. That provision refers merely to exportations from the United States. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken on Mr. DAVIS's amendment, and it was disagreed to.

Mr. KELLEY. I move to insert after line twenty-one hundred and ninety the following:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall apply to the reworking of old gold or silver not in lump, ingot, or bar as aforesaid.

Mr. MORRILL. Although I consider it a matter of infinitesimal consequence, I do not object to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. In lines twenty-one hundred and eighty-five and twenty-one hundred and eighty-six I move to strike out the words "transport or cause to be transported."

Mr. MORRILL. I have no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. In lines twenty-one hundred and eighty-seven and twenty-one hundred and eighty-eight I move to strike out the words "uncoined or unassayed or unstamped" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "not coined nor assayed nor stamped."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk then read as follows:

On snuff, manufactured of tobacco or any substitute for tobacco, ground, dry, or damp, pickled, scented, or otherwise, of all descriptions, when prepared for use or sale, a tax of forty cents per pound.

Mr. PRICE. I move to amend that clause by striking out "forty" and inserting "fifty" in lieu thereof, so as to make the tax fifty cents per pound. I offer that amendment for the reason that it has been suggested to me that this dampening or pickling is done with the cheap wines that we talked about yesterday; and if that be the case, then it may very readily pay a tax of fifty cents per pound. I know nothing of the quality of the tobacco out of which snuff is manufactured. But if it be dampened or pickled by the manufactured wines, about which we heard so much yesterday, then I propose to put this additional tax upon it. And as an additional reason for my amendment I ask the Clerk to read the extract which I send to his desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

"DRUNKENNESS AND DEBAUCHERY IN FRANCE.—We have been accustomed to think that, through the cheapness of light wine, the mechanics and agriculturists of France were free from the coarser and lower forms of drunkenness. But poor brandies are cheaper than poor wines; and such is the degradation of much of the French rural and manufacturing population that they resort to the former for exhilaration and forgetfulness. Here is a sad picture of debasement and debauchery, terribly suggestive of the effects of ignorance and poverty in dwarfing the race and belittling nations:

"Even in France there are towns where women rival men in the habits of intoxication. At Lille, at Rouen, there are some so saturated with it that their infants refuse to take the breast of a sober woman. In the mountains of the Vosges, infants drink caude-vie. On Sunday, in the churches, the air is literally infected with the smell of caude-vie made from potatoes. In those mountains there are no more frequent causes of idiocy and imbecility, for in general the dwellings are healthy and the water is excellent. The great misfortune is that the children of habitual drunkards are idiots, so that the punishment follows from generation to generation, from the guilty and degraded father to the innocent children. In the manufacturing towns the mayors are obliged to take measures against the cabarets that supply caude-vie to children, for there are drunkards of fifteen as there are laborers of eight; and morally and physically they present a melancholy spectacle. No one can believe, no one will venture to say, that the wretched people who haunt the public houses to ruin and to poison themselves have any excuse for so doing."

During the reading of the paragraph, Mr. ANCONA said: I rise to a point of order, that the extract now being read is not pertinent to the amendment now pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The Clerk will proceed with the reading.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the paragraph as above.

Mr. PRICE. That is a picture of the country where they have cheap wines.

Mr. HIGBY. What kind of wine do they make from potatoes? [Laughter.]

Mr. PRICE. I was referring to the cheap-wine country.

Mr. KELLEY. I do not know what is the authority for the extract which has just been read; but I do know that it is very unreliable. I do not believe that my friend from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] ever wrote it; I do not think he would commit himself so far. Let him turn to Kay's work upon the laboring classes of Europe, and he will find there the most elaborate contradiction of the cardinal points of the statement that has just been read, and the most ample verification of my theory on yesterday, that where the cheap wine prevails there is an almost entire absence of intemperance, inebriety, and all those excesses that mark the life of the British laboring population and which too often mark the life of our American laboring population.

Mr. STEVENS. I would ask my colleague [Mr. KELLEY] what effect it has upon snuff. [Laughter.]

Mr. KELLEY. I am not responsible for introducing the subject in this connection.

Mr. STEVENS. I only want to know.

Mr. KELLEY. I have heard somewhere that there is an affinity between the use of tobacco and the use of strong drinks. But I do not know that there is any affinity between the use of tobacco and the use of sour wines.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEVENS] suggests there is not a very obvious connection between this debate on wine and the section before the House, which relates wholly to snuff.

The late Dr. Hitchcock, of Amherst College, in his little book entitled "A Zoological Temperance Convention," makes one of his animals say that wine and tobacco are intimately connected philologically. Bacchus was god of wine; and when you pass to the third case in the declension of his Grecian name you reach the weed under discussion, namely "Ho Bacchos," "Tou Bacchou," "To Baccho"—Anglicè tobacco.

Mr. KELLEY. If I wanted to establish the charge of aristocracy against any portion of my countrymen, I could not do it more thoroughly in the minds of the aristocratic classes of Europe than by arranging our taxes and so controlling our imports as to keep from the poor these wines, the use of which is so promotive of temperance and health, and confine the use of them to the wealthy classes.

Mr. PRICE. I move to amend my amendment so as to make it forty-five cents instead of fifty cents. I do this for the purpose of saying to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] that he probably would believe Horace Greeley upon this subject quite as much as he would the author he has referred to as authority. And I am authorized to say, and no gentleman who understands the question will dispute it, that Horace Greeley indorses the statement the Clerk has read from the desk in reference to the prevalence of drunkenness in countries where cheap wines abound. It is the almost universal testimony of those who have investigated this matter that the use of cheap wines in any country is productive of anything else than temperance and morality. And that is the issue I have made with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY.]

Mr. HALE. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. PRICE. I cannot yield. I am attending to the gentleman from Pennsylvania now.

Mr. HALE. I rise to a question of order: that this debate is not relevant to the paragraph under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. PRICE. I thought the Chair had overruled that point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order which the Chair overruled was raised by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. ANCONA.] [Laughter.]

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the committee rise, that we may terminate debate on this paragraph.

Mr. HENDERSON. I should like to have an opportunity to say a few words.

Mr. MORRILL. I merely desire to say that yesterday we progressed to the extent of only four pages of the bill. To-day we have not made that much progress. I trust that the committee will sustain me in the effort to cut off debate when a reasonable length of time has been allowed so that the facts can be understood. I believe that the committee do not require argument so much as facts.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DAWES reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the special order, being bill of the House No. 513, to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof, and had come to no resolution thereon.

CLOSE OF DEBATE.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that all debate in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the pending paragraph of the special order terminate in three minutes after the committee shall resume the consideration of the subject. This will give the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HENDERSON] an opportunity to submit a few remarks.

The motion was agreed to.

TAX BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

So the rules were suspended; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. DAWES in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being a bill of the House (No. 513) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government, to pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of a high rate of taxation upon the articles of tobacco, cigars, and snuff. I think that tobacco and the articles made from it are now altogether too cheap and too easily obtained by those who use them. I regard the use of these articles as one of the nuisances that curse the country, and I believe that they ought to be taxed as highly as possible. If the tax received should not increase the revenue, I hope it will decrease the use of tobacco. I regard the use of this article as a barbarous practice; and in confirmation of this idea I refer to the trade-signs which I see on Pennsylvania avenue. At the door of every tobacco store I see the figure of a half-naked savage or a crazy negro, or a monster representing, I suppose, a heathen god or some other imaginary being, holding out tobacco, cigars, and snuffs; as much as to say, "If you want to be a heathen, a savage, or a monster, use tobacco."

And I see that the practice is prevailing to an alarming extent, so much so that even little boys are using tobacco. I see little negro boys, not more than four feet high, walking the streets with cigars in their mouths, costing perhaps twenty-five cents.

Mr. GARFIELD. Is not that a "civil right?" [Laughter.]

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On cavendish, plug, twist, and all other kinds of manufactured tobacco, not herein otherwise provided for, a tax of forty cents per pound.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

On tobacco twisted by hand, or reduced from leaf into a condition to be consumed without the use of any machine or instrument, and without being pressed, sweetened, or otherwise prepared, a tax of thirty cents per pound.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. I move to amend by striking out in line twenty-two hundred and one the word "thirty," and inserting in lieu thereof the word "ten," so as to provide for a tax of ten cents per pound.

Mr. Chairman, a tax of forty cents per pound on manufactured tobacco is perhaps about reasonable; but tobacco put up in twists merely is not worth one fourth or one fifth of the value of the manufactured article. Manufactured tobacco sells for four or five times as much as tobacco which is merely twisted. Hence the tax proposed in this paragraph is altogether unreasonable.

In the West tobacco is prepared in this way, simply twisted up by hand, without any machinery, and without any expenditure of capital whatever. It is furnished in this shape by those who raise it, most generally negroes, who raise perhaps one or two hundred pounds, and sell it prepared in this rough way at the country stores.

Well, now, this tobacco will not sell in market for more than twenty cents per pound. Twenty-five cents per pound is a high price. Yet here is a tax of thirty cents, while on manufactured tobacco worth five times as much the tax is only forty cents. The result will be to break this up and men will buy the tobacco and twist it themselves. Any man can twist up as much in two hours' time as will last him for a year. It will therefore cut off entirely this source of revenue. Men cannot afford to pay this tax. It is wholly confined to those who raise small quantities. You will find the tobacco in small quantities in the little stores. There is no expensive machinery about it. It is altogether unreasonable this tax should be imposed. I therefore move that it shall be reduced to ten cents.

Mr. MORRILL. This was originally inserted into the law both for the protection of the revenue and the regular manufacturer of tobacco. We found in Kentucky that large quantities of this tobacco were twisted up, put into paper, and labeled, "This tobacco has paid no tax." It was to protect the Government and the honest manufacturers, and it is still found to be necessary.

Mr. HARDING, of Kentucky. I withdraw my amendment and move to reduce the tax to fifteen cents.

Mr. Chairman, the tax moved by the committee in their bill will defeat the very object which the gentleman from Vermont declares they had in view. You cannot prevent the men who wish to avail themselves of the privilege of twisting this tobacco. Why, sir, you can go to a tobacco-raiser and buy fifty pounds, twist it up, and lay it away. The whole object of twisting it is to preserve it so that it will not crumble. You cannot force people to buy manufactured tobacco by this extremely high tax. If you allow the tax to remain at a reasonable figure such as I propose, this will go on as it has done heretofore. If, on the contrary, the bill is allowed to remain as it is the Government will collect no revenue at all. This operates upon the poor class of people, and not upon the large planters, who of course send their tobacco to the regular market in hogsheads. I withdraw the amendment I have just offered, and renew my previous amendment that the tax shall be reduced to ten cents.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 26, noes 67.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

On fine-cut chewing-tobacco, whether manufactured with stems in or not, or however sold, whether loose, in bulk, or in rolls, packages, papers, wrappers, or boxes, a tax of forty cents per pound.

No amendment being offered,

The Clerk read as follows:

On smoking-tobacco of all kinds, including that made of stems, or in part of stems, and imitations thereof, a tax of twenty cents per pound.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to insert in line twenty-two hundred and six after the word "kinds" these words: "not sweetened, nor stemmed, nor butted."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to insert after line twenty-two hundred and five the following:

On smoking-tobacco sweetened, stemmed, or butted, a tax of forty cents per pound.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCHENCK. I move to strike out "twenty" in line twenty-two hundred and eight and insert "ten." I propose to follow up this amendment, which relates to cheap, ordinary fine-cut smoking-tobacco, with an amendment which shall also make it possible to manufacture cheap cigars.

The present amendment, confining itself exclusively to fine-cut smoking-tobacco, I will in a word explain. So far as tobacco is concerned, while it related to that which is used for chewing, I made no proposition because it does not affect any interest I represent, but so far as smoking-tobacco is concerned, either fine-cut or used in the manufacture of cigars, it does largely affect a great industrial pursuit in my State and in the West, and affects it, even with the amendments to the existing law proposed in this bill, to a ruinous extent. Fine-cut smoking-tobacco is largely manufactured from the tobacco leaf raised in the western States. This tobacco leaf is a different article from the southern tobacco. Southern tobacco has a glutinous or gummy character which enables you to manufacture from it plug, cavendish, and the various forms of chewing-tobacco. But that same tobacco seed sown in our north-western States produces an article which is not capable of being manufactured at all into chewing-tobacco. It is dry, and is used only for the purpose of smoking.

I spoke of fine-cut. I mean smoking-tobacco. This smoking-tobacco, made out of leaf raised in Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Pennsylvania, and in all the Northwest, burdened by this tax which is now proposed of forty cents, cannot be produced or used at all, and the proposed tax will therefore defeat the object sought of affording a revenue to the Government.

Let me tell you how it operates. This same smoking-tobacco, as manufactured before the Government tax was levied upon it, was made somewhat in this way and at this cost: mixing the leaf and the stem in the proportion used, it was worth two and a half cents a pound. Making this half leaf and half stem by the process of cutting and drying and putting it into a condition fit for smoking-tobacco cost an average of five cents a pound, making a total of seven and a half cents. Now, if you put upon that a tax of twenty cents, as proposed by this bill, you will make the entire cost twenty-seven and a half cents per pound, or more than three times the original cost of labor and stock to the producer. If you bring the tax down to ten cents it will still amount to about seventeen and a half cents, tax included, and the Government will get its full share, and more than its full share, at the lowest price for which the article can possibly be sold.

The effect of the adoption of the provision in the bill as it stands will be to destroy the manufacture of smoking-tobacco out of our common leaf at the West. This leaf can be bought anywhere at ten cents a pound; but in what condition is it bought? It is not cut for the purpose of smoking. It is not manufactured in any way. Step into any little grocery store in the West and ask for smoking-tobacco and the keeper produces a roll of ordinary leaf twisted up, weighs it out and hands it over the counter at ten cents a pound. It is carried away by the purchaser and cut at his own house with a common knife or rubbed to pieces and smoked, and no revenue whatever is derived from it. The effect, therefore, of the existing law, or of any law which charges more than something like ten cents a pound upon this product, will inevitably prevent any revenue, and at the same time deprive the people of the advantage of the use of it in this country.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MORRILL. I have no question but what it is the purpose of the House to leave the law so that we shall obtain a large revenue from this source, but I very much doubt whether when we get through with this bill the law will be such as to accomplish that object. As it now stands the law is more effective than we have ever had. We are receiving a larger amount of revenue than we have ever before received from this source. The present law in relation to this particular article perhaps is somewhat oppressive in this: that the manufacturers are not able to dispose of their stems, and these to a large amount are now on hand. And in order to accommodate the trade and not to be oppressive in any quarter, the committee have, after hearing gentlemen from all parts of the country, West as well as North and South, come to the conclusion that it would be better to fix the tax so as to embrace smoking-tobacco in one description, so as to include stems or not, as the parties might choose, and let the price regulate that matter. As the law now stands the tax on smoking-tobacco of all kinds and imitations thereof, not otherwise provided for, is thirty-five cents per pound. On smoking-tobacco made exclusively of stems it is fifteen cents a pound. The committee came to the conclusion, after a long and patient investigation, that to impose one rate was better for all interests and perhaps might give the Government an equal amount of revenue. They therefore agreed upon the rate of twenty cents per pound instead of thirty-five, only five cents more than it now is on smoking-tobacco made exclusively of stems, and fifteen cents less than under any other provision in the law as it now stands. We believe that that will be satisfactory. Certainly, if we expect to derive any considerable amount of revenue, it ought not to be reduced below that.

The amount of revenue received from all kinds of tobacco in the three quarters of the present fiscal year is almost nine million dollars. The amount received for the whole of the year 1865 was only $8,000,000, and in 1864 $7,000,000, showing that the law as it now stands is better at any rate than any laws heretofore enacted. I trust the committee will reach the conclusion that we ought not to change this provision as reported by the Committee of Ways and Means.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee rose informally for the purpose of receiving a message from the Senate, by Mr. FORNEY, its Secretary, informing the House that the Senate had passed House bill No. 85, for the disposal of the public lands for homestead actual settlement in the States of Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Florida, with an amendment, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

Also, that the Senate had passed, without amendment, House bill No. 193, for the relief of Mrs. William L. Herndon.

TAX BILL—AGAIN.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio. I move to amend the amendment by inserting "five cents."

The bill under consideration is designed to amend the internal revenue laws of the United States in many respects, and especially to furnish relief to the great mechanical and industrial interests of the country, many of them now heavily taxed. The able chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means [Mr. MORRILL] has furnished us an exhibit and an estimate of the workings of the entire revenue system, as follows:

Treasury receipts for fiscal year ending June 30, 1865.
 Customs..... $84,928,000
 Internal revenue..... 209,464,000
 Miscellaneous..... 35,175,126

Total receipts, exclusive of loans..... $329,567,126

Estimated Treasury receipts for fiscal year ending June 30, 1866.

Custom receipts to April 1, 1866, (actual)..... $128,967,375
 (coin)..... 243,890,548
 Internal revenue to April 1, 1866, (actual)..... 243,890,548
 Miscellaneous (actual) premium on gold, &c..... 37,183,300

Actual aggregate receipts to April 1..... 410,041,232
 Estimated custom receipts, April 1 to June 30..... 30,000,000
 Estimated internal revenue, April 1 to June 30..... 60,000,000
 Estimated miscellaneous, April 1 to June 30..... 1,500,000

Total aggregate receipts from all sources for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1866..... $501,541,232

Estimate of receipts for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867.

Customs..... $125,000,000
 Internal revenue..... 250,000,000
 Increase on cotton..... 15,000,000
 Increase on spirits..... 15,000,000
 Miscellaneous..... 10,000,000

Requirements of the Secretary of the Treasury..... 425,000,000
 Treasury..... 350,000,000

Available for reduction of taxation... $75,000,000

The internal revenue for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867, if the present revenue laws should continue in force, with the proposed increase on cotton, is estimated at $260,000,000. The bill now under consideration is designed to reduce this $75,000,000, and to that extent relieve mechanical industry, employments, and labor from the burdens which now to some extent oppress them.

A few illustrations will show this. By the law as it now stands a tax is levied as follows:

"On ready-made clothing, boots and shoes, gloves, mittens, and moccasins, caps, hats, and bonnets, or other articles of dress not otherwise assessed and taxed as such, for the wear of men, women, or children, six per cent. ad valorem: Provided, That any tailor, boot or shoe maker, hat, cap, or bonnet maker, milliner, or dress-maker, exclusively engaged in manufacturing any of the foregoing articles to order as custom work and not for sale generally, who shall make affidavit to the assessor or assistant assessor, that the entire amount of such manufactures so made does not exceed the sum of $1,000 per annum, shall be exempt from duty."

The bill now under consideration changes all this and reduces the tax as follows:

On boots and shoes, two per cent. ad valorem; to be paid by every person making, manufacturing, or producing for sale boots and shoes, or furnishing the materials or any part thereof, or employing others to make, manufacture, or produce them: Provided, That any boot or shoe maker making boots or shoes to order as custom work only, and not for general sale, and whose work does not exceed annually in value $1,000, shall be exempt from this tax.

On ready-made clothing, and on gloves, mittens, moccasins, caps, and other articles of dress for the wear of men, women, and children, not otherwise assessed and taxed, one per cent. ad valorem: to be paid by every person making, manufacturing, or producing for sale clothing, gloves, mittens, moccasins, caps, and other articles of dress, or furnishing the materials or any part thereof, or employing others to make, manufacture, or produce them: Provided, That any tailor, or any maker of gloves, mittens, moccasins, caps, and other articles of dress to order as custom work only, and not for general sale, and whose work does not exceed annually in value $1,000, shall be exempt from this tax: and articles of dress made or trimmed by milliners or dress-makers for the wear of women and children shall also be exempt from this tax.

Then by this bill there is a large list of articles entirely exempt from taxation. This exemption will give great satisfaction to the people and encouragement to productive industry. Among these are plows, cultivators, harrows, straw and hay cutters, planters, seed-drills, horse-rakes, winnowing-mills, and many others, generally articles of necessity or the products of mechanical industry. These articles, heretofore taxed, but now exempt, with the other reductions in taxes made by the bill, would have produced $75,000,000 annually, if the present law had continued in force. But I cannot now enumerate the changes in detail.

While I am free to concede the great improvement which this bill will introduce in our revenue system, I desire to point out briefly some changes in the bill which it seems to me should be made.

The law now in force levies a tax—

"On all cigars, cheroots, and cigarettes, made wholly of tobacco, or of any substitutes therefor, ten dollars per thousand cigars.

On smoking-tobacco of all kinds, and imitations thereof, not otherwise herein provided for, thirty-five cents per pound.

"On smoking-tobacco made exclusively of stems, and so sold, fifteen cents per pound."

There are other provisions affecting imported, New England, and southern tobacco, but as they do not materially affect western tobacco, I do not propose to allude to them now. The bill now before us changes the present law as follows:

On smoking-tobacco of all kinds, including that made of stems or in part of stems, and imitations thereof, a tax of twenty cents per pound.

On cigarettes, or small cigars, made of tobacco, inclosed in a wrapper, or binder, and not over three and a half inches in length, the market value of which (tax included) is not over six dollars per thousand, a tax of two dollars per thousand; when the market value is over six dollars and not over ten dollars per thousand, (tax included,) and on cheroots, and cigars known as short-sixes, and on any cigars made with or without pasted or twisted heads, the market value of which (tax included) is not over ten dollars per thousand, a tax of four dollars per thousand.

On all other cigars, cheroots, and cigarettes, made wholly of tobacco, or of any substitute therefor, a tax of ten dollars per thousand.

My colleague [Mr. SCHENCK] proposes to amend this by levying ten only instead of twenty cents per pound on smoking-tobacco and imitations thereof, and by striking out the provisions as to cigarettes and cigars, and by inserting in lieu thereof a provision as follows:

On cigarettes or small cigars made of tobacco, inclosed in a wrapper or binder and not over three and a half inches in length, and on cigars made with twisted heads, the market value of which, exclusive of the tax, is not over six dollars per thousand, a tax of two dollars per thousand.

On cheroots and cigars known as short sixes, and cigars made with pasted heads, the market value of which, tax included, is not over twelve dollars per thousand, and on all cigarettes and cigars, the market value of which, exclusive of the tax, is over six dollars and not over twelve dollars per thousand, a tax of four dollars per thousand.

On all cigarettes, cheroots, and cigars, the market value of which, exclusive of the tax, is over twelve dollars and not over twenty dollars per thousand, a tax of ten dollars per thousand.

On all cigarettes, cheroots, and cigars, the market value of which, exclusive of the tax, is over twenty dollars and not over forty dollars per thousand, a tax of twenty dollars per thousand.

On all cigarettes, cigars, and cheroots, the market value of which, exclusive of the tax, is over forty dollars per thousand, a tax of forty dollars per thousand.

The tobacco raised in Ohio and other western States generally known as "seed-leaf" is used mainly for smoking-tobacco (cut and dry) and common cigars. It is not employed in the manufacture of chewing-tobacco or fine cigars, which are made from the more expensive Havana and Connecticut tobacco. The present law was not only oppressive but ruinous and destructive to the growth and manufacture of western tobacco. The reason of this is presented in a preamble and resolution of the General Assembly of Ohio, adopted February 13, 1866, as follows:

"Whereas by enactment of the Congress of the last session, the excise upon cigars is levied at the uniform rate of ten dollars per thousand; and whereas this rule compels Ohio seed-leaf—worth in the market ten cents per pound—to pay a tax of four hundred and fifty per cent. ad valorem, while Connecticut tobacco—the market price of which is twenty cents per pound—pays only two hundred and twenty-five per cent., and imported Havana tobacco—rated at $1 50 per pound—pays only thirty-three per cent.; and whereas this discrimination against the product of Ohio and other western States has cut off the demand for and if continued is likely to put a stop to the growing of tobacco in these States; and whereas this rule levies the heaviest per cent. of taxation on that kind of tobacco mainly used by the class least able to pay, and touches but lightly the high-priced luxury of the richer class: Therefore,

"Be it resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio, That the present rule of assessing the internal revenue on cigars is unequal, unjust, and oppressive to the agricultural interest of this State; and that our Senators and Representatives in Congress be, and hereby are, earnestly requested to use their influence to secure such a change in the law as shall levy a tax ad valorem, or such other modification as in their judgment will remove the objection herein urged against the present law."

The result of the law has been that as it requires nearly the same labor to make a thousand cigars from tobacco of high or low price, while the tax is the same on all alike, the latter or western tobacco is effectually driven out of the market.

This is by no means an insignificant branch of industry. The report of the commissioner of statistics of Ohio for the year 1864 shows a product of tobacco as follows:

There are a number of other counties that produce large amounts.

One of the most intelligent men of my district, who fully understands this subject, writes me:

"Your own district loses money to the amount of $200,000 this year by this single enactment, while Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Michigan, all States that grow low-priced tobacco lose millions of dollars. Give us an ad valorem tax on cigars, and immediately the low-priced tobacco of the West (now excluded by the product of New England and the South, which have had a common interest) will come into market. Now it is rotting in our fields and tobacco-houses.

"More than this, the Government, by this change, will get more revenue, because the amount of cigars consumed will be much greater. Now low-priced cigars, always used in the greatest number, are almost excluded, but under an ad valorem tax they will again be freely manufactured and largely consumed."

One effect of the law has been that large amounts of western tobacco have been used for smoking in the leaf unmanufactured. In this form it has been sold and extensively consumed, thus affording no revenue to the Government. An ad valorem tax properly adjusted would permit the manufacture into cut-and-dry smoking-tobacco, and thus a large revenue would be derived. The Tobacco Cutters' Association, of Michigan, in their memorial to Congress say:

"From facts ascertained, we find that farmers and others have been (owing to the high price of smoking caused in consequence of the high rate of tax) largely engaged in growing and preparing tobacco for their own use, thereby lessening the amount of revenue the Government would otherwise derive from that source, besides tending, in a great degree to injure the business of the manufacturers."

And the effect of the law has been well described by the memorial of an Ohio Tobacco Growers' Association, as follows:

"In addition to this unhappy feature in the present law, an equally injurious change was made in making the tax on smoking, cut of stems fifteen cents, while on all other kinds thirty-five cents was placed. By this unfortunate stroke, all smoking cut out of anything else than stems, was effectually prohibited, and all home demand for lugs and common Ohio seed out of which the article had been cut before, was killed; and cutters, that before run from one to three machines, and used from one to three hogheads of lugs per day in smoking, have not run a machine or cut a hoghead since, and are now accumulating much capital of unavailable 'shorts' that necessarily grow out of the making of chewing-cut. By these changes in the previous law, seed leaf declined from eighteen and twenty cents to six and eight, and lugs from eleven and thirteen to six and seven, entailing losses on the districts producing these styles and grades of several million dollars. Home demand being thus cut off, our growers of the styles named were bound hand and foot, and turned over to the tender mercies of Europe for a market.

"As a set-off to this picture of depression, we merely mention that, by the same change, that tax on Connecticut and Havana cigars was reduced at fifteen dollars, and Connecticut seed leaf went up from eighteen and twenty-two to thirty and thirty-five."

The present bill is a great improvement on the law as it now stands; but if the tax of twenty cents per pound on smoking-tobacco is levied, it will with the cost of the raw material and of manufacturing so enhance the price to the consumer that the leaf in its unmanufactured state will be largely consumed by many, and it will so approximate the price of cigars that smoking-tobacco will be comparatively driven out of the market. For the interests of the revenue and of the producer, the manufacturer and the consumer, I will urge the first amendment proposed by my colleague, [Mr. SCHENCK.]

I am aware that a reduction from thirty-five cents, the rate now fixed by law, to twenty cents, as proposed by the bill, is an improvement, but the rate proposed by my colleague of ten cents per pound is decidedly preferable. This is absolutely necessary if we would permit the use of western tobacco in the manufactured state, cut and dry for smoking.

But the present law, so far as it relates to common cigars, is equally destructive to the production of western tobacco. Under the present law the tax per cent., as paid by three distinct kinds of tobaccos, is as follows, allowing twenty pounds of tobacco for one thousand cigars: twenty pounds Havana, at $1 55, equals thirty-one dollars, which, at ten dollars tax, is equal to thirty-three per cent.; twenty pounds Connecticut, at twenty-two and a half cents, equals $4 50, which, at ten dollars tax, is equal to two hundred and twenty per cent.; twenty pounds New York, Pennsylvania, and Ohio, at eleven cents, equals $2 20, which, at ten dollars tax, is equal to four hundred and fifty per cent.

I object to the present law so far as it relates to western tobacco, because—

1. It is unjust in principle. Western tobacco is worth from six to eleven cents per pound, while Connecticut is worth twenty-two. To require the same tax on all alike is a discrimination against the low-priced article.

2. It has operated practically to destroy the product of western tobacco.

The Ohio association, before referred to, in their memorial say:

"The particular depression for which we think the law clearly responsible relates to Ohio seed leaf and Kentucky lugs. By making the tax on all grades of cigars ten dollars, cigars made of Ohio seed leaf, which were dear before at thirteen dollars, had seven dollars additional tax put on them, and with it a complete extinguisher on their sales. And as the manufacture of these cigars furnished demand for the bulk of the Ohio seed used in the United States, with the destruction of this trade almost all demand for Ohio ceased, and not one case of Ohio seed has been used since, where before a hundred found consumption; and prices of the article went down accordingly."

"The inequality and injustice of this tax is readily seen, and were it not for the fact that all sales of Ohio seed, for home consumption, had entirely ceased, perhaps our people, with their boundless resources, might still rest satisfied, making a virtue of necessity, change their farm products, let their tobacco houses go to destruction."

3. The destruction of the western product diminishes the national revenue from tobacco.

It will be seen the bill of the Committee of Ways and Means proposes to remedy the injustice of the present law by levying a tax of four dollars per thousand on all cigars the market value of which, tax included, is not over ten dollars per thousand, and on all other cigars a tax of ten dollars per thousand. Only two grades of tax are proposed.

Now, let us inquire what will be the effect of this. Cigars made of Connecticut tobacco will cost less than ten dollars per thousand and will pay a tax of four dollars per thousand. Cigars made of Ohio and other western tobacco will cost less than ten dollars per thousand and they will pay a tax of four dollars per thousand. Western tobacco worth from seven to ten cents per pound will pay as much tax as Connecticut worth twenty-two. The tax will fall on the producer mainly, for it will require nearly the same labor to manufacture common cigars of western tobacco as the finer cigars of Connecticut tobacco. This unequal tax will enable eastern manufacturers to sell the finer cigars so nearly the price of those made of western tobacco that common cigars of western tobacco will be driven from the market, or produced only to be consumed unmanufactured, or cut and dry, or exported at ruinous rates. Will any gentleman tell me why this discrimination should be made against western or low-priced tobacco? Or why should common cigars pay as much tax as the fancy "cigarettes" or the cigars "inclosed in a wrapper or binder?" The amendment proposed by my colleague will remedy all this inequality. It proposes to adopt the rule of equality by classifying cigars and thus approximating an ad valorem tax. It will tax common cigars two dollars per thousand; a finer article four dollars per thousand. Still finer classes respectively ten, twenty, and forty dollars per thousand; these last classes being generally manufactured by Havana fillers and Connecticut wrappers. The general scope of the amendment is to protect the home article and to give the western product a living chance along with the eastern.

There are some other particulars in which I hope the bill reported by the committee will be changed, though I cannot advert to them all now. It proposes to tax manufactures of flax, hemp, jute, and silk five per cent. ad valorem. The manufactures of flax, jute, and hemp are in their infancy and cannot bear tax at all. A tax is equivalent to their destruction. The production of flax and hemp is one of the agricultural interests of the West which should not be destroyed by taxation, but rather encouraged. Silk is a luxury and can bear a tax higher than ordinary articles which enter into daily consumption. By this bill diamonds, emeralds, precious stones, and jewelry are only taxed five per cent., while thread, candles, leather, screws, and many other articles are taxed an equal rate. This, in my judgment, is wrong. Let diamonds, jewelry, and all articles of unnecessary ornament or luxury bear at least double the tax if not still more, as I would make it, than that imposed on articles of ordinary consumption or necessity.

By the present law the tax on incomes over $600 and under $5,000 is five per cent., and on incomes over $5,000 the tax is greater. The bill now before us levies one uniform rate on all incomes over $1,000. I have two objections to this. I would tax incomes over $5,000 greater than those of a less sum. The discrimination is founded on the greater capacity of the wealthy to pay and not on any hostility to capital. The amount of income exempt from tax should not be fixed at a uniform sum but should depend on the number and age of children each head of a family might have to support. The exemption is designed for the support of families, and the amount of it should be made to depend on the number of the family. A man like John Rogers, with "nine small children and one at the breast," needs and should have a greater sum exempt than one who has rendered the country no such service and has no equal need for income exempt.

There are some axioms of political economy which should not be overlooked. Taxation should mainly be levied upon wealth realized in the form of property or incomes rather than upon the sources of productive wealth, the means by which wealth is created. Hence it has always been regarded unwise to cast onerous burdens on useful labor or industry in any form, upon the mechanic, the producer, the artisan, and the laborer. A tax upon the implements or products of useful labor discourages industry and impairs the production of wealth. The necessities of a nation may be such as to require a resort to taxes of this description to a limited extent, but when this may be so they should be levied with great discrimination.

There is a class of products which may, under these or other circumstances, be properly taxed, and sometimes heavily taxed. Mere articles of expensive luxury or indulgence, from which England derives the larger part of her revenue, may be appropriate subjects of taxation. This bill has kept these principles in view, and though by no means perfect, it is a great improvement upon the law as it stands, and with the modifications which time and experience may suggest, will contribute much to wipe out an immense national debt entailed upon us by treason, rebellion, and traitors, their aiders and abettors. As the people annually make their contributions of national taxes let them remember that traitors and their allies rendered them necessary, and let them at the polls see to it that they shall no more be intrusted with political power.

I withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

The question being taken on the amendment offered by Mr. SCHENCK to strike out "twenty cents" on smoking-tobacco and insert "ten cents," no quorum voted.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Messrs. SCHENCK and ANCONA.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 48, noes 46.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MYERS. I offer an amendment to come in after all these paragraphs.

The CHAIRMAN. There is but one paragraph under consideration at this time.

Mr. MYERS. Then I offer it to that. I move to strike out the paragraph and to insert in lieu thereof what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

That on and after the 1st day of July, 1866, in lieu of the duties on manufactured tobacco and cigars now imposed by the several acts to provide internal revenue to support the Government, there shall be paid by the producer, owner, or holder, upon all tobacco produced within the United States and upon which no tax has been levied or collected, a tax of twenty cents per pound upon the said tobacco in the leaf or unmanufactured; and such tax shall remain a lien thereon and be levied and collected as provided for in this act in the case of cotton; that all tobacco of domestic growth shall be bonded in Government warehouses, and shall be weighed and marked, and on permits given, as in the case of cotton, may be removed from the district in which it has been produced to any other district without prepayment of the tax due thereon upon the execution of bonds or giving security, as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That there shall be an allowance or drawback on all tobacco equal in amount to the duty paid thereon, and no more, when exported; no drawback, however, to be allowed for such duties if less than ten dollars.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. Chairman, in the last Congress I stood almost alone in the advocacy of a tax such as I have proposed by this amendment. In the present Congress upon my motion a resolution was adopted instructing the Committee of Ways and Means to report upon the expediency of such a tax. Now, sir, I have scarcely a hope that such an amendment will pass this House with the committee against it, but I think it due to the manufacturers of tobacco in the United States, who have held conventions in all our great cities and unanimously asked that this tax may be made specific and uniform in order to protect the Government and themselves against fraud, that their proposition shall not be passed by in silence.

Mr. HOOPER, of Massachusetts. I would inquire of the gentleman whether these were conventions of manufacturers or producers of tobacco.

Mr. MYERS. They were conventions of the manufacturers of tobacco. But it is no matter of whom the conventions were composed, if the tax they propose is just and if it will enable the Government to get as much revenue as by the proposition of the committee.

Now, who is there to complain of a tax of the kind I have suggested? Certainly the Government should not, for by this means the Government would receive the tax earlier than in the other way; and it would receive it more surely, because there are not half as many avenues for fraud at the first production of the article as there are afterward. When it is in the course of manufacture the tobacco goes into the hands of thousands of operators, who make it up in out-of-the-way places and defraud the Government. Besides, we shall get a larger share of revenue in this way. According to statistics the production of tobacco in this country in 1865 was one hundred and eighty-five million pounds. Deducting two thirds as the amount exported, the revenue from this source at twenty cents per pound would be $12,000,000, or $1,000,000 more than is received under the present mode of taxation. The revenue commission claim that the revenue hereafter by the present system from tobacco will be $18,000,000 annually; but that is a mere guess. I have only to say that if we can obtain such a sum by that system it must be upon a far greater number of pounds of tobacco than was raised last year. In the year 1860 there were produced in this country four hundred million pounds of tobacco, upon which, under the amendment I have proposed, there would be obtained a revenue of $28,000,000.
